WEAK MEETINGS.

It is much easier to describe a weak meeting than to tell how to make it strong; it is easier to diagnose a situation than to prescribe a remedy. We do not often indulge in the easy task of drawing dark pictures of churches or of particular meetings, for such work is wasted service unless something definite is done at the same time to reconstruct and edify. Calamity-howlers, who have one oft-repeated note of discouragement and of foreboding, are of little service either in the church or the state, since we always turn for help to men who have some positive counsel to give; and no man shall be counted a prophet who is merely a voice crying "woe."

But there are times when diagnosis is needed, for occasionally persons are very sick without knowing it, and meetings are sometimes weak without being conscious of the weakness. The trouble with one of the seven churches of Asia was that it believed itself rich and in need of nothing, when it was "wretched, and miserable, and poor, and blind, and naked," and it needed to be told so. There are churches to-day in precisely that condition. They merely "have a name that they live," while in reality the pulse is weak, the head is hysterical, the nerves are disordered, and the breathing asthmatic and labored.

The prayers which are heard in a meeting generally indicate pretty accurately its spiritual condition—not the number of them, but the quality and character of them. Two or three feeble, ineffectual prayers, offered as though God were asleep or, peradventure, gone on a journey—routine words with no living hunger for God throbbing in them—are sure symptoms of a low state. Nothing is deader than hollow praying, and a meeting which indulges in it will soon need a physician. But such praying creeps into the church, into the family circle, and even into the closet, and in every place it is a sign that the condition is not healthy. We are often told that the position of the body during prayer is a matter of little or no consequence, and in certain limits that is true. But it makes a vast difference what is the mental attitude of the congregation. If some are looking up songs in a hymn book, and somebody else is hunting through the Bible, and there is a general lack of concentration and unity of purpose in appearing before God, it is an indication that there is no very strong belief that He is really present, and it is an unfailing symptom of spiritual weakness. Probably few persons are aware to what an extent the real condition and "state" of a meeting affect one who is preaching, and so determine the character of the sermon. A genuine minister is as sensitive to the state of the congregation as a poet is to the changes of the seasons, and more than half the time when persons go home with an unfavorable comment upon some sermon of the day, the fault was with the meeting, and not with the minister. The attitude and state of the meeting, or of certain individuals in it, closed up the minister's fresh "opening," and "troubled" the flowing stream. There are audiences which unconsciously nip the tender buds and freeze up all the bubbings of life. There are again frivolous and trivial audiences which never seem able to settle down to a serious consideration of the truth. They will "play" with subjects, and be entertained with bright and spicy phrases, but they care little or nothing for treasures which lie deep, and must be painfully dug for. A new bonnet in a front seat, a stranger who comes in, a playful baby in its mother's arms, get more attention than the subject which the Lord has laid upon the messenger of His choice, and the words return void and fruitless. Or, again, there are congregations which give the impression that they have attained to all there is, and know already all that can be known, and they make a minister feel how useless it is to speak. Others may need rudiments and babe's milk truths; others may need the Gospel for sin and unto salvation; but as for them, they have gone through the whole list to "Omega," and want only nectar and ambrosial food. In the long run one can usually determine the state of a meeting by the type of ministry which prevails in it. If the meeting is trivial, its ministry will be so. If it is cold and stiff, its ministry will be formal and proper, but without warmth and vitality. If it is proud of its own high state, its ministry will be puffed up and swollen, or even pharasaical. These types are very different, but they are all off the line of health and out of the normal order. We have personally seen all the kinds which are here described, and they really exist; but they do not steadily grow and expand and feed, for they lack the genuine life and they are not rooted and grounded in Him who is life and truth. The new year is a favorable time to examine the spiritual assets and liabilities of the meetings to which we individuals belong.

A SERIOUS LEAKAGE.

WE reported last week a total net gain of over 1,300 in our membership during the past year, and if we do not pry beneath the surface the condition of the church seems one of healthy growth. Unfortunately, it seems to be our duty to pry a little beneath the surface, and in doing so we find symptoms of a condition not altogether indicative of health. We refer to a serious leakage of members—the loss of a large number of persons from our membership during the year through our inability to assimilate them into organic union with the body. The losses by death are beyond our control, and would go on no matter how high the spiritual state of the church might rise; but we are confronted each year with the sloughing off of members enough to make a good-sized Yearly Meeting by themselves, simply because they no longer feel an attractive power binding them to the church of their birth or their choice.

Our reports for the year show that by disownment, resignation, discontinuance of names, and by letter, we have lost over 2,200 members in our American meetings, and by far the largest proportion were lost by discontinuance of names from the roll of membership. The three Yearly Meetings which use this term—Indiana, Kansas and Wilmington—report a total loss of this character amounting to 517. Western loses 307 by "disownment and resignation," Iowa 232 by "disownment and release," Ohio 126 and New England 94 by "release," and North Carolina 194 by "subtraction." All the Yearly Meetings together report only 76 members in the column of disownments, though, as the reports indicate, that is not a complete total; yet disownments are rare compared to other ways of losing and dropping members.

There are two questions which we find at once rising to the lips: Why were these 2,200 members lost? And secondly, What has become of them? The usual answer to the first question is that loss is common to all the churches, and that until men become perfect beings some of them will gradually drift away from their ideals and from their "first love." But these answers hardly meet the case. This large leakage which we have reported indicates that many Monthly Meetings are not particular enough about the material which they try to build into the church. They build in "wood, hay and stubble," and their "work suffers loss" accordingly. There is too low a standard of what a church member should be, and too easy methods of admission are employed; so that not seldom a meeting receives many members who have no root, whose life is merely a surface life, and who can stand no serious test such as is sure to come sooner or later.

Then, again, it is to be feared that we do not always know how to foster and strengthen our immature and unripe members. They are honest and earnest, but they need a delicate touch, a constant spiritual illumination, a sympathetic teaching which will deepen their conviction and enable them to increase in life and truth. Without such nurture they fall a prey to some of the innumerable temptations which draw men away from their ideals, and from the things of the Spirit. Our meetings do not supply enough spiritual food for them, and their fellow Christians do not make effort enough to keep them firm in their faith and true to their Master. The worst of it is, we Christians do not concern ourselves about those who are struggling along with temptation, and living on the ragged edge between faith and doubt. We let them drift, and simply talk about them, and then when the proper time comes "subtract" them from membership. We need, therefore, higher standards for membership; we need to make our religious meetings more spiritual and full of power, and finally, we need, as members, to realize more clearly our individual responsibilities to our new members who are not yet grounded. Now, we may ask, what becomes of those whom we annually lose? Between 250 and 300 of them go to other religious denominations, and so still keep their membership in the Church of Christ. Over these we need shed no tears, for we assume that they feel some other church home more congenial to themselves than the one they leave, and therefore it is better for them to go. But what becomes of the remaining 1,900 or 2,000? It is a question which we cannot answer, but the picture which the imagination presents is an unpleasant one to look upon. It is exceedingly difficult to reach those who have once lost their connection with the church. To have tried and failed is urged as a sufficient excuse for not trying again, and the consciousness of having proved unfaithful and of being cast off, or of having willfully withdrawn from a Christian body, makes one feel like a disinherited son. We wish we might know how many of these lost members ever renew their faith and come again into relation with some branch of the church, but no earthly record of them is kept, and we can follow them no further. It is surely not pleasant to think that there are nearly 2,000 persons drifting about the world with no church connection, who one year ago bore the name of "Friends," and were supposed to be a part of Christ's visible body. Year after year death claims our faithful members, and they go from our ranks, where their counsel was valued, to join the "family in heaven." For these we do not mourn as those who have no hope, but it does wring our hearts to see the long list of those who have gone from our ranks to drift aimlessly about, disconnected from the goodly "fellowship of the saints," and the matter deserves most weighty attention.

Ring out a slowly dying cause,
And ancient forms of party strife;
Ring in the nobler modes of life,
With sweeter manners, purer laws.

Ring out the old shapes of foul disease;
Ring out the narrowing lust of gold;
Ring out the thousand wars of old,
Ring in the thousand years of peace.

Ring in the valiant man and free,
The larger heart, the kindlier hand;
Ring out the darkness of the land,
Ring in the Christ that is to be.

—Tennyson.

FOR THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

AN OUTLINE STUDY OF 1 CORINTHIANS.

BY ALBERT C. APPLGARTH.

What we call the first epistle, perhaps was not really the first. In a precious letter (1 Cor. 5 : 9) these people had been warned against their favorite sins. This epistle seems to have been lost. No doubt it had fulfilled its purpose, and God did not need it in the canon.

I. Author : Paul, aged about 55.

II. Time : At the close of the apostle's long sojourn in Ephesus, in spring of A. D. 57 or 58. Nero was Emperor of Rome.

III. Place from which the epistle was written : Probably from Ephesus (1 Cor. 16 : 18) or Thessalonica. The postscript is incorrect which gives Philippi. Like the postscripts to the other epistles, this one has no authority.

IV. For whom written : To the church at Corinth. It had been founded some five years before by Paul (Acts 18 : 1-18). This church had a large membership. It was composed chiefly of Gentiles, although there was a sprinkling of Jews. The members seem to have been poor, with the possible exception, of Crispus, Erastus and Gaius.

Corinth was situated on the Peloponnesean isthmus, between the Ionian and Ægean seas. As Paul saw Corinth, it was a new city. Old Corinth had been destroyed about 146 B. C. It remained in ruins nearly or quite a hundred years. It was then rebuilt by Julius Cæsar. When Paul visited the city to establish this church, Canon Farrar says the city contained a population of about half a million. As Athens was the seat of culture, so Corinth was the seat of commerce. At this time it was the political capital of Greece, and the residence of the Pro-Consul. Magnificent temples and public building adorned the city. Fine arts were cultivated. Manufactures were not neglected. In a word, Corinth was rich, famous, beautiful. But the inhabitants were luxurious, corrupt and wanton. "To live as a Corinthian" had become proverbial for profligacy. The licentiousness of this city was renowned. Some idea of this immorality may be obtained when we are told that the Temple of Venus had nearly three thousand prostitutes connected with it as priestesses. In short, Corinth was a city of cheats, extortioners, drunkards, debauchees. It was the Vanity Fair of the Roman Empire.

V. In what language written : Greek. How did Paul come to know this language? He was what we would term "a university man." Besides, Hebrew was practically obsolete. Aramaic and Greek were spoken in Palestine when our Lord was on earth.

VI. By whom sent : By Titus, who had just returned to Paul from Corinth.

VII. Design of Epistle: To reply to sundry inquiries on (1) duties of life, 7 : 1 ; (2) meats offered to idols, chaps 8-10 ; (3) dress of women, 11 : 3-16 ; (4) exercise of spiritual gifts, chaps. 12-14 ; (5) manner of making offering for the poor.

Paul seizes this opportunity to (1) reprove their spirit of contention, 1 : 10-13 ; (2) rebuke them for non-reproval of the case of incest ; (3) give directions about litigation, 6 : 1 ; (4) correct irregularities in celebrating the Lord's Supper ; (5) present historical proofs of Resurrection, chap. 16 ; (6) defend his apostolic authority (chaps. 4-10) which had been impugned.

VIII. Characteristics of the Epistle: This letter is pre-eminently practical. In reality, it is a treatise on applied Christianity. Dr Bleek says, "It is fuller and more varied in its subject matter than any other of the Pauline letters, or indeed of the New Testament epistles : It gives us a clearer insight into the institutions, feelings and opinions of the Apostolic church than any other portion of the New Testament."

First Corinthians is, moreover, the epistle of modern life. In fact, it is par excellence the American epistle. Like Corinth, we are a colony, and engrossed in material interests. Our church member have rich gifts, but, unfortunately, there are many divisions among them. In more ways than one this Greek city resembles these United States of America. Hence, we find many questions of our day discussed in this epistle. Herein we are told what is the true method of preaching. Paul writes, he did not come with the pleasing words of human wisdom. The Gospel is spiritual. It will only be understood and cared for by spiritual men. What part shall women take in public worship? This question confronted the apostle 1900 years ago. In answering it, however, I believe Paul was meeting local conditions, and not writing for every age and country.

IX. Key to the Epistle: It is "in Christ." All problems in our individual and church life will be solved when professing Christians are "in Christ."

X. Arrow Points:

1. The object of Christianity—called to be saints, 1 : 2.
2. Grace comes through Christ, 1 : 4:
3. The ideal church—no divisions among you, 1 :
4. The Christian's message, 2 : 2.
5. Strife in church proves the absence of Jesus, 3 : 3.
6. The Christian's high office—laborers with God, 3 : 9.
7. Pride should have no place in our hearts. All our gifts come from God, 4 : 6-7.
8. The Christian's biography—not your own, bought with a price; hence, the character of our lives, 6 : 19-20.
9. Christianity is not formality. The religion of Jesus consists in obedience to God's commandments, 7 : 19.
10. The Christian's relation to others; be careful of our acts, so as not to offend, 8 : 13.
11. God's holy word is not to be a charm, but a chart. It is for our admonition, 10 : 11.
12. Comfort for tempted Christian—God opens a way of escape, 10 : 13.
13. The Polar star of Christian conduct—do all to His glory, 10 : 31.

14. A model prayer meeting—every person hath a psalm, teaching, etc., all done unto edifying, 14 : 26.

15. If we have knowledge of God, we awake to righteousness, and sin not, 15 : 34.

16. Encouragement for Christian works—labor not in vain, 15 : 58.

17. Rule of giving—as Lord hath prospered us, 16 : 2.

FOR THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

RECORDS OF AN ANCIENT MONTHLY MEETING.

BY DR. E. T. TUCKER.

In the earlier pages of a curious and ancient book of records of the Monthly Meeting of Pembroke, Massachusetts, which included several towns in the old Plymouth Colony, and is now no longer in existence, are many interesting records of "sufferings" in the peculiar handwriting of the times. The pages are yellow with age, and the entries are significant of the trials and hardships which the Friend of that period had to endure. The "priest" was a factor in the community and his wages were collected from one and all. Thus we are introduced to the sufferings of William Chamberlin, of the town of Hull, who records as follows : "In the year 1676 Benjamin Bosworth, Jun., cunstable came for the priests' rate, and because I lived with my father he knew not what was mine, so he understood that I was weaving for Joseph benson, & he went with some of the townsmen & tould him if he would not paye nine shillings for William Chamberlin, that he would strain from him, so Joseph benson paid it, & refused to pay mee for weaving his cloath."

Joseph Howland, of Duxbury, leaves the following record in connection with this "coppye of a warrant" :

"To wrastel bruister (probably Wrestling Brewster is meant), who was cunstable in the year 1680, greeting :

"Whereas, you neglected to gather in the rate made according to order of court & towne agreement in the time of your office, therefore thes are in his majesties name to requier you on sight hereof to goe unto all such as have not payed their proportions to mister wiswell, & demand it of them : the constable now in being is also hereby in his majesties name required to goe with you to be assistant to you & to make disstresse upon the goods or chatels of all such persons as neglect and refuse to pay thare due proportion in specie according to the towne agreement.

"dated the 17 : 3 month 1681. —"

"John alden, asistant."

"With this warrant above written," says Joseph Howland, "came wrastel bruster (Wrestling Brewster) and benjamin bartlet (Bartlett) the constable with others to me & demanded of me one pound, sd mony for the priest, the which I denied to pay, so they took seven sheep, & marked them & drove them away to thare priest, Ichabod wiswell. This was in the 10 mo. in the year 1681.

"Joseph howland."

John Rogers says : "27 day, 2 mo., 1681, came the constable Joseph waterman to my house & brought tow (two) men with him, & brought a warrant with him which he sayd came from the majestrate John alden—the constable could not read it nor any that weare with him, it was so blotted, & the constable demanded of me *01 04s 02d, which he sayd was rates to the priest Samuell arnall (Samuel Arnald) of Marshfield, the which I could not pay for conscience sake, whear upon the counstable seased on a steare of two year old & took him away from mee, John Rogers of Marshfield."

"28 day, 3 mo., 1683, I, John Rogers of Sittuate (Scituate), being from home the counstable John bryant came to my house & asked my wife whether I would pay the priests rate, which he said was 10s. 4d. She said I owed him nothing, whear upon he tooke away 2 platters & 2 porengers, which they prised at 11 shilling."

The sufferings of William Willis, of Scituate, are given also in his own words :

"In the yeare 1680, in the 4th mo., they carryed my sonne Samuell to prison & kept him thare as long as they thought good & then turned him out and tooke my goods to paye my sonn's rate, my sonn being a poore man haveing nothing but a wife & two children, the goods they tooke was ten sheep—and in the latter end of the 3 mo., 1683, they took away from me a milch kowe (cow) by William barrell & John brianstun constable, & when I demanded a copy of thare warrant they refused to let me have it.

"William Willes."

"Edward genkins (Jenkins) constable of Sittuate did take from me Joseph colman the 12 of the 2 mo'th, 1675, 16 bushels of ingion (Indian) corne for nickless (Nicholas) baker, thare priest as wittnes my hand.

"Joseph colman."

"thomas ginkins constable of Situate did take from me Joseph colman the 27 of the 3 mo'th, 1678, 11 bushels of barley & 2 hundred foot of bords, for 2 pounds & 3 shilling for one year for ther priest Nickillous baker"

"They did take from me Joseph colman & Zakariah & thomas colman from the year 1660 to 1675 twenty pound for not training, sum times 3 pound, and sum times less."

"The 3 mth, 1685, I, eduard wanton, being from home, Samuel studson the constable of Sittuate, came to my house & took away a cow for the priests rate."

"2 day, 4 mo., 1683—William Barrell & John Bryant jun came & took away six sheep & two lambs for ye Priest & vallued ym at 35 shillings, & wn I demanded of ym a coppie of their warrant, they refused to let me have it : by me,

"Henry Ewell."

John Rance, of Scituate, has left the following account, which is not devoid of interest to the reader :

"In the year 1677 John turner the oldest, & James bridges the constable, of Situate, came to our house and demanded a 11 shillings for their priest nicklous

(Nicholas) baker : & I Refusing to pay, they tooke a kittle which cost 17s. I having had corne and sheep taken away from me for him & he denied it to me that he had it, therefore I went to his house when the constable was there, & the constable gave the keettell into the priests one hand, so I see him take it, so afterwards on a first day of the week, I went tow their meetting house to him and tould him before the people that he was no true minister, but one of that sort of false prophets, which the Lord sent his servants to cry no against: then James cudworth, who writ himself asistant, called out saying, 'whear is the constable ?' then I sayd, 'the Lord will meet with all hipocrites.' then one houbard (Hubbard ?) had me out : & on the second day John bridges came to me with a paper from the sayd Cudworth, for me to come before him & so he caused me to be put in the stockes, & after that writ a warrant to John turner the younger : thus written:

"To the constable of Situate or the debyteyes or either of them greeting : & these are in his majestyes name to will and require you fourthwith to attach the body of John Rance, & to convey or cause him to be conveyed unto Plymouth, before the governoure & magistrates there assembled, to answer for his contempt of authority & other matters of misdemeaners as shall be objected against him in his majestyes behaffe, & heareof faile you not at your perriell.

"dated the 10 of July.

"James cudworth, assistant."

"So I went with the sayd constable turner, to Plymouth, so after their priest, Waly, & they had done their lecter, they sent for me in whear they weare a drinking of drinke in a great cup, & cudworth sayd to them, 'ther is the man.' Then the governoure, Winslow, in a rage, sayd, 'doe you know whear you are ?' & sayd, 'pull of his hat,' & so excommuned me about priest, nicklous baker. I tould them he was one of that sect that the Lord sent his servants to cry no against, who fedd themselves with the fatt, & cloathed with the woll (wool), & preached for hand fules of barly, though I sayd he takes moult it is all as one, at which the governor Winslow burst out a laugh, & sayd they had the warrant of him for thare so doing, then he turned to the magistrate, hinkly (Hinckly), & sayd, what will you that he shall have, but he answered not, or did not. Then he himselfe passed the sentence, saying, twenty lashes was tow (too) littell for to be well layd on, so he caused one called, prat (Pratt), to have me out to their whipping post, & one of them stood by & sayd, lay it on, but after they had strook, I judge, half them lashes, that he passed in his judgment, they left and got them away into the house of a gondon (Gordon) like to men ashamed. This is testified to be true by me.

"John Rance."

Several Friends in this monthly meeting suffered repeatedly by distrains. Joseph Howland again says : "The 30 day of 3 mo., '85—came the constable william fobes (Forbes) to my house & benjamin bartlett (Bartlett) & Jonathan alden the colecter, and the constable sayd to me they wear come to demand the ministers rate, which he said was 3 pound xs. 9d. I sayd I would pay none of it. So the counstable tooke a cow and a mayre (mare) which were prized 4£ pound, as the constable tould me, & they took them away with them."

"Hull, 3 day of the 1 month, 1682.

"Taken from Nathaniel chamberlin a warming pan, 1 putter (pewter) platter, 1 putter (pewter) bason—15s. 04d. for thare priest Zachariah Whitman, by the cunstable, Luke Squeare. He said the rate was 13 shilling, sum odd pence.

Under the sufferings of Joseph Coleman appears the following copy of a warrant—1688 :

"James ye second by ye Grace of God of England, Scotland, France & Ireland king, defender of ye faith, &c. To ye shreiffe of ye County of plymouth Greeting—we command you yt of ye lands and chat-tels of Joseph Coleman in your baylwick you cause to be made ye sume of five pounds, to satisfie us for a certain time for his refusing to serve us in ye office of counstable, in ye towne of Sittuate, whereof before our justices at ther Generall Quarter sessions held at plymouth for the sd county ye second Wednesday of June last he was convict, and make a true retorne hereof. Dated the fifteenth day of October in ye forth year of our reigne.

"Witnesse, Nath'll Thomas, Esq'e.

"Nath. Thomas, Clar."

"By verty (virtue) of his majesties writ of execution a tro (true) copey whereof is above written, I have taken of ye estate of Joseph Coleman above named ye sum above, that is to say I have taken thirty sheep, & land, and have sold them for six pounds to satisfie his majestie. The sum above sd my owne feese & other neseasy (necessary) charges.

"November ye 2d, 1688.

"Sam'll Sprague, Sheriff."

Edward Wanton, who also declined the office of constable, had taken from his warehouse 142 $\frac{3}{4}$ pounds of cotton wool, appraised at 9 $\frac{3}{4}$ d a pound, by the same sheriff.

CHRISTIAN WORK IN FRANCE.

FRIENDS IN PARIS.

Having crossed to Paris on Saturday, 17th inst., I attended next morning the Friends' meeting there, which has been held during the past two months at the Depot Central (for Bibles and Gospel literature), in the heart of the city. The meeting is usually held at Madame Dalencourt's, in the suburb of Montmartre, where she and the young women whom she trains for Gospel work form the nucleus of the meeting. But as her establishment is always closed and she is absent from Paris during the months of August and September, the meetings had for some years been discontinued during these two months, and this has sometimes been a disappointment to Friends spending a Sabbath in Paris on their way to or from Switzerland, etc. This year the experiment has been tried of continuing the meeting, a young English Friend resident in the city having undertaken to be present regularly. The attendance, however, has been disappointing, consisting only of three or four young Englishmen and one Russian, who were temporarily residing in Paris. Nevertheless, I at least have cause to be thankful for the meeting. We were but four, yet I should have missed much but for this opportunity of meeting with three young men, two of them fellow-countrymen, and the third the Russian above mentioned. We spent the day together, going in the afternoon to the M'All Mission at the Rue Royale, and in the evening to that of Ménilmontant.

THE REMARKABLE EXODUS OF FRENCH PRIESTS FROM THE ROMISH CHURCH.

The next day I went with Dr. Benham, a gentleman who for ten years has devoted himself to the M'All Mission as an honorary worker, to call upon M. Bourrier, the leader of the remarkable exodus of French priests and monks from the Church of Rome, of which some account appeared in "The Friend" about a year ago. Since that time the movement has steadily gone on, almost every week bringing news of some fresh escape. M. Bourrier has been enabled to open a house at Sèvres, a beautiful suburb of Paris, for these évadés, where they are temporarily housed, till their aptitudes and character are tested, and a position can be found for them. Here he received us, and with him we found two other ex-priests—there is accommodation for five. After lunching together, we went across to his own house, in the garden of which we had a free and friendly discussion of the work and its future.

M. Bourrier, who is now Protestant pastor at Sèvres, is full of enthusiasm for the work to which he is so manifestly called—that of aiding the escape from the fetters of the Romish priesthood of men who, like himself, have been laid hold of in early boyhood for the priestly profession, have been led on from stage to stage under a carefully prepared system of tutelage which gradually winds its coils more and more closely around them, until at last they find themselves bound for life, under vows which they are taught to be of the most sacred inviolability, as mere slaves of the Romish hierarchy. Then, in the comparative freedom of the incumbencies to which they are appointed, comes not infrequently the revolt of the conscience against one or another of the tenets of Rome, followed often by terrible struggles, such as, in one very recent case, terminated in suicide.

M. Bourrier is in correspondence with many priests whose consciences are heavily burdened; and he believes that if only there could be an assurance given to them of an honest livelihood, hundreds would leave the Church of Rome at once. Some would desire to enter civil life, though the positions for which they are fitted, with their total want of business knowledge, are but few; he himself began by taking the post of gatekeeper to a suburban villa—that is, a number of houses with gardens in a single enclosure. Many, however, believe themselves called to the ministry of the Gospel, and desire to continue to devote themselves to it—some amongst their old parishioners, others as itinerant evangelists or in fresh districts. As regards the first class, in reply to my question whether they would be encouraged to engage in evangelistic work during their leisure hours, he promptly replied in the affirmative, and quoted the remark of an ex-priest, now an advocate (barrister), that he should be able to give almost as much time to preaching the Gospel, and with more effect, as no one could suspect him of preaching for a livelihood. Those of the latter class at present go through the regular course of the Protestant faculties of theology; but M. Bourrier (who has done this himself) considers the method unsatisfactory for various reasons, and ardently desires to establish a special institution in which the ex-priests would receive, first of all, a thorough Scriptural training—for they generally know but little of the Bible—and at the same time be gradually and wisely guided through the great change involved in leaving the routine of a merely ceremonial religion, and adopting the spiritual conceptions of Protestant Christianity. The whole mode of thought towards religion has to be profoundly modified, and this does not take place in a day. Dr. Benham told me of a worker in their own mission, now greatly valued, who was for long an unsatisfactory speaker.

We ended with a time of earnest prayer together, and I took leave with the feeling of privilege in having thus heard from his own lips the hopes and aspirations—may I not say inspirations?—of the leader in a remarkable movement.

THE M'ALL MISSION BOAT.

My next three days were spent on the M'All mission boat, formerly in charge of our friend Captain Pim, which is now at the little village of Etigny, on the river Yonne, and on the main line between Paris and Dijon. Here, as it happened, I met with three more ex-priests, all of much longer standing, however, in the Protestant Church than those whom I had met at Sèvres. M. Huet, who now has charge of the boat, is one of these; he is a most worthy man, and lives on board with his wife, their two little girls, and a servant. I lodged in the village inn, but had my meals on board. The first evening the chief speaker was the pastor of the neighboring town of Sens; it is thirty-five years since he left the Romish Church. He is a man of considerable eloquence, and gave some practical advice on the duties of parents. Next evening it was the pastor of Auxerre, another ex-priest, a man of very different type, whose loving argument, and the recital of his own early mental struggles, when he had denied the very existence of a God, could not, one felt, but be blessed to the crowded audience. On Thursday there was a children's service at 2 o'clock, conducted by Mme. Huet, a former schoolmistress, whose lesson to the children on the Parable of the Prodigal Son was an admirable lesson in teaching for myself. That evening the boat, which will seat nearly 150, was more crowded than ever, and many were standing outside. After M. Huet had invited the people to purchase Bibles and Testaments to examine for themselves the truth of the teaching given on the boat, I told of the progress of the Gospel in Eastern lands.

WHAT ARE THE RESULTS ?

I spent the next evening, during the period of waiting at the junction of Laroche for an express train to Italy, in a neighboring village which the boat visited for five weeks last spring. A lady from this village—herself Catholic, but wife of an Alsatian Protestant—had come over to see M. Huet, and had invited me to visit her home. This gave me an opportunity of testing the durability of the work done by the boat; and I cannot say that the result of the inquiry was wholly encouraging. It was evident that in this household a deep impression had been left; yet there was no gathering for worship in the village, not even family worship commenced. It is but rarely, as I had been told in Paris, that conversions take place. A month's preaching and teaching to the people so utterly devoid of all religious knowledge as the great mass of French Catholics, does little more than prepare the soil for further and deeper work. Yet it is surely no small cause for thankfulness that wherever the boat goes, amongst people who (as I was assured by my Alsatian host) generally disbelieve in any God, daily expositions of Christian truth are listened to with the deepest interest, and any attempt on the part of priests—such as have occasionally been made—to prevent the people from attending has only the effect of an excellent advertisement for the work. A dear old soul, who much won my heart, remarked to me at Etigny, "What shall we do when the boat goes?" adding, "You must pray for us when it leaves us." I hope my readers will remember her, and many others who feel like her, at the throne of grace.—Joseph G. Alexander in "London Friend."

CORRESPONDENCE.

P. O. Box 710, Pasadena, Cal.,
Twelfth month 17th, 1898.

My Dear Friend, Rufus M. Jones :

Thy article on "The Finished Treaty" in THE AMERICAN FRIEND for 8th inst. is very appropriate. If I could have events shaped according to my personal preferences, I would like to have nothing to do with the Philippines, except perhaps a coaling station. But the question always stares me in the face, What shall we do with them? It would seem the height of cruelty to turn them back to the misgovernment of Spain. They are on our hands and we must make the best of the situation. At the beginning of the war nobody expected any such result. We may be in doubt now as to whether this is Providential, but it does seem that a door is opened for giving the Gospel to large numbers of the heathen. "I will give thee the heathen for thy inheritance and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession." If we hold the islands for their good, missionaries (Protestant) will soon begin their work under the protection of our flag and great good may be done. Governments "are ordained of God for the punishment of evil doers and the praise of them that do well." Hence the protection of government greatly promotes the spread of Christian civilization. God so intended it, and, opposed as we may be to war, we cannot deny that war has opened the ports of the nations to the entrance of Christianity, and our missionaries in many parts would not be able to carry on their work if they were not protected by nations who rely upon armies and navies for maintaining their authority over weaker nations. Now this is a fact, whether due to God's ruling or to his over-ruling. He sees the end from the beginning. We can see only a little way. It may be premature to say that our possession of these islands is "manifest destiny," but I think we have nothing to do with that. The question for us to decide is how we shall act in the present so as to discharge our duty to these islanders. I believe we will have, in some way, to take them under our protection until they are capable of self-government. Thy article on "Expansion," in Eleventh month 10th number, is a good argument against expansion, but we have to face facts rather than theories. Carl Schurz has written some splendid articles against expansion. The arguments are good, but he fails to tell us what we ought to do under our present circumstances. That is what we need to pray for—light for present duty. "Lead us, oh God, in the way that will most promote the coming of the kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ, Amen."

Thine very truly,
DR. WM. NICHOLSON.

FIRST QUARTER.

Lesson III.

First month 15, 1899

CHRIST'S FIRST MIRACLE.

GOLDEN TEXT.—And his disciples believed on him.—John 2: 11.

The incident described in the lesson took place in the first year of the ministry of Christ, on the third day after the calling of Philip and Nathanael. Cana of Galilee was a small town or village about eight miles northeast of Nazareth, and was the home of Nathanael (John 21: 2).

The miracle described has given rise to much discussion as to the character of the wine into which the water was changed. On this it may be said (1) that the word used in the original for wine is the general one, and is used in Eph. 5: 18; 1 Pet. 4: 3, etc.; (2) that the wine of that day was quite different from the modern strong wines, and was, moreover, always drunk diluted with twice or thrice its bulk of water; (3) Christ himself used wine, Matt. 11: 19; Mark 14: 25; Luke 7: 34; (4) Paul did not hesitate to recommend the use of wine, 1 Tim. 5: 23. While these are the facts, it is a very different thing to say that these facts authorize the Christian of to-day to use wine. Circumstances have changed, times have changed, the thing itself is different. Nothing in the precepts or example of Christ justifies the ordinary drinking usages of to-day. On the contrary, it is difficult to see how anyone who professes to be a follower of Christ can justify them. The law of the Gospel is not an outward ordinance, but a law written on the heart—"the ceremonial law is transfigured into a spiritual Gospel." The absolutely unanswerable argument against self-indulgence, at the expense of others, is Christian love. Rom. 14: 15, 17, 21; 1 Cor. 6: 12; 8: 13. For the individual himself, Christ's teaching is clear. See also Luke 21: 34; 1 Cor. 5: 11; 6: 10; Rom. 13: 13; Gal. 5: 21. The doctrine of total abstinence rests on the eternal principles of the Gospel, not on an outward law or example.

1. "The third day." Referring to chapter 1: 43. "The mother of Jesus." John never calls her by name. Her presence at the feast, and her manner of speaking, would indicate that there was a close connection between her and the bride or groom.

2. "Called." Was bidden (Revised Version). "Disciples." Probably Andrew, Peter, Nathanael (Bartholomew), John, and possibly James. The marriage feasts often lasted several days.

3. "Wanted wine." Better, "When the wine failed" (Revised Version). In the East such a thing would be even more felt than with us. "They have no wine." This would seem to be equivalent to, "They have not enough wine, what shall be done?" There is nothing to indicate that she asked him to perform a miracle.

4. "Woman." There is nothing in the original to indicate the slightest want of respect. In fact, the word is almost, if not quite, equivalent to our "lady."

It is so used in classical Greek authors. "What have I to do with thee." This, again, is perfectly respectful—it has been paraphrased thus—"You must let me act in my own way: and my time for action is not yet come." There may also be in the words an intimation that hereafter he was not to be subject to his mother.

5. It is evident that she did not take the words as a rebuke. "She read a yes latent in his apparent no."

6. "Of stone." Not earthenware, but cut out of stone. A "firkin" was about nine gallons, so they would hold altogether between 100 and 150 gallons. They would have wide mouths, and the contents could be easily seen. "Purifying." Compare Matt. 15: 2; Mark 8: 3; Luke 11: 39.

8. "Draw out now." The word in the original is the one used to draw from a well or stream. Compare John 4: 7; 15: 28. "Governor." Better, "Ruler," as in next verse. He was probably one of the invited guests. His manner of addressing the groom shows him to have been a person of some consequence.

9. "Knew." "The ruler declares what the element is, the servants knew what it was." The fact that there were servants implies a family of some position and property. "Called." Called out in a half bantering tone.

10. "And saith," etc. What was said was the expression of a general fact, not that the speaker in any way referred to the company present. "Well drunk." Better, as in Revised Version, "Drunk freely."

11. "This beginning of his signs" (Revised Version). John, alone of the evangelists, records this miracle or sign. The words evidently imply that it was the first miracle wrought by Christ. "Manifested." It showed his power, his sympathy for others, his desire to help those in need. He showed by it that he would not have his followers abandon the ordinary affairs and interests of life, but that in them all the Christian graces and fruits of righteousness may be evident. "Believed on him." They were now certain that he was the Messiah.

PRACTICAL THOUGHTS.

1. Not the least important teaching is that Christ began his work by sanctioning and hallowing marriage and family life. The foundation of the free and law-abiding state is the moral household. The strength of the visible church largely depends upon the Christian household.

2. Where Christ is an invited guest he brings richer provision than was there before.

3. Christ approved of innocent joys and amusements.

Note.—Some able commentators take the view that the water was changed into wine as it was drawn from the well, the jars having been filled to show that there was nothing but water in them. In support of this view it is urged (1), water would hardly have been taken from a jar which held water used for washing; (2) the word "draw" is that used when water is drawn from a well; (3) nothing in the text says that water was taken from the jars; (4) the emphatic "now" implies continued drawing, but for a different purpose; (5) the conversion of 150 gallons of water into wine seems unnecessary.

ANNALS OF OUR BIBLE CLASS.—VII.

BY ONE OF US.

My dear A—— B——.

To reassure myself, and keep the object of these annals clearly before me, I renew the personal address at the opening of this paper, and as I do so, I can but wonder if these chronicles are stimulating thee to start a class for systematic Bible study.

If your ladies have not already begun, and are at a loss what to choose, I would suggest that the book of Acts and Paul's Epistles would work in beautifully between First month 1st and the beginning of the summer. Smith's "New Testament History," "Conybeare and Howson's "Life and Epistles of Paul" (abridged), and a good cloth map of Asia Minor, with the journeys of Paul plainly marked, would be a good and sufficient outfit, and I am sure you would enjoy the course.

Speaking of outfit reminds me that one of our girls has just ordered Cruden's "Concordance," Jameson, Fausset and Brown's "Commentary," Smith's "Bible Dictionary," "Life and Epistles of Paul," and Edersheim's "Unabridged Life of Christ," from S. S. Scranton & Company, Hartford, Conn., for $6.00. So I shall have to recall what I said in No. IV. about our unwillingness to expend as much on a Bible class as on a Chautauqua course.

But to return to the regulars. The morning of the 26th dawned on a white world for our town, and the mercury was almost touching the zero point, and we wondered how many would be out for the afternoon quiz. But the attendance was good, all considered, and we had a fine drill on the previous lessons. The girls brought their maps, and compared their journeys with the routes traced by our teacher's pointer on the large map of Palestine that is now always before us. We also connect the events with the places as we trace the journeys, which is helpful to the memory and gives us a grasp on our work as a whole. These quizzes are just the thing to fasten what we have learned, and to correct any inaccuracies.

We have now completed the first period of our Lord's ministry according to Stalker's division, and the next lesson will take us to the Sermon on the Mount. In addition to this portion of the harmony we are asked to carefully study the temple of Herod, and to give some attention to the structure of the synagogue and to its services.

We have now reached a period in our Saviour's ministry in which His life and miracles are coming into serious conflict with the traditional law of the Jews, and it is a subject of deepest interest to observe His methods in dealing with the prejudices and false teaching of the scribes and Pharisees. In nothing had Rabbinic enactments become so burdensome as in the matter of Sabbath observance, and in nothing does our Lord more persistently violate traditional law. In the biblical command to bear no burden on the Sabbath day, the Rabbis saw a general statement that needed to be more accurately defined. It was an important point to know just what weight marked the lowest limit of a "burden," and it was finally fixed that anything heavier than a dried fig was prohibited. Again, it was necessary to know just what was implied in the command, "Thou shalt do no manner of work," and here there were countless applications and exceptions, some of them trivial to the last degree. In example, a woman might not look in her mirror on the Sabbath lest she should see a grey hair and pull it out, which would be work. Healing was work, and no remedies could be used except to save from immediate danger. "To lay on a plaster would be a grievous sin." To scatter two seeds would be sowing; to pick fruit or lift it from the ground would be reaping; to rub the heads of wheat would be threshing, etc. These are specimens of the petty Rabbinic decisions that had multiplied until they had imposed a yoke that no man was able to bear. It reminds me of what I once heard David B. Updegraff say, that "it is impossible to satisfy legality."

The beneficent end for which the Sabbath was instituted had by this means been completely lost sight of, and our Saviour, who came to "be a witness to the truth," violated these restrictions again and again, reiterating the principle that the Sabbath was made for man and not man to be sacrificed to the Sabbath. It was a principle that involved practice, and it was impossible to consistently maintain it without transgressing the traditions of the elders. These violations were a fearful shock to the scribes and Pharisees, but it was the loudest kind of preaching, and the true method of protest against the unwarranted legislation of spiritually blind ecclesiastics.

As we advance in this course we are often made to feel, as a class, that we are working at a disadvantage, owing to our imperfect knowledge of the times, of Judaic institutions, and of the Mosaic Law, but this only emphasizes the value and importance of systematic Bible study, and we are glad to have taken it up. It seems useless to expect these deficiencies to be remedied in the Sabbath School under its present system and methods. Its work is distinctively that of expository teaching with a view to more immediate spiritual results. Besides, one cannot, in the brief space allowed for the Sabbath School lesson, give much time to teaching the geography of Palestine and adjacent countries, to the structure of temple and synagogue, to the traditional law, to the political and ecclesiastical government of the country, and other points that one needs to know if he would be an intelligent student of the Scriptures.

Again, it is not practicable to study the Bible, book by book, in the Sabbath School, and in the absence of such study there is not likely to be any well connected knowledge of Hebrew history. Six months in the Kings, followed by six months in the Gospels, or three months in the minor prophets, succeeded by three months in the Epistles, certainly seems like a disjointed method of procedure, if one is seeking thoroughness in either the Old Testament or the New.

The drawing room class and the Biblical institute are a necessity to meet this lack in Sabbath School instruction, and under spiritual guidance they cannot fail to round out our knowledge of the Word, and give us a better apprehension of the scope and trunk lines of Scripture teaching. It is true that because of the historical and scientific character of a portion of this kind of work, it will often seem, for the time, less profitable than the strictly devotional study of the Bible, but the truly anointed student will come to discern God in the outer court as well as in the sanctuary, and to see truth in new settings and clearer outlines, as he pursues these methods.

ALABASTER BOXES OF HUMAN SYMPATHY.

Do not keep the alabaster boxes of your love and tenderness sealed up until your friends are dead. Fill their lives with sweetness. Speak approving, cheering words, while their ears can hear them, and while their hearts can be thrilled and made happier by them; the kind things you mean to say when they are gone, say before they go. The flowers you mean to send for their coffins, send to brighten and sweeten their homes before they leave them. If my friends have alabaster boxes laid away full of fragrant perfumes of sympathy and affection, which they intend to break over my dead body, I would rather they would bring them out in my weary and troubled hours, and open them, that I may be refreshed and cheered by them while I need them. I would rather have a plain coffin without a flower, a funeral without a eulogy, than a life without the sweetness of love and sympathy. Let us learn to anoint our friends beforehand for their burial. Post-mortem kindness does not cheer the burdened spirit. Flowers on the coffin cast no fragrance backward over the weary way.

A child begged permission to handle a serpent. Its beauty had fascinated him as he saw it glide so easily by with its folds of green and brown, its keen eye glittering like a jewel. He begged. He prayed. He entreated. He became frantic. He charged his father with unkindness in not allowing him to seize the serpent. All the time the father refused. But when, in after years, the story was told to the boy, now grown to manhood, he thanked his father for the denial. God keeps away from men the shining good they had so ardently desired. It seems to them a real blessing. They prayed for it. The prayer seemed legitimate. The motive was not consciously unworthy. There was no mixture of evil present to the mind. But the earnestness of the petition was seen afterward to be mainly human fervor. And the answer was restriction in one way, but an enlargement in another. For the pitying God gave the suppliant wider vision, and he was taught a lesson that could be learned in no other way.—D. W. Faunce, D.D.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC FOR FIRST MONTH FIFTEENTH.

WHERE AM I GOING ?

Ps. 119: 57-64.

Second-day, First month 9th. Fleeing from the Lord. Jonah 1: 1-15; 3: 1-4.

Third-day, First month 10th. Arrested in the Way. Acts 9: 1-9.

Fourth-day, First month 11th. Returned to the Way. 1 Kings 19: 1-21.

Fifth-day, First month 12th. Guided in the Way. Isa. 30: 18-21.

Sixth-day, First month 13th. Light upon the Way. Ps. 119: 105-112.

Seventh-day, First month 14th. Christ the Way. John 14: 1-7.

An analysis of this Scripture lesson is very suggestive. See how far you can group it all around these key words—choice; vow; prayer; thought; action; environments; praise; friendship; education. All of life is covered by them.

The topic for the week falls under the head of thought and action. "I thought upon my ways, and turned my feet unto thy testimonies. I made haste and delayed not." Many a man does not even think upon his ways. To forget them altogether and to enjoy the present moment is enough of a philosophy of life to have won a distinct name ever since the days of Epicurus. The constant burden of the prophets of Israel was that God's people would not "consider," nor "remember," nor "think." Alas, multitudes in all ages are like them. If God can only get men to stop and think, there is some hope of their salvation. But there are also many who think upon their ways, yet do not "turn their feet unto thy testimonies." Like the elder of the two sons in one of our Lord's parables, they say, "I go, sir," but it all ends with the resolution, and they go not. It is a weakness in youth to spend much time in dreams of doing noble things, but action is postponed to some far-off time. The value of a man's life is determined by his relation to his visions and duties. The vision is necessary, but the action is imperative. It is a fatal error to cultivate your emotions while you fail to act upon the impulses towards righteousness thus developed. This topic is meant to be personal to the highest degree. Let every one of us emphasize the personal pronoun "I." When a man buys a ticket at a railway station he also gets a folder to consult as to time and way stations on the journey. If the trainman keeps calling out stations that are not marked on the folder, he may well doubt if he is on the right road. What have been the stations on the road for the past year in your life? You meant to journey towards a noble and useful life, and heaven hereafter. Do the stations you have passed point that way? Turn back to the analysis of the lesson, and see what the stations on the right road are. A right choice is the starting point; a vow of entire consecration is the first station; prayer the next, and true Christian thoughtfulness the next; action directed by this thought comes next, and then open wide the throttle and keep to the main track through an enemy's country, never forgetting that God's law is the only safe road. The night comes on, and at midnight is the station of praise. You are nearing the end of your journey; you look back and see that all the way has been marked with God's mercy.

Where you are going depends very much upon your companions. You cannot link arms with men, and not walk where they walk. If you cannot bring a man your way, you cannot walk with him.

You are surely going some way for the next year. You cannot stand still until the dawn of 1900. That day will find you nearer God and all good, or farther away from Him.

Beware of a self-confident judgment. "There is a way that seemeth right, but the end thereof is death."

STUDIES IN THE GOSPEL OF JOHN.

II.

Chapter 1: 11 is the first of a series of statements in John as to the unbelief of the Jews. "He came unto his own, and they that were his own received him not." The margin, "his own things," suggests how Jesus came into his own world, unto his own things, but they that were peculiarly his own people did not receive him. Chapter 3: 19 is the first of the reasons assigned for this unbelief. "Men loved the darkness rather than the light, because their deeds were evil." It is the same old trouble so often found. Men are not unbelievers because of intellectual doubts so much as because of an "evil heart of unbelief." When a man's moral attitude towards God is right, you can be very patient with his intellectual difficulties, but when the heart is morally wrong there is no hope of him without repentance towards God.

Chapter 5: 40 assigns the next reason for unbelief. "Ye will not come unto me that ye may have life." Here the context shows that this is a case of willful rejection of ample evidence concerning Jesus. Note carefully the summing up of testimony that Jesus gives from verses 19 to 39, and then see how in the verses that follow He shows that they have not even believed Moses, else they would have believed him.

Chapter 6: 42: "How doth he now say, I am come down from heaven," reveals another common excuse for unbelief—i. e., inability to explain processes. Many of Ingersoll's stock objections can be classified under this head. Difficulties that inhere in the very nature of things, or that result from the imperfections of our present knowledge, are no just reason for rejecting actual facts. Jesus clearly proved to these people his more than human origin and nature, and a difficulty in understanding the "how" was no reason for rejecting the evidence. A careful study of the cavilling questions of the Jews as given in this Gospel will prove of much interest in this connection. A number of them are in sixth chapter.

Chapter 7: 41, 42, shows unbelief arising from superficial knowledge of both the Scriptures and the facts in the case. These men did not do as Nathanael when he doubted the origin of the Messiah from Nazareth. He went to see, and believed.

Chapter 5: 44: "How can ye believe which receive glory one of another, and the glory which cometh from the only God ye seek not?" Here the difficulty is that the standard of conduct is the opinion of others, and that which man can give is esteemed more highly than that which God gives. This is a subtle and widespread form of unbelief. Of close kin to it is Chapter 7: 48: "Have any of the rulers believed on him, or of the Pharisees?" Men who get all their ideas from some leader of opinion, or from some traditional authority, and do no thinking for themselves, are not uncommon to this day.

Chapter 5: 60 suggests that the profound spirituality of Jesus was too far removed from their grossly material views for them to care to understand him. A similar reason keeps many of his own professed followers from accepting his highest truths to-day.

Chapter 12: 35-40 assigns the reason of judicial blindness, or the loss of the spiritual senses through disuse and misuse, and by the rejection of the light when it shined upon them. There must come a time when men who have said, "I will not believe," will have to say, "I cannot believe."

There are many other passages in this Gospel that throw sidelights on this topic. The first thing that strikes us in all of them is the similarity of the unbelief of the Jews to that of the present time. Jesus never allows that it was lack of sufficient evidence that kept men away from him. He plainly says that "If I had not done among them the works that no other man did, they had not had sin, but now they have no cloak for their sin." There is a modern tendency to excuse these Jews that is not warranted by the words of Jesus. It is quite possible that those who thus excuse the Jews are only covertly looking for excuses for themselves.

FOREIGN MISSION WORK OF ENGLISH FRIENDS.

PEMBA AND NATAL.

For more than half a century the English nation had proudly regarded itself as free from the guilt of slavery, when the assumption of the Protectorate of Zanzibar in 1890 placed over two hundred thousand slaves under its jurisdiction. The Sultanate of Zanzibar comprises the island of Zanzibar and Pemba, and certain territories on the coast of Africa, the mainland portion being administered by British officials under the direction of the British Foreign Office. A large proportion of the slaves had been forcibly taken from their homes in the interior of Africa, had endured the horrors of the slave wards, and been imported into the Sultan's dominions in violation of treaties with England and of the laws of Zanzibar. In 1894 the Government instructed the British Agent and Consul-General to report on the best means of abolishing slavery in Zanzibar and Pemba. Friends in England have always taken a foremost place in all anti-slavery work. Through the British and Foreign Anti-Slavery Society, and through the Anti-Slavery Committee of the Meeting for Sufferings, by memorial to the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, by appeal to the Christian churches of the United Kingdom, by influence brought to bear both publicly and privately on members of Parliament, by all means in their power they strove to hasten the emancipation of the slaves, which they knew would surely come. On Fourth month 6th, 1897, the Sultan of Zanzibar, acting on the advice of Lord Salisbury, issued his decree abolishing the legal status of slavery in the islands of Zanzibar and Pemba, subject to certain limitations with respect to harem slaves, who are in the future to be considered as wives, and to arrangements for compensation for the loss of the monetary value of all slaves legally freed. Previous to this Friends had decided to establish an industrial mission on the island of Pemba, whose object should be "to stand by the negro, now emerging into freedom, to defend his civil rights therein, to carry to him the knowledge of the glad tidings of life and salvation, and to assist him to rise in the social scale by industrial training in the arts of civilized life." Theodore Burt, a farmer, with considerable experience in handling carpenter's and blacksmith's tools, offered himself for this service to the Meeting for Sufferings, the Standing Committee of the Society of Friends in England, representing London Yearly Meeting. Accompanied temporarily by Henry Stanley Newman, Theodore Burt left England for Pemba, Twelfth month 31st, 1896. They were kindly received by General Sir William Lloyd Mathews, the Sultan's Prime Minister, and other officers of the Government. A small house at Chaki-Chaki, in the island of Pemba, was placed at their disposal, rent free for one year, and they were supplied in the same liberal way with household furniture and provisions. From here the Friends explored the island, which is about forty miles long by ten wide, with a negro population of about 50,000, besides Arabs, Hindus and aborigines, in order to ascertain the most suitable spot for a permanent residence. It was advisable that this should be near the chief town in order to be in touch with the population, adjoining the sea and in a high position for greater healthfulness, and for communication by water with the rest of the island, as there are no roads of any sort, and a market must be found for produce. Finally, an estate of about 400 acres, called Banani, on the north side of Chaki-Chaki Bay, and about thirty minutes from that town by boat, was purchased. It is very fertile and well planted with cloves, cocoanut palms and mangoes, cloves and copra being the leading exports of the island.

H. S. Newman returned to England in Fourth month, 1897, and has since published "Banani," a valuable book on the transition from slavery to freedom in Zanzibar and Pemba. The same month offers of service were accepted from Herbert Armitage and his sister, who for some years had been working successfully among hundreds of boys at Leopold House, one of Dr. Barnardo's homes in the southeast of London. Herbert Armitage sailed almost immediately. Celia M. Armitage and Jessie Burt went out in First month, 1898, accompanied by Arnold Wigham, of Dublin. At the present time Theodore and Jessie Burt and Arnold Wigham are living at Banani, and Herbert and Celia M. Armitage at Chaki-Chaki. No other missionaries were at work in Pemba when Friends first went there. Two missionaries, Mr. and Mrs. Key, have since been sent by the Universities Mission, which has been doing much good work on the neighboring island of Zanzibar. Mr. Edib, acting Vice Consul at Pemba, writing from there, Sixth month, 30th, 1898, says: "Mr. and Miss Armitage, especially the latter, are very popular in Chaki-Chaki, and are doing excellent work. Miss Armitage's time is greatly taken up with her patients, and I feel sure she has already earned the well deserved gratitude of many poor natives, mostly slaves, who have come to her suffering from numerous sores and wounds, and after kind and regular treatment have gone away healed." Theodore Burt wrote last Fifth month that he had arranged for part of the Banani estate to be marked out into allotments, on which each freed slave who comes can build his hut and grow his vegetables. We shall thus be able to house and employ respectably about 100 families. The process of claiming freedom, and being legally recognized as free, is necessarily slow. The Government is naturally averse to rapid changes, and perhaps no clearer testimony has been given to the efficiency of the help rendered to the Pemba slaves by Friends in obtaining their freedom, than that of Lord Salisbury in a recent despatch to Sir Arthur Hardinge, in which he regards the attitude of Friends' mission in Pemba as "precipitating claims for freedom" on the part of the slaves. The "Zanzibar Gazette," in reporting a visit which Sir Arthur Hardinge himself paid to Friends' Industrial Mission speaks of his keen interest in the prospects of their industrial work, and adds, "It is Pemba's real need at present."

A small independent mission has for some time been carried on by Elbert and Emma Clarke in Natal. She was a Friend by birth, and he joined the Society some years ago. They went out early in 1875 to a mission which the late Major Malone was anxious to begin among the Amagcaleka Kaffirs. When this mission was transferred to the United Presbyterians at the end of that year they went on to the Amaci Kaffirs. Here they started a very vigorous mission, which was handed over to the Birmingham Young Men's Christian Association in 1877, when Elbert Clarke joined the London Missionary Society's expedition to Lake Tanjanyika. His health failed, and in 1878 he returned to South Africa to found a new station at Rock Fountain, Natal. It was hard work. House and schoolrooms must be built, and as they were in no position to hire labor, being mainly supported by voluntary contributions from England, much of the quarrying and building had to be done by his own hands. But the Lord's blessing was on their work. Out-stations were opened at Hope Vale, Entakamu and Endunduma; new schoolrooms were built at each place, and better still, little Kaffir churches were built up in the faith and hope of the Gospel. The chief at Endunduma a few years ago moved with his people to the neighborhood of Elbert Clarke's old station among the Amaci Kaffirs, and they have therefore been transferred to the care of the missionary there. Drought, locusts, and rinderpest have been among the outward difficulties with which the mission has had to contend. Bitter persecution has assailed some of the converts, but through all they have rejoiced to find "many of the native people feeling after salvation through Jesus Christ."

THANKSGIVING ANN.

In the kitchen doorway, underneath its arch of swaying vines and dependent purple clusters, the old woman sat, tired and warm, vigorously fanning her face with her calico apron. It was a dark face, surmounted by a turban, and wearing, just now, a look of troubled thoughtfulness not quite in accordance with her name—a name oddly acquired from an old church anthem that she used to sing somewhat on this wise :

"Thanksgivin' an'—"

"Johnny, don't play dar in the water, chile !"

"Thanksgivin' an'—"

"Run away now, Susie, dearie."

"Thanksgivin' an'—"

"Take care dat bressed baby! Here's some gingerbread for him."

"Thanksgivin' an' the voice of melody."

You laugh? But looking after all these little things was her appointed work, her duty; and she spent the intervals in singing praise. Do many of us make better use of our spare moments?

So the children called her Thanksgiving Ann; her other name was forgotten, and Thanksgiving Ann she would be, now, to the end of her days. How many these days had already been, no one knew. She had lived with Mr. and Mrs. Allyn for years, whether as mistress or servant of the establishment, they could scarcely tell; they only knew that she was invaluable. She had taken a grandmotherly guardianship of all the children, and had a voice in most matters that concerned the father and mother, while in the culinary department she reigned supreme.

The early breakfast was over. She had bestowed unusual care upon it, because an agent of the Bible Society, visiting some of the country places for contributions, was to partake of it with them. But while she was busy with a final batch of delicate waffles, the gentleman had pleaded an appointment, and, taking hasty leave of his host and hostess, had departed unobserved from the kitchen windows; and Thanksgiving Ann's "Bible money" was still in her pocket.

"Didn't ask me, nor give me no chance. Just 's if, 'cause a pusson's old an' colored, dey didn't owe de Lord nuffin', an' wouldn't pay it if dey did," she murmured, when the state of the case became known.

However, Silas, the long-limbed, untiring, and shrewd, who regarded the old woman with a curious mixture of patronage and veneration, had volunteered to run after the vanished guest, and "catch him if he was anywhere this side of Chainy." And even while Thanksgiving sat in the doorway, the messenger returned, apparently unwearied by his chase.

"Wa-ll, I come up with him—told ye I would—and give him the three dollars. He seemed kind of flustered to have missed such a nugget; and he said 'twas a gingerous donation—equal to your master's. Which proves," said Silas, shutting one eye, and appearing to survey the subject meditatively with the other, "that some folks can do as much good just off-hand as some other folks can with no end of pinchin' an' screwin' beforehand."

"Think it proves dat folks dat don't have no great mount can do as much in a good cause by thinkin' 'bout it a little aforehand, as other folks will do dat has more, and puts der hands in der pockets when de time comes. I believe in systematics 'bout such things, I does;" and with an energetic bob of her head, by way of emphasizing her words, old Thanksgiving walked into the house.

she began in her high, weird voice. But the words died on her lips; her heart was too burdened to sing.

"Only three dollars out'n all der 'bundance!" she murmured to herself. "Well, mebbly I oughtn't to judge; but then I don't judge, I knows. Course I knows, when I'se here all de time, and sees de good clo'es, an' der carr'ages, an' de musics, an' de fine times—folks an' hosses an' tables all provided for, an' de Lord of glory lef' to take what happens when de times comes, an' no prepr'ation at all! Sure 'nough, He don't nede der help. All de world is His; and He can send clo'es to His naked, an' bread to His hungry, an' Bibles to His heathen, if dey don't give a cent; but den dey're pinchin' an' starvin' der own dear souls. Well—'taint my soul! But I loves 'em—I loves 'em, an' dey're missin' a great blessin'."

These friends, so beloved, paid little attention to the old woman's opinion upon what she called "systematics in givin'."

"The idea of counting up all one's income, and setting aside a fixed portion of it for charity, and then calling only what remains one's own, makes our religion seem arbitrary and exacting; it is like a tax," said Mrs. Allyn, one day; "and I think such a view of it ought by all means to be avoided. I like to give freely and gladly of what I have when the time comes."

"If ye hain't give so freely an' so gladly for Miss Susie's new necklaces an' yer own new dresses dat ye don't have much when de time comes," interposed Thanksgiving Ann.

"I think one gives with a more free and generous feeling in that way," pursued the lady, without seeming to heed the interruption. "Money laid aside beforehand has only a sense of duty and not much feeling about it; besides, what difference can it make, so long as one does give what one can where there is a call?"

"I wouldn't like to be provided for dat way," declared Thanksgiving. "Was, once, when I was a slave, 'fore I was de Lord's free woman. Ye see, I was a young, no-'count gal, not worf thinkin' much 'bout; so my ole marse he lef' me to take what happened when de time come. An' sometimes I happened to get a dress, an' sometimes a pair of ole shoes, an' sometimes I didn't happen to get nuffin', an' den I went bare-foot; an' dat's jist de way—"

"Why, Thanksgiving, that's not reverent," exclaimed Mrs. Allyn, shocked at her comparison.

"Jist what I thought, didn't treat me with no kind of reverence," answered Thanksgiving.

"Well, to go back to the original subject, all these things are mere matters of opinion. One person likes one way best; and another person, another," said the lady, smilingly, as she walked from the room.

"'Pears to me it's a matter of which way de Master likes best," observed the old woman, settling her turban. But there was no one to hear her comment, and affairs followed their accustomed routine. Meanwhile, out of her own little store, she carefully laid aside one-eighth. "'Cause if dem ole Israelites was tol' to give one-tenth, I'd jist like to frow in a little more, for good measure. Talk 'bout it's bein' like a tax to put some away for such things! 'Clare! I get studyin' what each dollar mus' do, till I get 'em so loadened up wid prayin's an' thinkin's dat I mos' b'lieve dey weigh double when dey does go.

"O de Lamb! de lovin' Lamb!

De Lamb of Calvary!

De Lamb dat was slain, an' lives again,

An' intercedes for me!'"

And now another call had come.

"Came, unfortunately, at a time when we were rather short," Mrs. Allyn said, regretfully. "However, we gave what we could," she added. "I hope it will do good, and I wish it were five times as much."

Old Thanksgiving shook her head over that cheerful dismissal of the subject. She shook it many times that morning, and seemed intensely thoughtful, as she moved slowly about her work.

"'Spose I needn't fret 'bout other folks' duty—dat ain't none o' my business; yas 'tis, too, 'cause dey's good to me, an' I loves 'em. 'Taint like 's if dey didn't call darselves His, neither."

Mr. Allyn brought in a basket of beautiful peaches, the first of the season, and placed them on the table by her side.

"Aren't those fine, Thanksgiving? Let the children have a few, if you think best; but give them to us for dinner."

"Sartain, I'll give you all dar is," she responded, surveying the fruit.

Presently came the pattering of several pairs of small feet; bright eyes espied the basket, and immediately arose a cry:

"O, how nice! Thanksgiving Ann, may I have one?"

"And I?"

"And I, too?"

"Help yourselves, dearies," answered the old woman, composedly, never turning to see how often, or to what extent her injunction was obeyed. She was seated in the doorway again, busily sewing on a calico apron. She still sat there when, near the dinner hour, Mrs. Allyn passed through the kitchen, and, a little surprised at its coolness and quietness at that hour, asked wonderingly:

"What has happened, Thanksgiving? Haven't decided upon fast, have you?"

"No, honey; thought I'd give ye what I happened to have when de time come," said Thanksgiving Ann, coolly, holding up her apron to measure its length.

It seemed a little odd, Mrs. Allyn thought. But then old Thanksgiving needed no oversight; she liked her little surprises now and then, too, and doubtless she had something all planned and in course of preparation; so the lady went her way, more than half expecting an especially tempting board, because of her cook's apparent carelessness that day. But when the dinner hour arrived, both master and mistress scanned the table with wide-open eyes of astonishment, so plain and meager were its contents, so unlike any dinner that had ever before been served in that house.

"What has happened, my dear?" asked the gentleman, turning to his wife.

"I do not know," she replied, with a questioning glance at Thanksgiving.

"Dat's all de col' meat dar was—sorry I didn't have no more," she said, half apologetically.

"But I sent home a choice roast, this morning," began Mr. Allyn, wonderingly, "and you have no potatoes, either—nor vegetables of any kind."

"Laws, yes; but den a body has to think 'bout it a good while aforehand to get a roast cooked, an' just the same wid 'taters; an' I thought I'd give ye what I happened to have when de time come, an' I didn't happen to have much of nuffin'. 'Clare! I forgot de bread!" and, trotting away, she returned with a plate of cold corn cake.

"No bread!" murmured Mrs. Allyn.

"No, honey; used it all up for toast dis mornin'. Might have made biscuit or muffins, if I had planned for 'em long enough, but that kind o' makes a body feel 's if dey had to do it, an' I wanted to get dinner for yer all out o' my warm feelin's when de time come."

"When a man has provided bountifully for his household, it seems as if he might expect to enjoy a small share of it herself, even if the preparation does require a little trouble," remarked Mr. Allyn, impatiently, but still too bewildered at such an unprecedented state of affairs to be thoroughly indignant.

"Cur-us how things make a body think of Bible verses," said Thanksgiving, musingly. "Dar's dat one 'bout 'who giveth us all things richly to enjoy,' an' 'what shall I render to de Lord for all His benefits to'ards me?' Dar! I didn't put on dem peaches!"

"Has Thanksgiving suddenly lost her senses?" questioned the gentleman, as the door closed after her.

"I suspect there is a 'method in her madness,'" replied his wife, a faint smile crossing her lips.

The old woman returned with the basket, sadly despoiled of its morning's contents, but she composedly bestowed the remainder in a fruit dish.

"Dat's all. De childerns eat a good many, an' dey was used up one way an' 'nother. I'se sorry dar ain't no more, but I hopes ye'll 'joy what dar is, an' I wishes 'twas five times as much."

A look of sudden intelligence flashed into Mr. Allyn's eyes; he bit his lip for a moment, and then asked quietly:

"Couldn't you have laid aside some for us, Thanksgiving?"

"Well, dar now! 'spose I could," said the old servant, relenting at the tone. "B'lieve I will next time. Allers kind o' thought de folks things belonged to had de best right to 'em; but I'd heard givin' whatever happened was so much freer an' lovin'er way o' servin' dem ye love best, dat I thought I'd try it. But it does 'pear 'sif dey fared slim, an' I 'spects I'll go back to de ole plan o' systematics."

"Do you see, George?" questioned the wife, when they were again alone.

"Yes, I see. An object lesson with a vengeance!"

"And if she should be right, and our careless giving seem anything like this?" pursued Mrs. Allyn, with troubled face.

"She is right, Fanny; it doesn't take much argument to show that. We call Christ our King and Master; believe that every blessing we have in this world is His direct gift, and all our hopes for the world to come are in Him. We profess to be not our own but His, to be journeying toward His royal city, and that His service is our chief business here; and yet, strangely enough, we provide lavishly for our own appareling, entertainment and ease, and apportion nothing for the interests of His kingdom or the forwarding of His work, but leave that to any chance pence that may happen to be left after all our wants and fancies are gratified. It doesn't seem like very faithful or loving service," Mr. Allyn answered gravely. "I have been thinking in that direction occasionally, lately, but have been too indolent, careless or selfish to come to a decision."

There was a long talk over that dinner table—indeed, it did not furnish opportunity for much other employment; and that afternoon the husband and wife together examined into their expenses and income, and set apart a certain portion as sacred unto their Lord—doing it somewhat after Thanksgiving's plan of "good measure." To do this, they found required the giving up of some needless indulgences—a few accustomed luxuries. But a cause never grows less dear on account of the sacrifice we make for it, and as these two scanned the various fields of labor in deciding what to bestow here and what there, they awoke to a new appreciation of the magnitude and glory of the work, and a new interest in its success—the beginning of that blessing pronounced upon those who "sow beside all waters."

Mrs. Allyn told Thanksgiving of their new arrangement, and concluded, laughingly, though the tears stood in her eyes:

"So you see we have adopted the 'systematic' plan, too; and you needn't starve us for supper, Thanksgiving Ann, you dear, faithful old soul!"

Silas heard of the change in that mysterious way in which he contrived to hear of everything that happened anywhere within a circuit of ten miles of him, and coming to the old colored woman that evening as, with face of content, she occupied once more her favorite seat in the doorway, he launched forth on the subject at once:

"An' now I 'spose you're satisfied."

"I's 'mazin' glad," said Thanksgiving, looking up brightly; "but satisfied—dat's a long, deep word, an' de Bible says it'll be when we 'awake in His likeness.'"

"Wall, now, I don't perless none of these kind of things," said Silas, standing on one foot and swinging the other, "but I don't mind tellin' ye that I think your way's right, an' I don't b'lieve nobody ever lost nothin' by what they give to God; 'cause he's pretty certain to pay it back with compound interest to them, you see."

"Mebby so; but don't ye think, Silas Ridgelow, dat's it's a drefful mean way to offer a little gift to yer best an' dearest Friend—a calk'latin' dat He'll pay back more?"

"Wa-ll, ye see folks don't always feel right," observed Silas, dropping dexterously on the other foot.

"No, dey don't. When ebery body feels right, an' does right, dat'll be de millennium. Does yer know dar's a prophecy 'bout de time when even de bells of de hosses shall hab 'holiness to de Lord' on 'em? Don't know what dat means, 'less 'tis dat de rich folks' carriages behind de hosses shall be goin' on His arands, an' carryin', part of de time, 'de least of dese, His brederin.' Guess de lovin'll have got so strong den dar'll be no thinkin' 'bout prayin'," said the old woman, musingly. "Well, I's glad of de faint streak of dat day dat's come to dis house!" And she went in with her old song upon her lips:

"Thanksgivin' an' de voice of melody,"

A GOOD STORY.

The following interesting anecdote I recently heard related by Evangelist Black, of the Presbyterian Church South, and which he said was told to him by a gentleman from Scotland as a true story:

It seems that a young lad, hearing that the Queen was at Balmoral Castle, was seized with an irresistible desire to see her, and so leaving home he walked over one hundred miles to the Queen's residence. Arriving at the castle gate, he tried to enter but was stopped by the guards, who told him he could not see the Queen. Disappointed and almost heartbroken, he turned away, and sitting down by the roadside poured out his grief in tears. Presently a young man came along, and asked the cause of his trouble, to whom he replied that he had walked over one hundred miles to see the Queen, and that the men at the gate would not let him in. "Come along with me," said the young man, "and I will show you the Queen." So again with his new friend he came up to the gate, and to his surprise, instead of the guards presenting their bayonets, they lifted their hats as the two passed in. Once within, he soon saw the object of his desire, and had his every wish more than gratified. But before leaving he asked his young guardian how it was that the men at the gate would not let him in when alone, but were so willing when he was with him. "Ah," said the young man, "I am the Queen's son, and I bring any one in here that I choose."

So with us, if we come to the gates of the Eternal City alone we will find no admittance, but if we are in company with the King's Son we will "enter in through the gates"; the angel guards will welcome us, and soon we shall "see the King in his beauty." Did not Jesus say, "I am the way, the truth, and the life; no man cometh unto the Father but by me"?

A short Psalm read before going to bed will smooth out the ruffled spirit, cool the aching brow, quiet the troubled heart, and soothe and comfort the whole being. It is one of God's sweet lullabies with which He gives His beloved sleep.—"Record of Christian Work."

News from the Field.

The following statistics of losses from membership in other ways than by death are not quite complete, though they are nearly so. We comment upon them in the editorial columns:

Disownments	76
Resignations	375
Discontinuance of names	517
By letter	256
Released	220
"Disownments and Release" (Iowa Yearly Meeting)	237
"Subtraction" (North Carolina Yearly Meeting)	194
"Without letter" (California Yearly Meeting)	2
"Disownment or Resignation" (Western Yearly Meeting)	307
Total	2,181

We were much assisted in making up our statistics of last week by having the advance sheets of Friends' Pocket Almanac. It is a most valuable little booklet. It gives the time and place of holding all the Yearly Meetings in the world and the time of holding all our American Quarterly Meetings, the names and addresses of all the Yearly Meeting clerks and much other valuable information. Every Friend ought to have one. Address Friends' Book and Tract Com., 45 East Tenth Street, New York City. Price, 5 cents.

Rufus M. Jones, editor of THE AMERICAN FRIEND, passed the last week of the old year in Ardonia, New York, where his wife is spending the winter. On account of her illness and absence from home the editor is frequently away from the office for a few days at a time. Friends who find answers to their letters a little delayed occasionally will understand the reason.

WESTERN YEARLY MEETING.

Seymour, Indiana.—Asa Woodard, from Coloma, and David Commons, from Tangier, began a series of meetings here on Twelfth month 4th, continuing for two weeks. The weather was bad and only a few attended the day meetings. Brother Commons had to leave on the 12th on account of sickness at home. The Gospel was preached in power and simplicity. There were two renewals. The church was strengthened in the fear of the Lord.

WM. R. RUDDICH.

Carmel Quarterly Meeting, just passed, has been one of great blessing. We had, as visiting ministers from other quarters, Charles L. Jessup and Robert Pretlow, whose sermons were an uplift to the church, especially Charles L. Jessup's sermon on "Social Purity," and his lectures on "Quakerism, Slavery and Temperance." It would be well if this lecture could be heard by all Friends in their respective meetings. The meetings composing the Quarterly Meeting all have pastors except one, and this meeting will soon be supplied. Thomas C. Brown has begun his second year as pastor in Carmel Meeting. Nathan D. Knight is pastor of the East Branch and Fisher's Meetings, this being his second year, and Elwood Lewis is stationed at Poplar Ridge. Amos Sanders is located at Noblesville, where he has been since the organization of the meeting, doing a very good work.

Mary J. Mills, of Newcastle, has just closed a very successful series of meetings at West Liberty, in which the power of the Lord was wonderfully manifest. There were about fifty souls definitely blessed with conversion or sanctification. One man, whose tongue had been paralyzed for fourteen years, was healed so that he could talk, pronouncing his words clearly and distinctly, which was a great joy and blessing to him.

The church was wonderfully built up, and they are now expecting to secure Mary J. Mills as pastor.

We can but praise the Lord for such faithful workers.

KANSAS YEARLY MEETING.

Emporia, Kansas.—Jesse W. Wilmore has moved with his family from Emporia to Sterling, Kansas.

INDIANA YEARLY MEETING.

Marion, Indiana.—Charles H. Stalker came from Columbus, Ohio, to Marion, Indiana, Eleventh month 30th, and commenced a series of meetings on Twelfth month 1st, lasting until the 25th. Two meetings a day were held, with three all-day First-day meetings and one all-night prayer meeting. The result was wonderfully manifested in the reception of the Holy Ghost and uniting and deepening the church as never before felt in Marion Meeting.

This was Brother Stalker's second visit to Marion, he having held a revival here just one year ago, when many received the Holy Ghost, and prayers have been offered up for him daily the entire year while he was laboring in other fields. He commenced meetings at Fairmount, this county, next day after closing here.

DAVID OVERMAN.

Richmond, Indiana.—For the first time in seventy-two years the "Hicksite" and "Orthodox" Friends had a union meeting. A noteworthy event took place First-day evening in East Main Street Friends' Meeting. For the first time since 1827, when the Friends divided, the two branches met together for worship. The fact that after seventy-two years of complete separation the two branches of the church were thus brought together, is regarded as a good omen. The Christian Endeavor Society of the East Main Street Meeting extended an invitation to the Young Friends Association of the North A Street Friends' Meeting to attend the regular First-day evening meeting. The invitation was accepted and the young friends turned out in force.

A successful series of meetings have just closed at Selma, Ohio, conducted by Leonidas E. Speer, pastor, in which a number professed conversion, others were brought under conviction, believers were strengthened. Sixteen have applied for membership with us. Children were made to praise the Lord because parents were converted. Parents were made happy because children found the Saviour. One of the most encouraging features of our meeting was to see the active part taken by the young people who two years ago sought and found the Saviour during a series of meetings conducted by our brother. Our hearts say, praise the Lord.

OHIO YEARLY MEETING.

Laura, Ohio.—A series of revival meetings recently closed at Lick Branch, Ohio, conducted by Isom Jackson, Lydda Ann Wright and Arbelia Wright. Souls were saved and God's name glorified.

NEW ENGLAND YEARLY MEETING.

Circumstanced as I have been of late in regard to correspondents, it has been difficult for me to respond individually to the numerous letters received from kind friends since the appearance in THE AMERICAN FRIEND of my "Forty Years of Crippled Life." I would now heartily thank each and all collectively for their kind words, sympathy and cheer for a shut-in, a large portion of them being strangers to me and scattered over a large territory, even to the Pacific Coast. More or less of them are or have been invalids themselves, one informing me that he had been obliged to use crutches for nearly seventy-five years.

GEORGE TABER.

Chestnut Hill, Mass.

Henniker, N. H.—The meeting at this place (which is situated in a rural district, about three miles from the village) has been struggling for existence through many trials, with but few to keep it up, and was much blessed by a series of meetings commencing on the evening of the 11th inst., with Charles H. Jones, evangelistic superintendent of New England Yearly Meeting, who was joined the next day by Perrin Reynolds. Meetings were held twice a day until Sixth-day evening, the 16th. The Gospel was plainly presented by our brothers and brought a blessing on the church in imparting fresh zeal to the membership of the church, for which we praise the Lord.

As I have visited many meetings in times past, and have found so many of our meeting houses located out of villages and towns, I have often thought it a mistake, and our situation has tended to confirm me in the opinion. It does seem to me that the times demand that the Friends should take serious thought how they can best reach the masses.

STEPHEN BREED.

BALTIMORE YEARLY MEETING.

Beginning with the New Year the Washington Friends' Meeting will be held in the new meeting house. For the location and hours of meetings see our list of city meetings.

Curwensville, Penna.—Mary E. Hughes, of Virginia, has been with us over two weeks, holding meetings every night, and Bible reading every afternoon, taking the Book of John and illustrating very effectively on the blackboard, giving many new ideas that were worthy of notice. She preached the Gospel with power, and we hope the seed sown will bear much fruit. Owing to the extreme cold weather the meetings at first were not so well attended as might have been expected, but as they continued they grew in interest and power. There were some renewals and a general uplift among the members. In connection with the work at the meeting in Curwensville she visited families, doing some personal work. She also held two appointed meetings at Glen Richie on First-day afternoon. May her services wherever she goes be blessed of the Lord as they were here.

MATILDA HARRIS.

NEW YORK YEARLY MEETING.

The representative meeting of New York Yearly Meeting met at Twentieth Street, New York, on Twelfth month 6th, and was unusually well attended. After a season of waiting upon God, the first subject considered was the advisability of discontinuing this semi-annual meeting. The prevailing opinion was that it is a necessary meeting for the good of the church, and also it is a means of bringing together the various Standing Committees of the Yearly Meeting, all of which have important interests committed to them.

"Church Extension" was next taken up, and all felt that it is important and vital to the growth of the church, not only to reclaim old landmarks, but to enter new fields. There are earnest, wise workers, who, under the guidance of the Holy Spirit, would willingly labor in these neglected places if the needful funds were at the disposal of the Evangelistic Committee with which to push the work.

"Anti-Saloon League" work was next discussed and referred to the Temperance Committee. "Peace and Arbitration" was also considered, after which Charles W. Lawrence, the prompt clerk, announced the business completed. After luncheon and social intercourse the Committee on "Peace and Arbitration" and the Evangelistic Committee met and transacted important business.

In the evening it was a privilege to attend the regular meeting of the Christian Endeavor Society of New York City, George T. Hilyard, Jr., President. After reports from the committees the subject for the evening, "Systematic and Proportionate Giving," was opened by Albert T. Bell, who spoke of the great blessing of "tithing" one's income, and giving as much more in "free will offerings" as one can. Many expressed thankfulness for the "privilege" which had come to them in adopting this system, so that those in very limited circumstances are able to contribute to the Lord's treasury. If one with an income of $300 or $400 per year realizes great blessing in the $30 or $40 set aside, the question was asked, What would be a reasonable proportion for one with an income of $5,000 or $10,000, etc. As each seeks counsel from the Lord in these things, remembering that He "loveth a cheerful giver," surely great good will come to the church, and there will be the needful funds for the work. A young lady member aptly quoted the following:

"Not what we give, but what we share;
The gift without the giver is bare;
Who gives himself with his gift
Feeds three—himself, his hungry neighbor and me."

On Fourth-day morning the Temperance Committee met, and Frances J. Barnes presided. It was decided to invite our dear friend, Rufus M. Jones, to address the temperance meeting to be held at the time of our next Yearly Meeting in Poughkeepsie. Emilie U. Burgess was appointed delegate to the "Reform Convention," to be held in Washington.

In the afternoon an interesting meeting of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society was ably presided over by Agnes S. Lawrence, in which many took part in a "program" which was previously prepared.

At 5 p.m. the "Home and Foreign Missionary Board" met, at which Robert M. Ferris and others presented the growth of the work and the needs of High Point, Mexico, and the work among the Indians. At both these meetings many hearts were warmed and stirred in considering missionary work at home and abroad, and an earnest looking to God, our "refuge and strength," was realized.

In the evening, at New York Monthly Meeting, David Sampson, from North Carolina, and William Marshall, from Iowa, and others, were in attendance and took part in helpful Gospel service. Our dear brother, J. Lindley Spicer, will be greatly missed, as he leaves New York Monthly Meeting to enter another field of service, and many prayers will follow him.

On Second-day afternoon, previous to the representative meeting, the trustees of "Oakwood Seminary," the "trustees of the Murray fund," and the "trustees and committee of the Henry Mosher fund," were kindly invited to meet at the home of Robert I. Murray.

In the evening the Committee on a "Bible Institute," and the Executive Committee of the Christian Endeavor Society, held interesting sessions at the meeting house.

The usual meeting of the Bible School Board was omitted, but necessary arrangements were made to carry on the work through the "Executive Committee," of which Alfred Busselle is chairman.

In the various Committees which met great devotion to the work was evinced, and those in attendance evidently returned to their home fields of labor determined, in the power of the Lord, to labor on for the promotion of Christ's kingdom. To Him be all the glory.

A TROUBLED IRISHMAN.

The man who does not care to work has no difficulty in finding an excuse for his indolence, although probably the man mentioned below was not open to that accusation:

An old Irish laborer walked into the luxurious studio of William Keith, the artist, recently, and asked for money to obtain a meal. He explained that he had just been discharged from the county hospital, and was too weak to work. Mr. Keith gave him a quarter, and he departed. One of four young ladies, art students, who were present said: "Mr. Keith, can't we hire that old man and sketch him?" Keith ran out and caught him, and said: "If you can't work, and want to make a dollar, come back to my rooms. The young ladies want to paint you." The Irishman hesitated, so Keith remarked: "It won't take long, and it's an easy way to make a dollar." "Oi know that," was the reply; "but Oi was a-wunderin' how Oi'd git th' paint off afterward."

In a Roman tomb the skeleton of a woman was recently discovered which had a complete set of false teeth made of pure gold.

Upon the morning of the day on which the mortal part of Dickens was laid to rest in the Poets' Corner of Westminster Abbey, Sixth month 14th, 1870, the New York "Tribune" published the following monody, in Dickens's own words, compiled and arranged by Lawrence Hutton:

CHARLES DICKENS.

"Dead, your Majesty, Dead, my lords and gentlemen, Dead, Right Reverends and Wrong Reverends, of every order. Dead, men and women, born with heavenly compassion in your hearts. And dying thus around us every day."—Bleak House, Chap. 67.

"The golden ripple on the wall came back again, and nothing else stirred in the room. The old, old fashion, the fashion that came in with our first garments, and will last, unchanged, until our race has run its course, and the wide firmament is rolled up like a scroll. The old, old fashion—Death! Oh, thank God, all who see it, for that older fashion yet, of immortality. And look upon us, angels of young children, with regard not quite estranged, when the Swift River bears us to the Ocean."—Domby, Chap. 17.

"The spirit of the child, returning, innocent and radiant, touched the old man with its hand, and beckoned him away."—Chimes, Second Quarter.

"The Star had shown him the way to find the God of the poor; and through humility and sorrow and forgiveness he had gone to his Redeemer's rest."—Hard Times, Book III., Chap. 6.

"I felt for my old self, as the dead may feel, if they ever revisit these scenes; I was glad to be tenderly remembered, to be greatly pitied, not to be quite forgotten."—Bleak House, Chap. 45.

"From these garish lights I vanish now forever more; with a heartfelt, grateful, respectful, affectionate farewell—and I pray God to bless us every one."—Last Reading, London, March 6th, 1870.

COACHING HER HUSBAND.

Happy is the man who has a wife better instructed than himself. He will be helped out of many a hard place. A typical example is cited by "Harper's Bazar."

"Are you a native of this town?" asked a traveler of a resident of a sleepy little Southern hamlet.

"Am I a what?"

"Are you a native of the town?"

"Hey?"

"I asked if you were a native of this place."

At that moment his wife, tall and sallow and gaunt, appeared at the open door of the cabin, and taking her pipe from between her teeth, said:

"Aint ye got no sense, Jim? He means wuz ye livin' here when ye wuz born, or wuz ye born before ye begun livin' here? Now answer him."

NOTICE.

It is now about to be published in a neat volume of about 225 pages, under the auspices of the Cleveland Bible Training School. Many copies have been already applied for. TRYING THE WRONG MAN.

An unusual verdict was rendered by the jury in a case tried in a California town twenty-five years ago. The question was as to the ownership of several head of cattle, which the defendant was accused of having stolen from the plaintiff.

As the case proceeded and different witnesses gave their evidence, it became apparent to all listeners that the defendant was an innocent man. When it came time for the jury to retire to consider their verdict, they did so, but returned to the court-room in a few moments.

The foreman looked the judge straight in the eye, and said with a drawl and twang which betrayed his New England origin:

"Jedge, we find the plaintiff guilty."

"The court is not trying the plaintiff, but the defendant," said his honor, hastily; and the matter being explained, the foreman was at length induced to express the jury's opinion that the defendant was "Not guilty."

"Howsomever," added the foreman, solemnly, "'pears to me we're considering the wrong man, your honor!"—"Youths' Companion."

THE EMPEROR'S SECOND HELP.

The Emperor Maximilian was an abstemious man as regarded the pleasures of the table, a laudable habit which was encouraged by all about him, who loved to feast royally at his expense, while he dined alone upon some simple dish. But the Emperor had a taste for fish, and especially for sturgeon; and one day he relished so much a dish of this last that, like Oliver, and to the equal surprise of the assistants, he asked for more. "Extremely sorry," said the maitre d'hotel, "but there is no more sturgeon." The Emperor perhaps swore softly to himself, perhaps he merely whistled or hummed. Anyhow, after a pause, he sent for the steward of the palace, who inquired, in some surprise, what his Majesty was pleased to want. "I want to know," said the Emperor, "how much sturgeon you bought for my dinner to-day?" "One thousand pounds, your Majesty," replied the steward. "Then next time buy a thousand pounds and a half," said the Emperor, "so that I may have a second help."—"Household Words."

HULDA:

The Pentecostal Prophetess.

BY BYRON J. REES.

152 Pages. Bound in Cloth. Price, 50c., postpaid.

A short life story and seventeen of the sermons of Hulda A. Rees, together with her portrait and picture of her early church. This book needs no other introduction than for the reader to know that seventeen of her sermons, which Sister Rees preached with such accompaniments of power and blessing, are for the most part to compose it. The life-story is short yet comprehensive, the writer of it avoiding anything of a eulogistic nature and making the facts of the life serve as an appropriate introduction to the character back of the sermons.

Mrs. E. E. Williams, in a beautiful poem, which is also a part of the book, gives some refreshing glimpses into the character of Sister Rees.

Esther T. Pritchard also contributes a "Tribute," glowing with fervor and truth.

A WOMAN'S LIFE WORK.

Including Thirty Year's Service on the Underground
Railroad and in the War.

BY LAURA HAVILAND.

This is a story of a wonderful life. The author was an active Anti-Slavery agitator and through her underground railroad work assisted hundreds of slaves to escape from bondage. During the war she spent about two years taking care of the sick and wounded. Through her efforts more than 2,000 Union Soldiers were liberated.
She accomplished a great work in providing for the Freedmen of Kansas after the close of the war. She was the founder of the State Public School, at Coldwater, Mich.,
an institution which was the first of its kind in the world. The Industrial School for Girls at Adrian Mich., almost utterly owes its first existence, and especially its name to her efforts. Haviland Academy at Haviland, Kansas, was named in her honor, as also the town in which it is located. At the World's Fair she was introduced by President Palmer as "The Mother of Philanthropy," and well she deserves the title. Her experience as told in this book will be read with thrilling interest.

This book is printed on good paper and contains 625 pages. It is bound in cloth with red edges. The retail price of the book is $1.50. We will send it postpaid, for $1.00. Address,

THE PILOT.

"My bark is wafted to the strand

And on the helm there rests a hand

One who has known in storms to sail

Above the raging of the gale

PISGAH VIEWS OF LIFE.

"Now I see all of it,
Only I'm dying!"

What lives we might live if we could only begin life with the wisdom which we shall possess when we stand at its close, and look back on it and realize that our earthly opportunities are at an end! How trivial much of one's life must seem viewed from its farther end, and how strenuous and earnest it would be if it could be lived over in the light of the experience which these closing moments bring! It is not well to be haunted by the shadow of death, and it is an indication of an unhealthy and morbid condition; but it might be well occasionally if we could take Pisgah views of life, and see it—see our own lives—in what the philosophers call an "eternal aspect."

Most of us live for the hour; we do what pleases us at the time. We see a pleasure or a task close at hand, and we enjoy the one and brace ourselves to perform the other, and we live largely as the creatures of circumstance, having our lives shaped by the things and the persons about us. Some of us toil and struggle with work and poverty and daily cares until life seems one long grind and death a happy release; others of us dabble and play with questions and problems, and lose sight of the great clear truths which we ought to see; still others of us refuse the drudgery of life, with its strenuous burdens, and devote ourselves to catching phantoms and ghosts while the real, serious things of life are neglected. How all this would be changed if we could really see the meaning of life as it will break upon us at the extreme verge! We all know how some great hope or purpose suddenly changes—transforms our life, and makes the work or the pleasures become totally different things. Work is no longer hard because it brings us nearer our fixed hope and purpose; frivolous pleasures become hateful to us, for they hinder us in the pursuit of our goal; the petty things that used to vex are brushed away with unconcern, because the vision of our realized hope is full upon us, and obliterates the little shadows which we used to know. Much more would life readjust itself, and the pettiness of it vanish, if we could enter it with our eyes full of the "eternal aspect;" if we could keep with us some foregleams of the Pisgah view. A modern poet has given a remarkable picture of Lazarus after his return from the grave with the new meaning of life revealed to him, a few lines of which we give:

"He holds on firmly to some thread of life
Which runs across some vast distracting orb
Of glory on either side, that meagre thread,
Which, conscious of, he must not enter yet—
THE SPIRITUAL LIFE AROUND THE EARTHLY LIFE:
The law of that is known to him as this,
His heart and brain move there, his feet stay here."

Now there is such a thing as getting the gaze so fixed on the celestial city that the things of earth are neglected, and of getting so full of visions and dreams that plain, everyday duties and joys are ignored. We write no word to encourage anybody in that mistaken course, but we would emphasize the truth that daily life and daily tasks and duties should be transfigured with foregleams of a light upon them from the eternal day which will break in fullness on the Pisgah heights of life.

A FORECAST FOR THE FUTURE.

It is gratifying and encouraging to us, as we open letter after letter at this period of the year, to find hearty expressions of appreciation of THE AMERICAN FRIEND coming from all parts of the country, and our readers will be glad to know that we have added eleven hundred new subscribers to our list since a year ago. We prophesied at the beginning, and we have always maintained the position, that if we could produce a good, solid spiritual paper, edited and managed in the interests of the whole church,—not a section of it,—it would receive the loyal support of our people, and our prophesy has come true, and the end is not yet. We feel deeply grateful to our readers for the manifested loyalty and support which we have received, because it greatly strengthens our faith for our future work. We are very far from having realized our hopes or of having attained our ideal, nor are we in any danger of resting back satisfied with the present accomplishments, for our vision for the future runs far ahead of any attainments yet realized. It is not our mission simply to make an attractive and interesting journal which shall suit a group or section of the Friends on this continent; our main business is to express and interpret to our age the vital, fundamental truths of spiritual, practical Christianity, and to draw our membership together around these central truths, or, better still, to draw them together around that central Personality who Himself is the truth. We can never be contented with producing a paper which is merely liked or enjoyed, since our primary purpose is to instruct and inspire and help. A religious paper which leaves its readers where it finds them is valueless and a waste of material.

The time has fully gone by for religious controversies, for endless discussions and speculations over theological abstractions, or for indulgence in denominational pride and peculiarities. We must meet living, present-day issues; we must realize that the only sure hope for our branch of the church is to distrust every short cut to prosperity, and to dig down to the everlasting source of spiritual power, and we must begin our work of regenerating society by first being transformed ourselves. We must learn that all regeneration and growth proceeds not by schemes and plans, by legislation and arrangements, but from within, through changed personality, through individual Christlike character, through consecration and actual spiritual victory. It is better, truer, holier, nobler lives that we want, and thus we get a better and more powerful church, and eventually a better and more purified state.

There are many questions which cannot be answered, and many problems which cannot be solved, until we have a higher level of spiritual life in our membership, until loftier views prevail, until spiritual guidance, which we have always claimed, becomes more real and genuine. It is the business of this paper, therefore, to proclaim fresh and vital messages of truth, and to make directly toward the accomplishment of these conditions. It is, in short, the attainment of a more powerful church through the expansion and enlargement of the individual members which we seek. Our colleges, our schools, our ministry, and our religious literature must work as a unit to the accomplishment of this end. There must be no cross-firing or wasted forces; all selfish and narrow aims must be sunk out of sight, and we must join hands in the sole and single task of building a better Zion. The Society of Friends, with its splendid history, with its roll of martyrs, and its clear proclamation of life and power through spiritual union with the living Christ, is now on trial before the world and before the church. We cannot live on our past history, and if we stand for nothing in particular, we may as well merge into the other bodies. Our future depends upon our ability "to stand for something in particular," our ability to deliver a fresh vital message in this year of grace 1899, and our ability to make our meeting places centres of transforming power. We, personally, believe that better things are coming, and in that faith and that hope we shall enter the work of the year, and we earnestly bespeak the support and assistance of all who are waiting and looking for the "consolation" of our Israel.

EDITORIAL NOTE.

Zenas L. Martin is an authority on the subject of Jamaica, and life and work in that island. As there has been much discussion concerning the health conditions there, his article in this issue will be read with interest.

All it is, is, always at it.—John Wesley's Motto.

ISAAC SHARP.*

It is no small praise for this book to be able to say of it, without exaggeration, that it is a memoir worthy of the remarkable man of whom it treats.

Perhaps during the last twenty years no English-speaking Christian worker has occupied a more unique position than has Isaac Sharp. At a time of life—71 years of age—when most men are compelled to think of retiring from active duties, Isaac Sharp was just beginning the great work of his life in his long missionary journeys. The accuracy of this statement is shown by the fact that fifteen out of the twenty chapters which compose the book are devoted to his last twenty years, for his life was prolonged to nearly the age of ninety-one. During this time he twice traveled around the globe, crossing the Pacific four times, visiting Africa, Madagascar, India, China, Japan, Australia, the United States, Mexico, Canada, Norway, France, Turkey, Syria, etc. On his journeys he was on various occasions so ill that his life was despaired of, but he pressed on, and finally died surrounded by his friends in his own home in England.

ISAAC SHARP.

What were his qualifications for such extensive work? At first sight they do not appear to have been many. He knew no language but his own; his health, as we have said, was precarious; he was not, in the usual understanding of the term, a great preacher, or a great organizer, or an evangelist, or a teacher. It is not probable that any of the great missionary organizations would have seriously considered his application for such service or have been willing to spend such sums of money as were required for his simple traveling expenses. But the Society of Friends has not been accustomed to regard matters of religious service merely in the light that is often followed by missionary organizations.

Isaac Sharp came before Friends in England with a sense of the divine call. The common-sense judgment of many of them was undoubtedly opposed to the project, but when in the meeting they listened to what he had to say, and without putting the matter to vote, waited before the Lord for Divine direction, they felt they could not do otherwise than grant his request, and let him go with the prayers of the church.

This was most remarkably shown on the occasion of the Yearly Meeting on Ministry and Oversight, when the professional opinion of a leading specialist was read, strongly expressing the view that Isaac Sharp was physically unfit for the journey he proposed to undertake. The old man, then well past eighty, did not attempt to question the correctness of the medical opinion from a medical point of view, but said that then they were under something more authoritative than the opinion of physicians. The Voice had called him; would Friends take the responsibility of hindering him from obeying it? And what followed? That large meeting, with the aged Friend before them, weak from age and recent illness, said to him, "Go, for the Lord has called thee." He went. Did the event justify his faith and theirs? No one who has had, as the present writer has had, the privilege of hearing missionaries who were working in their spheres of labor when he visited them, tell of the help and hope and cheer and uplift that came to them through his coming, can doubt for a moment that his call and equipment was of the Lord Himself. Of this the memoir before us bears ample evidence, and also gives an insight into the secret of his power. This did not lie primarily in his preaching; but in the fact, as is well brought out by the book, that he had learned the secret of living in the perpetual presence of God; had learned to know how to understand His voice, and obeyed Him with the simplicity and confidence of a little child. He never minimized to himself or to others the difficulties or the dangers that presented themselves, but was strong in faith, giving glory to God, being fully persuaded that what He had promised He was able also to perform. Among his characteristic watchwords were:

"Look unto Me,
And thou shalt see,"

And

"Forward and fear not,
Let thy faith be firm."

We can readily understand what refreshment, as of a breeze from the mountains of God, his coming was to the lonely missionaries and the native Christians:

"Why all their hearts went forth to greet
The coming of his beautiful feet."

He was a missionary to missionaries. "You cannot imagine what such visits mean to us," one of them said to the writer of this notice, who himself has had cause to be thankful for the work of Isaac Sharp. He remembers, on one occasion, when, himself barely convalescent, the time came for him to go, if he were to go at all, upon a journey of religious service in an untried sphere, should he attempt it? Isaac Sharp came in, and his advice was asked. He paused, and then said, "If thou hast faith to go forward, it will be all right." It was just the encouragement needed, and the event proved the correctness of the advice.

Isaac Sharp did not follow the easy lines of travel, or avoid dangers. He was in South Africa during the Zulu war, and pressed on through the disturbed district. At one place he, humanely speaking, escaped assassination by only a few days, for the family where he had lodged were shot down in cold blood. He and his companions, unarmed and unharmed, went along a lonely way to a missionary station from which the missionaries were fleeing for their lives to the place which Isaac Sharp had just left. The Friends fulfilled their mission at the post of danger, and then pressed on further into danger, for Isaac Sharp felt he could not leave a certain isolated place unvisited, although it meant that he had to retrace every step of his way back to Cape Town. Probably his feelings then were similar to those which he expressed as having experienced during a time of peril that came to him later. "I was not afraid, oh no, but it was a time for serious thought. I knew God would take care of me, but not whether it would be in this world or the next."

Isaac Sharp's method in his meetings was to hold them on the basis of silence, for he had a strong sense of the great value of this in spiritual experience, tending, as it does, to turn the minds of those present first to the Lord. He seems to have had no difficulty in securing this silence among any people in any of the lands he visited except in the United States, and then, of all places, in Friends' meetings in some parts of the country. This seems really to have troubled him a good deal, and he deplores how "silent waiting upon the Lord for the renewal of strength" has given place to a service of song, and says that admission to membership in the Society of Friends has been on grounds superficial to a degree. Again, he adds, "I do not say that in 'revival services' no hymns should be sung, but I have small sympathy with continuous singing, preaching, prayer and praise in recognized meetings of Friends, to the absolute exclusion of silence, nor of commencing with a hymn and ending with the doxology, and the filling up of every available gap, lest time should be lost." Yet there is no harshness in his criticism, and he quotes another's words as his own sentiment, "There is a love which covers all." And he everywhere speaks warmly of the kindness of Friends.

Frances Anne Budge was selected by Isaac Sharp to have charge of his papers for the preparation of his biography. His choice was admirable. It is very fitting that one whose pen has been so successful in bringing before Friends of this generation the lives and service of the earlier workers in our Society, should now edit the memoir of one so lately in our midst, who exemplified in his life that principle in service which has done much to make Friends stronger in their influence upon others than could be expected from their mere numbers—the principle which lays emphasis upon individual guidance as opposed to direction by a spiritual superior or by committee, yet which recognizes that the individual call is to be judged by the spiritual discernment of one's friends.

We believe that the book only needs to be known to have a large circulation, both on account of the widespread interest in Isaac Sharp and of the successful manner in which a difficult subject has been treated. It is made more attractive by an excellent portrait and a number of other illustrations bearing on his life and experiences.

SUFFICIENT UNTO THE DAY.

BY E. R. HENDRIX.

Over the triple doorway of the Milan Cathedral are these inscriptions: "All that which pleases is for a moment," "All that which troubles is for a moment," and over the central arch, "That only is important which is eternal."

The unrivalled architecture of that superb structure, the most pleasing to the eye of the world's cathedrals, while ministering to our love of the visible, points alike with its noble mottoes and shapely spires to the invisible as the real. It is only a life enriched from above that can, like Moses, whether in palace or desert, endure as seeing Him who is invisible.

Faith not fatalism is the world's great need. It is not that we should be heedless of the future—that would make us unfit for the present; but we should be free from anxiety about it.

Fatalism holds that a certain fore-ordained event will come about no matter what may be done to prevent it, and so hardens the heart to endure in silence or to recklessly court danger. That makes the Arab unlovely and cruel, the slave of lust and anger. Faith holds that our Lord has become the Caretaker of all who absolutely trust Him. He lifts that burden from all who are willing. "In the world ye shall have tribulation; but be of good cheer, I have overcome the world." As one of the martyrs said, "God hath not promised to keep us from our trouble, but to be with us in it."

God can give us something better than relief—He gives us grace. Grace is more than the good will of God toward us; it is His good work in us. The one enlightens and enlivens; the other strengthens and supports. The real power of God dwells only in those who have His grace.

Cyprian, while Bishop of Carthage, said to the Christians who complained that they were likely to die by the plague when they preferred to die by the sword, "God does not want your blood, but your faith. God's martyrs are not only those whose chains the women of the early church counted it an honor to kiss. There were those who hastened to die because they were afraid to live—who welcomed death as easier and requiring less courage than life. Death on the field of battle is a fate desired by many a soldier who has never conquered his own appetites. There is more faith required to fight disease or want than to end the struggle by welcoming death. The suicide is one who cannot endure "to-morrow." Blood is cheaper than faith. It requires less religion to speak dying words than to infuse the spirit of religion into our daily speech while we yet live.

Not the name of a single martyr is mentioned in the calendar of the saints in the Epistle to the Hebrews, unless it be Samson, the least saintly of all. Not those who were stoned, who were sawn assunder, who were slain with the sword, who were destitute, afflicted, evil entreated (of whom the world was not worthy), wandering in deserts and mountains and caves and the holes of the earth, are counted most worthy of being mentioned by name. But those who did secular acts from a sacred or spiritual motive, who walked with God like Enoch, or prepared an ark like Noah, who went on a journey in faith like Abraham, or administered the affairs of a nation like Moses—it is such as these who could walk and not faint who received the more abundant grace here and the exceeding, eternal weight of glory.

Great characters like these are developed by great promises even more than by great trials. Faith is reason leaning on God, trusting for to-day and confident of the morrow, which is also with God.

Neither pessimism nor optimism is the best friend of humanity, but faith. Pessimism despairs of any betterment of human conditions, declaring with Schopenhauer, "Consciousness is the hideous mistake and malady of nature." Optimism declares that this is the best possible world without being able to give a reason for the faith that leaves the Redeemer out of account, and without any serious, self-sacrificing effort to make it better. Faith discounts none of the ills of this life, but is ever looking at the things which are unseen and eternal.

Worldly wisdom truthfully says, "The worst misfortunes are those which never come." Faith replies, "True; but what if the very worst should come? Who shall separate us from the love of Christ? Shall tribulation, or distress, or persecution, or famine, or nakedness, or peril, or sword? In all these things we are more than conquerors through Him that loved us."

Experience chides us for borrowing trouble and rightly says, "It is the double load that kills—to-morrow's burden added to to-day's. Only foolish man does for himself what he would never do for his beast." Faith responds, "Yes; it was my Lord who taught me that, and said it was like the heathen to be always asking anxiously, What shall we eat? or, What shall we drink? or, Wherewithal shall we be clothed? Why add to-morrow's burdens or anxieties to to-day's, and thus be unfit for to-day's duties? Your Heavenly Father knoweth that ye have need of all these things."

We might as well, savage-like, attempt to eat to-morrow's food to-day as to do to-morrow's work or bear to-morrow's burdens. Faith was schooled in the desert by finding out that the manna was given day by day for each day's needs, and the Hebrew who was distrustful of the morrow's supply found that the food of unbelief bred worms and stank, while that of faith came daily fresh from God in never-failing supply. Sweet is the food which faith claims in answer to the simple prayer, "Give us this day our daily bread."

Keep Thou my feet; I do not ask to see
The distant scene; one step enough for me.

"He that believeth shall not make haste," or shall not "fuss," as the Hebrew may be fitly rendered,—showing the confusion of an army whether preparing for the onset or dissolving in disorderly retreat without faith in its leader. The fresh recruit must fire at once or run; the veteran alone is fit for the reserves, confusing the enemy's fire by the deliberateness of his aim. While no shot is as deadly as that which is fired at the retreating foe, the Christian, though panoplied from head to foot, has no armor for his back. The shield of faith which is "over all" gives no protection to him whose face is turned from the foe. Faith is mightiest on the battle field. We never experience the reality of Christ until we experience the necessity for Him.

Our Lord's great words are "Learn" and "Rest." Learn of Me and find rest for your souls. Without a reliable universe no moral character could grow. A fickle world admits only of a lawless race. It is the soul which believes in God as Creator, Redeemer, Lord that can plan and work and die at its best, and which finds "rest in the midst of work."

Rest that strengthens unto virtuous deeds,
Is one with prayer.

HEALTH CONDITIONS IN JAMAICA.

BY ZENAS L. MARTIN.

From what has been said publicly and privately about the physical condition of the missionaries in Jamaica, and from Dr. William Nicholson's article of Twelfth month 29th, I fear there may be wrong impressions formed in the minds of Friends as to the healthfulness of the island, and the advisability of sending workers into that and other of the West Indies.

I have visited Jamaica twice in the last four years, and am somewhat familiar both with the conditions existing there and our mission work. As Dr. Nicholson has expressed, "deep sorrow has filled all our hearts" on account of the death of our workers, but looking at it from a practical point of view, in the light of our call and commission to that field, we are not discouraged. We are thankful for the health and contentment of our missionaries, some of whom enjoy better health than when in Iowa, and that but two in seventeen years have fallen asleep.

Since the commencement of the work, in 1881, twenty workers have been engaged in Jamaica on an average of three and one-half years each. Some have been there eight years. When we consider that only two of this number have died, and one native worker in this time, and but one has returned on account of failing health, it speaks much in favor of the conditions there, and the protection of our Father of His own.

I question if twenty workers had been engaged in Iowa or California for three and one-half years as constant and hard as have these in Jamaica, teaching twelve months in a year, preaching from six to ten times a week, conducting Bible classes, attending prayer meetings and candidates' classes, visiting the people, being out until 10 to 12 o'clock from three to five nights in the week, seeing the condition of the needy around them, "touched with a feeling of their infirmities," and planning and working to lift them up if the body would not have failed, and more than two of the twenty have "ceased from their labors."

In their efforts to accomplish results there is often an unwise zeal in missionaries that pushes them out beyond their physical ability. The church is somewhat responsible for this, as in presenting the open doors and needy fields before us some have seemed to get the thought that the heathen mind is readily reached, and a preacher would see greater results in foreign fields than at home.

The missionaries' thought, and the church's expectation, is to see great results accomplished in the first few years of his work.

As to the healthfulness of the island, I do not regard it an undesirable place to live; in fact, it may in many ways rival California in this regard.

There are very unhealthy localities, it is true, and, as in all tropical climates, there are diseases peculiar to that latitude, but many maladies that are dreaded in the north are unknown there.

Favorable localities abound for delightful homes, and one can live surrounded with beautiful scenery and healthful conditions. Jamaica offers to the business man and pleasure seeker wonderful opportunities for healthful and profitable employment, and one can live cheaply and pleasantly in this beautiful island.

I think if the doctor could diagnose the trouble he would change his prescription to rest or lighter work for the missionaries, rather than a removal of workers or discouraging others in going.

It is true that natives might not be as subject to malaria and tropical fevers as unacclimated persons; but I question if colored people from Iowa Yearly Meeting could stand the work better than our workers now on the field, and certainly none could do it so well. It is very much to be desired that native workers be used, and as soon as churches become self-supporting there should be native preachers ready to minister to them, but the Anglo-Saxons have a mission to the black people of the world that they cannot fill by proxy.

Then the question is not one of health or pleasant environments; but, has God called us to this field? Has He given the order to Iowa Yearly Meeting to occupy Jamaica, and to go from there to Cuba and Porto Rico? If so, we must go, and not regard the sacrifice—be it even the laying down of a beautiful life, a "sad waste of valuable material,"—but the sowing of seed for His harvest.

RECORDS OF AN ANCIENT MONTHLY MEETING.

Perhaps not the least remarkable and interesting record to the modern reader is the recital of Arthur Howland, written in the jail at Plymouth, and dated Fourth month 6th, 1684. Arthur Howland was one of the unflinching members of the Society in the Plymouth Colony. He had been led out from the forms and ceremonies of the church into profession with Friends, and in such a community a man of such characteristics would not be overlooked. His experiences are given in detail, and are worthy of perusal.

THE SUFFERINGS OF ARTHUR HOWLAND.

"About the beginning of the yeare 1679, the so called church of Marshfield, because of some scruples that were on my conscience I did refraine from partaking with them in that which they call there sacrament of bread and wine, took ocaction to be ofended with me & so to proceed according to there order, weh was as followeth—first they required me to come to the church meeting, the which I did at that time, although I tould them that I could not partake with ym without sining against my conscience. They tould me yt if I did not promise them to partake wth them & to come to their metting they should proseed to their sentance of excommunication against me. After this I sent a writing in answer to what they semed to lay to my charge, desiring that they would give me an answer in wrighting. Instead whereof Samuell Arnal, their teacher, & John borne, an emanient brother, came to speak with me, to perswade me to come to thare meeting on the first day of the weeke following & tould me yt the wrighting I had sent them gave ym more ground to proseed against mee of anything they had before, to weh I replied, when they prest me to come to thare meeting yt being they so sayd if they would ingage yt I should have liberty to read yt wrighting, & to speak to it in the periculers, of it in the publick congregation, I would come to metting. Samuell Arnalld answered come to metting, & I will ingage yt that wrighting shall not be read, nor you shall not speake to it. I answered, ym I thinke I shall not come. S. A. sayd, why? I said because if I should come it was like he would require me to pull off my hat & stand before the church, & seeing I did believe yet they had no ground from the scriptures for what they did, it would be no better to me than bowing to an idolle. Arnall replyd, come to metting & it is like I shall doe as you say, for thare was a man delt with in the church of bostan (Boston) & the man sat up in the gallerie, & ye minister required him to come downe & stand before the church & ye man refused, but the governoure sayd, Sarrow, come downe, or I will fetch you downe. To which I replied, if the governour should so command me, the which I did believe he would not, I should not obey him, unles he did it by forse, for I did not know yt he had any more power in the church than another man. Samuëll Arnold sayd it was honourably don of the governour to asiste the minester. So quickly after they proceeded to thare sentance in weh Samuall Arnold observed this order. I not being present he caled me by my name and, as he sayd, delivered me to Satan. When he had done yt he charged all his church members yt they should not eat or drink with me in common eating or drinking, then charged the neighbours of the towne that they should not carry femillerly (familiarly) to me, and for a close he prayed to his god, that the devill might be set to worke on me. (acursed prayer it being against the end for which the Lord Jesus came into the world—John 3-x.) These remarks in parenthesis are Arthur Howland's.

When they had thus accomplished there matters with me they then begune with my wife, she being unsatisfied with their proseding with me, desired that they would show her some rule in the scriptures for their actings, they did implisibly perswade her not to eat or drinke with me, — samuëll arnald did severall times positively urge her to, and tould her it would be her honor to doe as Levi did, as it is written in the 32 Exodus 27, 28. This not satisfying her she withdrew from them & tould them yt if they would not or could not produce some cleare scripture rule for what they had done to her husband, she could not pertake with them in that which she thought was such an unchristian act without sinning against her conscience, the which they never did, nor indeed could doe, for thare was not three of them yt agreed together for what it was that they * * * * so sensured me, & the greater part of them knew not for what it was, thare being as they accounted but two officers in thare church & they were in absolute contraydiction one to the other, one saying yt it was for that, yt the other said he allowed should be mentioned.

"Some of thare church said it was because I payed the minester no better; but to satisfye her once for all they as far as they had power gave her to the devill tow (too).

"But notwithstanding thare so curssing us and refuseing to eat & drinke with us in the 3 month, 1682, one richard french (French) cunstable, for the rate of samuëll Arnold aforesaid came to our house & tooke away our putter (pewter) scarce leaving us a convenient dish or bason to eat our vittels in. Again in the year 1684, the 22 day of ye 3 month the constable with John borne above mentioned came to my house & made demand of 15 shilling & 3 pence for the said arnalds rate for preaching the year that was past, & because I refused to pay it he seased on my person to carry me to prison, & one the 4 day of the forth month following, I was by the constable aforesaid without any hearing at all put up in the common goale & thare am not allowed nether bread nor water, nor anything to lye on but the floor, nor anything to cover me with, nor liberty to goe with the gayler to any other house to get anything for my mony to sustaine (sustain) nature, nor so much as fire, by there order —this is a true account of thare proseedings with us —to the which we have set our hands.

"Arthur howland.

"Elisebeth howland.

"Plymouth goale this the 6 day of the 4 mth, 1684."

Arthur Howland, above mentioned, was the son of Arthur Howland, Senior, who had deceased in the Tenth month, 1675. His wife, Elizabeth, was the daughter of Governor Thomas Prince of Plymouth. He was at this time, 1679, about 33 years of age, and his wife Elizabeth presumably younger. They had a family of children, the eldest not over eleven years old.

Arthur Howland, the father, now deceased, had sympathized with Friends, as early as 1657, and his lot had been one of hardship and persecution. His house at Marshfield had been a resort for traveling Friends, and, in the language of the day, he was said to have "entertayned the forraigne Quakers, who were goeing too and frow producing great disturbance."

The foregoing extracts will serve to show the character of what Friends endured in the old times.

THE RELIGION THAT SINGS.

Christianity is the religion that sings. Atheism has no songs; agnosticism is not tuneful. We have never heard of a Brahmanic hymnal or a Confucian psalmody. The meters of heathendom or savagery, so far as paganism is vocal at all, are not once to be compared with the lively heartiness, with the freeness, fullness and depth of Christian song. There is a spontaneity and abandon to the singing of Christians that is sadly lacking in any of the musical exercises of paganism. The believer in Jesus explains his own songfulness in the conclusive question: "How can I keep from singing?"

Christianity is not only a religion that sings, but also it is the religion that sings. No other faith is so the cult of carols and the school of praise. The Christian sings because he has something to sing about. The believer's face is aglow with joy and his speech inevitably quickens into song. When Jesus Christ put himself into the world He put a song into it also. By saving men He saved their music, too. And so ever and everywhere the religion of Jesus is a cult of hope, of brave joy, of cheery optimism.

Christian faith already puts the heaven to which it is going into its earthly phraseologies and psalmodies. It elevates song while it quickens it. It inspires a poetry which is peerless. Atheism is dumb, but there is music to Christianity. Skepticism is not singable, but Christ to-day is leading the grandest choruses of the world. English literature is already full of the lyrics of the Christ, while the poets are still searching for new tributes to bring to His name.—"New York Observer."

CHRIST AND NICODEMUS.

John 3: 1-16.

GOLDEN TEXT.—For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life.—John 3: 16.

After the marriage at Cana, Jesus went to Capernaum, where he remained a short time, and then went to Jerusalem to be at the Passover (John 2: 12, 13). At Jerusalem the interview with Nicodemus took place.

This interview is described only by John. This is the first discourse of Christ of which there is any record. It was doubtless given before he had explained fully, even to his disciples, the Gospel principles. It should also be remembered that Nicodemus was a Pharisee, a strict Jew, and probably, as a Pharisee, laid much emphasis on formal observances. He must have been a well educated man, and a man of influence; he was a member of the Sanhedrin, and also probably a man of property (John 7: 50; 19: 39). He is not mentioned or referred to by the other evangelists. Verses 23-25 of chapter 2 should be read, as they have a close connection with the lesson.

1. "Pharisees." While there was much formalism among this sect, there was also much life and spiritual discernment. "Ruler." Not political but ecclesiastical.

2. "By night." Why? Many say from "fear of the Jews," as in John 19: 38, 39. But, if so, the evangelist would doubtless have mentioned it, and it must be remembered that this was early in the ministry of Christ before there was any pronounced opposition to him. It was quite natural that Nicodemus should not have wished to commit himself by openly visiting the new teacher; or he may have desired a quiet time for an interview. "We." Probably referring not to himself only, but to other Pharisees as well. "Teacher come from God." Possibly equivalent to "a prophet." "Miracles." Signs. These signs, in their view, could only have been performed by a divinely commissioned man; therefore, Christ was such. Nicodemus practically asks Jesus what doctrine he holds. Christ practically answers: It is not doctrine you need, but a new life. He replies to the thoughts rather than to the words.

"Verily, verily." Words used to indicate the importance of what follows. "Again." "Anew" (Revised Version). "From above." The original may mean any one of these—and implies all of them. The meaning is: It is not doctrine; it is not practice, but a new spiritual life that is necessary before one can comprehend what the kingdom of God is. There must be an inward change comparable to birth. "Except a man." The expression is universal—it takes in the Jew as well as the Gentile.

4. It seems quite out of the way to suppose that Nicodemus understood Christ to mean a physical birth. He was an educated, intelligent man. What he doubtless meant was: Can a man be changed when he is old—when his character and habits are formed? No! It is as impossible as a second physical birth.

5. "Water and the Spirit." Many—perhaps most commentators—think water baptism is meant. If so, it proves too much, as it would make water baptism necessary to salvation—a doctrine which few Protestants at least believe. Such a doctrine is contrary to the spirit of the whole Gospel. If baptism is needful, how can the words to the thief on the cross be explained? That baptism is not necessary for the gift of the Holy Spirit is clear from the case of Cornelius; and that it does not give the Holy Spirit is clear from the case of Simon Magus. There is no record of the baptism of any of the Twelve, and we are expressly told that Jesus himself baptized not (John 4: 2). The baptism of the Gospel is that with fire and the Holy Ghost. Water is often used as a symbol of purification, and it is this which is meant. Compare Ezek. 36: 25-27; Titus 3: 5; Ps. 51: 10.

The meaning, therefore, is: Unless the heart is cleansed and renewed by the Holy Spirit it is impossible to become a citizen of the kingdom of God. The verse is another way of expressing verse 3.

6. "Flesh." The whole human nature. A dog inherits the characteristics of a dog, and he cannot be a horse; so no natural power can give a man spiritual life. Spirit must come from spirit.

7. "Must be." It is a necessity. "Ye." Emphatic; even ye Pharisees.

8. "The wind," etc. The effects of the wind are very evident, but it itself cannot be seen. So with the Spirit—the effects of spiritual birth are very clear, but how they are brought about we cannot understand. Note that no water is mentioned in this verse; in fact, the whole meaning is against any outward instrument or symbol.

9. This was new doctrine to the learned Pharisee, and inexplicable.

10. "Master." In the same sense as schoolmaster. "The Teacher" (Revised Version). Implying that Nicodemus was a well-known man.

11. "We." It is not clear to whom the pronoun refers—probably it is to Jesus and his disciples. "Ye." The Jews.

12. "Earthly things." Those which belong to the earth or which take place on the earth, as contrasted with spiritual things. Spiritual birth, it is true, does take place on the earth, but how it takes place we cannot understand. We see that a plant grows, but how it grows we do not know. We plant a grain of wheat, but why it does not come up rye or corn, we cannot tell.

13. No living man has been to heaven and come down to explain these things; only Christ, who came out of heaven, can explain them.

14. In this verse Christ, while not revealing the "how," describes the way. Just as the brazen serpent was made in the likeness of the fiery serpents, so Christ was made in the likeness of sinful man. See

Num. 21: 4-9. "Must." Why? No explanation is given here, nor directly elsewhere. It is a great fact to be believed and accepted. Luke 24: 26; Heb. 2: 9, 10.

15. "Whosoever." This includes everybody. "Perish." From the effect of sin.

16. Comment hardly seems needful on this verse—it is the essence of the Gospel. Note that it was on account of God's love for man that he gave His Son. The one condition on man's side is belief—faith. It was a small thing to look at the brazen serpent, but unless the Israelite looked, he was not healed; it is a little thing, in one sense, to believe, but the change of mind must be made. It is at once the simplest and the most difficult thing for a man to do. Faith alone will bring salvation.

Note.—Some excellent commentators believe that the discourse with Nicodemus ends with verse 15, and that what follows is the explanation of John. In either case it is the teaching of Christ.

PRACTICAL THOUGHTS.

1. Position, education, authority, useful as they are, will not save.
2. "Without faith it is impossible to please God."
3. "Whosoever will, may come."

SILENCE ABOUT OURSELVES.

Think as little as possible about any good in yourself; turn your eyes from any view of your requirements, your influence, your plans, your success, your following—above all, speak as little as possible about yourself. The inordinateness of our self-love makes speech about ourselves like the putting of a lighted torch to the dry wood which has been laid in order for burning. Nothing but duty should open our lips upon this dangerous theme, except it be in humble confession of our sinfulness before God.

Again, be specially on the watch against those little tricks by which the vain man seeks to bring round the conversation to himself, and gain the praise or notice which his thirsty ears drink in so greedily. Even if praise comes unsought, it is well, while men are uttering it, to guard yourself by thinking of some secret cause for humbling yourself inwardly to God, thinking unto what these pleasant accents would be changed if all that is known to God, and even to yourself, stood revealed to you.

Place yourself often beneath the cross of Calvary; see that light of love and sorrow; hear those words of wonder; look at the eternal Son humbling there for you, and ask yourself, as you gaze fixedly on Him, whether he whose only hope is in that cross of absolute self-sacrifice and self-abasement can dare to cherish in himself one self-complacent action. Let the Master's words ring ever in your ears, "How can ye believe who receive honor one of another, and seek not the honor that cometh from God only?"—Bishop Wilberforce.

Seventh-day, First month 21st. Education and prayer. Jas. 1: 5-8.

The nineteenth psalm has been chosen for the Scripture lesson of the week because it emphasizes the supremely important truth that the revelation of God in the material universe, and the revelation in His word, are one in nature and purpose. There is no conflict between science and revelation. That which appears so is only imperfect knowledge or understanding of the one or the other, or of both, and the remedy for this is not more ignorance, but more knowledge. Science is but another name for the orderly thought of the eternal Word, one Christ, by whom the worlds were made, and who "upholdeth all things by the word of his power."

The colleges of our country are the expression of the Christian thought as to the value of education. Most of them owe their origin directly to Christian beneficence, and even state institutions are indirectly the outgrowth of the same conviction.

All things considered, the higher educational institutions of our country are more thoroughly Christian in sentiment to-day than ever before. A larger proportion of the students are sincerely religious, and the moral tone of the entire body of students is healthier. Much of this is due to the magnificent work of the Young Men's and Young Women's Christian Associations; much also to the Endeavor movement that has led these young people to Christ before they entered college.

What can we better do in connection with this topic than to specially remember our own denominational colleges and seminaries? We need to pray that they may be fountains of intellectual and spiritual inspiration; the creators of highest ideals of life and service for God and man. It is already the crowning glory of many of them that few students reach their commencement day without having become avowedly Christian in character. Some of these institutions are fostering a trend toward missionary work and toward the preaching of the Gospel that speaks most hopefully for the future. The moral character as well as the intellectual fitness of scores of these graduates have given them a large place in the educational, professional and business world.

It is an inspiration to pray for these institutions when we remember what has already been accomplished. God has answered prayer. He will answer again. Let us pray without suspicious unbelief. It is the fashion of a few of our ministers to decry our educational institutions, professedly in the interests of a deeper spirituality. But such a spirituality, however intense it may be for a time, is too narrow for a healthful, vigorous church. In time it will utterly defeat itself. It appeals to only one class of mind; it will make a church of only one type of thought and action; it will develop fanaticism, and be the battlefield of the fiercest religious passions that cannot be stilled because of the lack of that broader outlook upon life which education supplies.

Let us pray for our colleges specially. Several of them are in sore financial straits. Without speedy help it appears as though their work must be suspended, if not permanently abandoned. Two or three in the greatest need are among the most important in view of their location and work. The life of some of our Yearly Meetings practically depends upon the educational institutions connected with them. It is hereby earnestly urged that in every Yearly Meeting Christian Endeavor Societies remember specially their own college or higher educational institutions in the prayer meeting.

A new department, recently introduced in most of our colleges, provides opportunity for training for Christian work by the study of the Bible, church history and Christian doctrine. One at least of these has been in operation long enough to produce results that fully justify the course pursued. Pray for this department in every college, that it may give to the church a host of trained workers whose zeal and knowledge are equal.

MISSIONARY ITEMS.

From Nancy Lee, Principal of Girls' School at Victoria, Mexico: "We have twelve boarders in the house, and more are expected soon. There are also twenty-three day students. A number of these have not been in the school before, and there is quite a number of the former pupils that have not come in yet, but will do so. Some have not yet sufficiently recovered from the yellow fever."

From W. I. Kelsey, Victoria, Mexico: "The Lord is surely blessing us in many ways. All our services are much better attended than ever before. Over sixty were at the midweek prayer meeting last evening. At the close of the meeting two young men from the State College arose, expressing a desire to become Christians. Also a middle-aged man, who professed conversion in our parlor two days since, rose to his feet. At the close of the meeting the two young men and two of their companions came forward and signed the Associate Christian Endeavor pledge. The young men from the college are taking a great interest in our meetings lately.

"We have opened a room next door for recreation and study for our boys and young men. Many of the young fellows who come here to college are lost every year by getting into bad company in the saloons and billiard halls. Our object is to compete with these evil influences, and give the boys a chance. We have subscribed among ourselves enough to cover running expenses,—i.e., rent, light, and care of building. We opened it on the 13th inst., and it has been a 'booming success' ever since. The boys flock in of nights as if it were the only place in town. I counted twenty-five who were there at one time Saturday evening. To furnish it we borrowed chairs, tables, lamps, and several have contributed books to the library. We have a pretty good supply of periodicals from our exchange table. We will need some games as soon as possible, such as checkers, chess, dominoes, parlor croquet, etc. Also we must replace the borrowed furniture with that belonging to us.

"We also need a small sum, say $7.00, to buy one hundred copies of the Moody Colportage library for sale to English-speaking people here in Mexico. They are just the thing for the railroad men that we meet here. I think we can get the railroad newsmen to handle them also. Many Mexicans, who can speak English, will also be glad to get them, in order to practice in reading English. They will do great good in counteracting the influence of French infidel books, which are widely circulated. Once started, we can go on handling them indefinitely, for we will sell them and buy again."

Editor's Note.—I am heartily glad to endorse these requests of W. I. Kelsey, both for the room for young men and for the books. The movement for young men is of far-reaching significance, and is unique in the history of our work in Mexico. The proximity of the State College, and W. I. Kelsey's friendly relations with the authorities, gives us an open door here for great influence. The book matter is also important. This literature is unknown in that part of Mexico, and will do great good.

I will agree to receive and forward any amounts that may be placed in my hands for these special objects. Send by check or post office order to my address as given at the head of this department.

BOOK NOTICE.

"Thy Friend Dorothy." By Amy E. Blanchard. Philadelphia, George W. Jacobs & Co. The scene of this pretty story is laid in and near Philadelphia during the time of William Penn. The heroine, Dorothy James, leaves her English home to be with her mother, who has lately become a Friend, and has fled to America so that she may worship God in the way she has chosen. Dorothy has many adventures in the New World; among them is the finding of a cousin whose existence was unknown to the family. Jasper, her English lover, comes to America to ask her to be his wife; he returns to England, and when coming again to claim her is taken by pirates. Her mother is dead when he finally reaches America, and they return to her English home to be married. The story is pleasant, and though somewhat improbable, gives an interesting picture of the life of the settlers of Pennsylvania.

THE PRESIDENT OF THE FRIENDS' INTERNATIONAL CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR SOCIETY.

From time to time our Christian Endeavorers have had an opportunity to become somewhat acquainted with our President. We have learned who he was,

and where he has been, and what he has done. As I go from place to place I find that you are not at all satisfied with this, but want to know him better. If you will come and go with me we will go to Des Moines, Iowa. We will climb the hill and go around the State Capitol Building, and on Capitol Avenue to 1339, and here I will take great pleasure in introducing to you Charles S. Sweet, his amiable wife and little son. Young people always have a welcome place in their home, and a warm place in their hearts. We would all be glad to stay and visit some time, but our stay is short, and we want to learn all we can about our President, and what he wants to help accomplish during the coming year. Therefore, we will repair to the library, which, by the way, is one of the best owned by any of our western ministers, and get a little outline of the work. He tells us that our work for the coming year has three especial phases. The first is special mission work and Bible study; but as this is a large subject he asks us to call upon our Missionary Superintendent, Gilbert Bowles, of Penn College, Oskaloosa, on our way east, and he will tell us all about this department of the work. The second phase is systematic giving. In order to bring about this needed reform we must first do more Bible studying, and distribute tracts on the subject, which are to be secured from the United Christian Endeavor Supply House, become members of, and secure members for, the Tenth Legion, and to agitate this whole subject by personal work and public addresses. The third phase of the work is to deepen our spiritual life by observing the "Quiet Hour." He says, as Quakers, we ought to already know about this department, but for further information, literature, etc., we can get our supplies from the United Christian Endeavor Society. We have now had a number of outlines of the work for the coming year, and we have all been made to feel that our President knows what he is talking about. He is a man of broad experience in Sabbath School work, as well as in Christian Endeavor work. The Iowa State Christian Endeavor Association recognized so thoroughly his real worth in this line, that he has been elected for the second time as President of this organization. This work takes a large amount of his time, as he is energetically pushing this year the organization of County Christian Endeavor Unions. He has tried to make the connection between the individual societies of the county, state, and district organizations perfect. He has tried to enthuse these societies with the necessity of a deep spiritual life and that we must go beyond the form into the spirit. Besides all the weight of these two great organizations, Charles Sweet is pastor of the Des Moines Meeting, which has a membership of over two hundred, a Sabbath School of eighty, and a Christian Endeavor Society of thirty. We give herewith a little cut of the Des Moines Meeting House. The following ministers have labored in this place in former years: Isom P. Wooton, Reuben H. Hartley, John Pennington, William S. Wooton, Charles Reynolds, Truman Kenworthy, and Eli Reece; John Henry Douglas, Rebecca Naylor, and others have been resident ministers. As our time is up we must hasten on to see the city, and at another time we shall visit some more of our Christian Endeavor Union officers.

PYNE POYNT MEETING.

BY JOHN B. WOOD.

Paul, speaking to the Corinthians, says, "If therefore the whole church be come together," and speak in unknown tongue they may be thought mad, "but if all prophesy," those coming in may be convinced and turned to God. It will be interesting to our friends living in North Carolina and the West to know that we have such a meeting at Pyne Poynt, Camden, N. J., which is held after this most orthodox manner, and which God is most eminently blessing, and to which they will always be welcome, especially if they have messages to us from the Lord. The responsibility of the meeting falls upon ourselves, and Ellen Woody, who is librarian of Pyne Poynt Library, in whose room the meeting is held. In answer to our prayers some one seems to be sent to do the necessary work, for we ourselves seem to be physically shelved from doing much.

George Rose, who worked for many years for Joseph Sturge, at Birmingham, England, and who seems to have seen the truths of Friends' beliefs very plainly, has been introduced to us through these meetings. This has paid for all the trouble and expense they have caused us, and we are sure others have very much profited besides. I was writing to John C. Havemeyer a few days ago regarding George Rose, and, as the letter lengthened as the thoughts flowed, possibly it will interest others. It was as follows:

"Through our meetings I have become acquainted with such a remarkable man—George Rose by name—that I wish to write you about him that you may rejoice with me that God has servants living at the present time. He came to the front door one day. I answered his inquiry for myself, and his first salutation was when he found who it was, 'The Lord bless you!' I quickly responded, 'For what?' His age and general shabby appearance were not very encouraging; still, after an hour of entertainment I could not resist the temptation to ask him to dinner. I should have explained to my family before what a temple of the Holy Ghost I had found. This is a portion of the account of himself which I obtained in that hour. He is an Englishman from near Birmingham; as a very young man he was an extremely bad, dissolute fellow, but some one asked him to go to church one day. He had no clothes but the one suit in which he worked, so he borrowed some clothing, and, it being about twice his size, he was conspicuous enough upon entering the house to make them take him to the front seat. The prodigal son was preached with power, and he went home to tell his wife that she had been telling the preacher about him, and he despised and hated her for so doing. When she convinced him that she knew nothing about the preacher he came to the conclusion that his employer had been telling of him and he quieted down. The next day he was ready to fight his employer for doing such an unmanly thing as to tell the preacher all about him. His employer soon saw through the case and completely stumped him by reminding him that he himself did not know him well enough to inform the preacher of his past life. George Rose was converted, and went on trying to do good and live a changed life in his own strength, but it was not a success. After six weeks of hard work he was about to give it up and go back to a drunken life. As he was going on the highway one night a voice suddenly spoke to him: 'Do thyself no harm.' 'Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved.' Then the Lord told him that he would keep him, that it was a matter of faith in him. George answered that he would stay there all night till he got the full assurance that God would keep him. In about a half hour the power came, such a glorious light all around him, he laughed and jumped and shouted. He was so satisfied with the Holy Spirit that he just shouted and praised God for several hours, and when he returned home his wife would not stay with him; she told the people that he was crazy, and it was a long time before she would become pacified.

"From that hour he seems to have been filled with the Holy Spirit. God sent him two years after this to tell a man who claimed he was an infidel that he would die the next day. Under George's ministrations he was converted that night and told a man the next day that he would be in the Sunday-school class, but in the evening he fell dead in the street on his way home. I could fill pages of what he has told me of the Lord's goodness, and what he has accomplished through him, but what I especially wanted to tell you about was his sickness last spring. He is now in his eightieth year, and for several weeks last May he lay at the point of death, being fed on ice only; all his friends and relatives had been to say good-by for the present, and he had no other idea than that he would pass away in a few days. He says that he had daily sweet communion with the Lord. He often rises at about twelve o'clock, midnight, dresses, and spends two or three hours drinking in what the Lord has to say to him, so it was no new thing when he heard the remark, 'How long was the man laying at the pool of Siloam?' He says that when this came to him he was not thinking about it at all, but he quickly answered, 'Thirty-eight years, Lord.' Then came the question, 'How long did it take me to cure him?' 'Instantaneous!' he replied. 'Well, then, get up and dress,' and he immediately obeyed. His family had just gone down to breakfast, and they thought it must be his ghost when he came walking into the room, but he danced around the room like a boy and showed them that he was perfectly strong. The neighbors, seeing the window of his room open, came in to mourn with the family, but the whole neighborhood was soon turned into rejoicing.

"He has visited me several times since. I have been laid up for a week and have spent thereby several hours with him. He has never-ending accounts of conversions under his labors. It is wonderful how God uses some men, and with George Rose very often as the results of a few words sent home by the Holy Spirit, and dictated by Him. Once in England, he told me, about 1864, at a place called Cannuck, seven miles from Birmingham, he attended a church as 'dead as death,' and with very small audience. He ran out in the street and cried 'fire! fire! fire!' which soon brought the people out, and when they asked him where? he replied, in 'hell, for all those who forget God.' They soon had a revival, and so many were converted that within a year they built a nice brick church there. He lives at 823 Penn Street, Camden, N. J. We consider it a great favor to have him call upon us."

ANNALS OF OUR BIBLE CLASS.—VIII.

BY ONE OF US.

For the past three weeks a drill on the temple of Herod has constituted a part of our regular class exercises. Our teacher insists upon thoroughness in this topic, as a superficial knowledge would leave us with a confused impression of the various courts and porches, and in constant uncertainty when we come to temple allusions. Each member of the class was asked to draw a diagram, and this has been especially helpful in fixing the location of the different apartments. Josephine, one of our most skillful artists, drew a clear outline on the blackboard which has been before us in our reviews. She also prepared for her own use an exquisite copy of Hurlbut's large diagram, and delicately tinted it and had it neatly framed. The drawing of maps and diagrams seems formidable at first, but it is most satisfactory in the end, and almost indispensable to the study of the life of Christ.

We have now come to the more lengthy discourses, and shall have to pass rapidly over incidents and miracles, giving ourselves mainly to the Gospel of the kingdom. For two weeks we have been in the Sermon on the Mount, cropping the surface of this luxuriant pasture-land of spiritual truth, and trying by the light of the Holy Spirit to go down deeper into the roots of its meaning.

At this stage of our work we have begun the difficult but interesting task of outlining the figure of the Divine Teacher against the background of His times, and of sketching, from the words of His ministry, the ideal citizen of His kingdom. The Sermon on the Mount covers the ground for the latter, and we depend upon the next quiz to more fully bring it out.

Stalker, in speaking of the study of Scripture biography, says "that for inspiration it must embrace the life of a man from beginning to end; it must understand the time which produced him, and the circumstances against which he had to react. We must read about the man till we see the world of his day, and him moving in it; we must learn to catch his tone and accent. Then he is ours; he will walk with us; he will speak to us; he will be our companion and friend." The substance of this suggestion has long been a working principle in our Bible class, and is capable of large application in our present course, but not without a measure of qualification, inasmuch as Jesus Christ was not the product of His age, nor a mere man, but was co-eternal with the Father, incarnated in human form, and revealed in the fulness of time as the world's Redeemer. For the study of a personality like this, the student of biography finds no parallel, and yet the Son of God impressed Himself upon those about Him through the medium of His Spirit-filled humanity, and we are distinctly told that He left us an example that we should follow His steps. John says, "He that saith he abideth in Him ought himself also so to walk even as He walked," and here we have the highest sanction for the reverent study of His "example" and His "walk," His character, His methods and His spirit.

Of His times it is said, "There never was an age more dry and barren than that in which He was born," and its religious teaching is spoken of as the "deadest and driest system of theology that has ever passed in any age for religion."

There was a remnant of devout spirits, like Simeon and Anna, who witnessed for God and waited for the consolation of Israel, but the masses of the people were blind followers of blind leaders, and the clear ring of prophetic utterance, like that of an Isaiah or Jeremiah, had been for nearly four centuries a forgotten sound. The Hebrew religion had apparently lost its soul, and Pharisaism, with its self-righteous exclusiveness, its ritualism and its bondage to legality, was dominating the religious thought of Palestine. Rabbinic teaching was occupied with endless quibbles and distinctions, and the preaching of the scribes was largely the quotation of authorities with none of the freshness of true Biblical exposition.

Greed and sharp practice characterized business life even among them that made the loudest profession of religion, and in society a man was valued according to the circumstances of fortune, or for his knowledge of the law and punctilious observance of its exactions, while the common people, who knew not the law, were counted as accursed. Such was the moral and religious state of the country against which the Divine Master had to "react" in the period of His earthly ministry.

The pen of Christian scholarship has rendered it comparatively easy for us to see the world of His day, but to "see Him moving in it" as He really was, taxes our imagination to the utmost, because in all human history there never was a being like Him.

Imagine, if possible, one in human form coming into earthly existence with no inherited disabilities, and passing in unsullied purity from infancy to manhood to enter upon such a mission in such an age. Try to think how His life, unfolded during those thirty years of preparation, and of how he must have been impressed by the world about Him. Think of His education in a Jewish home, and of what it was to study the sacred Scriptures with a vision undimmed by any mist of sin; to grow in wisdom and stature, and yet have no misapprehension; to look out upon a disordered world of hollowness, and vice, and sorrow, and suffering, through sinless eyes, and to feel, with unblunted sensibilities, its agony and its need; to come to His divine ministry with standards in all respects the absolute standards of truth; to have convictions clear as the light, and a heart burning for the salvation of men; and all this intensified, as He stood on the threshold of His work, by the unmeasured anointing of the Holy Ghost.

In place of its being difficult to conceive of how the whole land was stirred under the ministry of such a preacher, the wonder is that anyone could withstand it. How vital truth must have burned and glowed in that dead atmosphere as it issued from His lips! Not more directly did all the Roman roads lead to the golden milestone than did all the teachings of this great Master lead to the heart as the moral centre of the life—the fountain which must first be cleansed before the streams of outward conduct can become pure. Nothing could have been more absolutely opposite to the religious teaching of the Rabbis, or more offensive to the externalism of the Pharisees or more awakening to the unprejudiced mind and conscience of the common people. He dealt not in abstractions, but gave out truth in the concrete, and touched men spiritually where they lived. In place of quoting learned authorities He spoke as one having authority in Himself, and not as the scribes. And the astonished multitudes said, with a meaning deeper than they knew, that “never man spake like this man.”

Thus have we begun, in accordance with Stalker's suggestion, to “catch His tone and accent,” to transport ourselves into the midst of the crowds that hung upon His words, to feel the stir of the moral atmosphere as it quivered under the hot bolts that pierced its empty shams, and to feel the power of that matchless personality that was majestic in moral elevation,—as tender as it was strong, and as strong as it was tender. But after all we realize how exceptional is the task, and how unable we are to make the Man of Galilee real to us by the mere processes of study and of fancy. He is not merely a historic character to be summoned from the dead past, but the risen and ascended Christ, who is alive forevermore. Through the Word, and by revelation of the Holy Spirit, He manifests Himself personally to-day to the heart of the believer, and far beyond the thought of the sentiments quoted above. He is ours, and walks with us and speaks to us, and is our companion and friend.

He will keep the feet of his saints, and the wicked shall be silent in darkness; for by strength shall no man prevail.—1 Sam. 2: 9.

HARD PRESSED.

How precious are the words of the forty-second Psalm. How many hearts find comfort in them. How perfectly they express the experience of a Christian in trouble. For Christians do have trouble. It is purely sentimental to say they have not, or they should not. They do; and they must, as long as they live on the earth, of which it is written, “Thorns and thistles shall it bring forth unto thee.” Thorns pierced the brow of Jesus. They will pierce the heart of His people until they go to the land where there is “no more curse.”

David was in trouble; he said, “O my God, my soul is cast down within me; all Thy waves and Thy billows are gone over me.” He was in such trouble that people looking on asked him what had become of his God—the God whom he had served and loved and trusted—that He could allow him to be so hard pressed with afflictions.

This is frequently the sorest part of a Christian's trouble—the question which the adversary is always thrusting upon him: “Why does not your God relieve you of these distressing burdens, take away your pain, and make your life comfortable, as He has the power to do?” Friends often try his faith in the same way. They say: “It is a great mystery that God should let you suffer so. Why does He not hear prayer and send relief, for you surely love Him?” Yes, the beloved of the Lord are encompassed about with sorrows, and it is no evidence that they are not His beloved if in a moment when some great billow almost sweeps them from their feet they cry out, like David, “Why hast Thou forgotten me?”

But there is a bright side to the sorrows of a Christian. Besides the comfort of knowing that he has the sympathy of One who was tested in all points as we are, even to the extremity of saying, “My God, my God, why hast Thou forsaken me?” there is a blessing in the sorrow itself. David would probably never have cried out, “As the hart panteth after Thee, O God. My soul thirsteth for God, for the living God,” if his soul had never been cast down or disquieted within him. When the deer is hard pressed by his slayer, when the arrow has pierced him, and his heart's blood is hot with pain, he flies for the cooling water. So the heart distressed cries out to God, the only source of comfort, as it never did before the arrows pierced it. This is one reason—not the only reason, but it is one—why God permits His best beloved to wait long under heavy pressure of pain and disappointment.

Does Love, then, permit suffering simply to win love in return? No. Love seeketh not her own, but the highest good of the beloved. To find God, to know Him, is to slake the thirst of the soul, is to find the supreme blessedness. David said in the midst of his trouble, “His presence is salvation.” He called Him “the God of my life,” “the God of my strength,” “God, my exceeding joy.” His panting, thirsting soul, driven by its pain, found what, without it, it might have wholly missed.

News from the Field.

FOREIGN.

Dr. Thomas Hodgkin, of Bamburgh, England, widely known among Friends as the author of "George Fox," and known everywhere by his historical works, especially "Italy and Her Invaders," has the following letter in the "London Friend":

"To the Editor of 'The Friend.'"

"Dear Friend: Allow me to express my amazement and regret that 'The Friend' should be found apologizing for and extenuating the utterly unconstitutional and un-Christian procedure adopted in the case of Joel Bean and the other Friends of College Park Meeting.

"If no other Friend better qualified to deal with the subject shall take up the question, I intend to propose at next Yearly Meeting that we mark our sense of the wrong done to these dear friends by entering into direct epistolary communication with them ourselves. Thine truly,

THOMAS HODGKIN.

"Bamburgh, Belfort, 13th Twelfth month, 1898."

John F. Hanson has been continuing to hold meetings in Norway, but now finds it necessary to bring his labors there to a close for the present. Owing to poor accounts of his wife's health, our friend feels it desirable to return home as early as possible, though there is much openness among the people where he has been laboring and desire for further service, and he feels that his work in Norway is yet far from completed.

PHILADELPHIA YEARLY MEETING.

Philadelphia Monthly Meeting has given its approval to Joseph S. Elkinton to meet the 2,300 Dukhobors on their arrival at Halifax near the middle of the First month, and to hold a few meetings with them. He left Philadelphia for Halifax on the 5th.

The Friends' Temperance Association have arranged for the following meetings, with Jessie Ackerman, who has just returned from a trip around the world, as speaker: First month 9th, 8 o'clock p.m., Twelfth Street Meeting House; First month 12th, 8 o'clock p.m., West Chester; First month 13th, 8 o'clock p.m., Media; First month 14th, 8 o'clock p.m., Moorestown.

WALTER E. VAIL,

Chairman Committee on Meetings.

NEW ENGLAND YEARLY MEETING.

South Pittsfield, N. H.—Chas. H. Jones of Amesbury, Mass., accompanied by Perrin Reynolds, of New Paltz, N. Y., arrived here on the 17th of last month, and commenced meetings on the following day. Charles Jones felt called to his home on the 20th, leaving Perrin Reynolds in charge. Meetings were held nearly every evening, closing the 4th inst. While the attendance was not large, the preaching was in the demonstration and power of the Spirit, and we believe the church was much built up and strengthened. One evening was devoted to the subject of "Elementary Baptism." This was the largest evening session of the series. Our friend proved equal to the occasion, and gave a very able discourse. He left on the afternoon of the 5th inst. to attend Quarterly Meeting at Gonic, N. H. This is a needy field with a promising outlook, and we regret that our Brother could not have remained longer.

A. N. PEASLEE.

WESTERN YEARLY MEETING.

Marshall, Ind.—We have just closed a series of meetings at Friends' Union, six miles north of this place. There were 28 sessions in all. The power and leading of the Lord was wonderful. Souls were converted, backsliders reclaimed and believers built up. Henry W. Dalripple ably assisted in the meetings.

IRA CARTER.

Noblesville, Indiana.—T. J. Holding, of Westland, Indiana, commenced a series of meetings at Providence Meeting on Twelfth month 11th, and continued until the evening of the 24th—two meetings a day. The power of the Spirit was made manifest through his preaching. The church was much strengthened, backsliders reclaimed, and sinners converted; five new members added to the church. A strong effort is being made to secure Brother Holding to work with us regularly the coming year.

J. H. CAMMACK.

Gravelly Run.—A series of meetings, of two-weeks' duration, conducted by Myron T. Hartley, has just closed at this place.

The needs of the church at the present time, we believe, were fully met. The membership was wonderfully built up, and urged to steadfastness; workers were encouraged to press out with faith and trust in God.

As a result of the meetings there were several conversions, and there will be some accessions to the church. We voice the sentiments of the meeting when we say "Praise the Lord" for sending Brother Hartley this way.

C. W. PRITCHARD.

IOWA YEARLY MEETING.

F. M. George has moved from Salem, Oregon, to Paton, Iowa. Oregon Yearly Meeting has lost an efficient worker.

BALTIMORE YEARLY MEETING.

Corinth Meeting, Southampton County, Va.—Eli G. and Mary M. Parker, from Lynn Grove Monthly Meeting, Iowa, came to this place the 23d of Twelfth month, attended the Monthly Meeting here on the 24th, and commenced a series of meetings the next day, closing last night, the first of the new year, 1899. Meetings were held twice each day throughout the holidays, at 11 a.m. and 7 p.m. The attendance was good, and much interest was manifested by those who came to the meetings. The presence and power of the Holy Spirit was realized in a wonderful manner, and many were enabled to take definite steps of faith and consecration to God, who had never done so before. I believe a work has been accomplished that will tell throughout eternity. We praise the name of the Lord for sending his servants among us, who have not only proved a means of great blessing in the meetings, but have been a great help and encouragement to those whom they have visited in their homes. We pray the Lord's richest benediction may rest on our dear friends as they go to labor in other fields. They will visit families here for two or three days more, and then go to Black Creek Meeting, about seven miles distant, for a few days.

MILLS E. RAIFORD.

NEW ENGLAND YEARLY MEETING.

Uxbridge, Mass.—In response to the offer of the Uxbridge W. C. T. U. to send literature, I have received six applications. We have decided to send some first to the lumber regions of Northern Michigan, but we were interested in all the applications, and hope to send later some packages or boxes to some of the others.

ADELINE L. F. DANIELS.

INDIANA YEARLY MEETING.

Shirley, Ind.—Oliver P. Gottschall commenced a meeting at this place the 11th of Twelfth month last, continuing 13 days; 21 sessions in all were held. Our dear Brother was enabled to preach the gospel of Jesus Christ in the demonstration of the Spirit and of power, proving the deep things of God from the written word. The church, as far as it sought after blessings from God, was greatly edified and blessed, as well as others who attended. We believe it has and will result in great good to souls and that the cause of Christ will be advanced in this place. We do, indeed, praise the Lord that his messenger came this way, and our prayers accompany this faithful servant in the future work which God may call him into.

AMANDA E. BEESON.

Dear Endeavorers:—The sixth annual convention of Indiana Yearly Meeting Christian Endeavor Union will be held at Amboy, Ind., Second month 10, 11 and 12, 1899. The program is almost completed and promises to be one of the best ever yet given. The railroad companies have granted a one and one-third fare rate from all points in Indiana. Tickets on sale Second month 9th and 10th, with return limit, leaving Amboy, Second month 13th. These tickets are round trip. Please do not buy your ticket on the certificate plan expecting a return reduction. Every Christian Endeavor Society in the Yearly Meeting should be represented at this convention by at least one delegate, and just as many more as can attend. The Amboy Endeavorers will furnish free entertainment for all delegates. Those expecting to attend the convention should forward their names at least three days before the opening session to the chairman of the entertainment committee, Lewis McFarland, Amboy, Ind., so that homes can be assigned.

Yours for the work,
RICHARD HAWORTH.
Yearly Meeting President.

Barclay Jones, who has been for two years at Spiceland, Indiana, has gone to Traverse City, Mich., where he will labor for the coming year.

White Oak, Indiana.—On Third-day of Twelfth month E. S. Hinshaw, of Lynn, Indiana, commenced a series of meetings at White Oak Preparative Meeting, and was assisted by the pastor, C. M. Shawley.

The Gospel was preached in fullness, and there were fifty-one conversions and renewals, and others received the experience of sanctification; fourteen united with the meeting.

We are safe in saying there has been much lasting good done at White Oak in the name of the Lord, and we do highly appreciate it, and praise God for directing the brothers this way; for through their preaching there have been mothers, fathers and children sweetly saved in Jesus. The meetings closed Twelfth month 21st, having held two weeks and four days, two meetings a day, and the revival work is still going on in the hearts of His children. The meeting was a great blessing to the church.

SADIE UPTGRAFT.

KANSAS YEARLY MEETING.

Haworth, Kansas.—A three-weeks' series of meetings closed here on Twelfth month 22d, conducted by Elizabeth Butler, of Barclay, Kansas. The Gospel was preached in the power of the Holy Spirit. The sins of the people were unfolded until many were under deep conviction, and some were converted, and some were sanctified. We feel that the meetings have resulted in great blessing to many, and that the church has taken on new life in the name of the Lord, to whom all praise is due. Seven names were handed in for membership.

O. L. K.

Glen Elder, Kansas.—We were favored on New Year's Day to have present with us at both our morning and evening meetings Levi Reese and Gilbert Bowles of Oskaloosa, Iowa. In the morning meeting all present were benefited, encouraged and blest through the message of love and power given by our Brother Levi Reese. He preached from the commandment, "Be ye, therefore perfect, even as your father, which is in heaven, is perfect." He exhorted all to live up to their privileges and all could not but feel the message was of the Spirit. In the evening meeting Gilbert Bowles explained most impressively the need and purpose of the "Quiet Hour for Endeavorers." The chief points he made were: "We need each day power equal to the duties we have to perform and the temptations we must meet. We can get this power only by coming to the Source of All Power for it. We need to do this, if at all possible, before the day's duties begin. In a life with a purpose, power is essential in order to execute that purpose. Levi Reese followed with a most fitting message, founded upon the promise: "But ye shall receive power, after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you." All were much encouraged by the presence of these Friends and give thanks to the Father who brought them to us. Our new meeting house is now being built. It is to replace the one burned down four years ago. May the Lord constantly give us thankful hearts for His abundant blessings to us.

A FRIENDS' MEETING IN IDAHO.

Boise, Idaho.—The plans have been perfected for starting a meeting at this place; the house is nearing completion, and we hope soon to be at work. Most of our workers, however, will be from the Methodist Church, but very earnest Christians. We want our own literature. Please send THE AMERICAN FRIEND to me, and I will try to form a club, and remit the money. I have been working here, and shall continue the work until some younger person can be secured, for the work is too great for one that has passed the three-score years and ten. This is the first Friends' meeting in the state, and much depends upon its success. Very little is known of Friends, and the people need information.

AMANDA M. WAY.

TO LLOYD MIFFLIN.

Borne on thy sonnet-feathered wings I fly
To strange, vast realms immeasurable, where Imagination breeds her children fair,
That wake, with singing, Thought's remotest sky.

Then down to earth thou bringest me, and I lie
So sweetly close to every human care,
And breathe the joys of such ambrosial air,
That Love's seraphic host seems hovering nigh.

Where'er thou bearest me all beauties bide
With Art and Passion linked, while Music rolls
In cadenced billows on the spirit's shore.
O, Poet by the Susquehanna's side,
Take thou this heart-wrought song and all my soul's
Most faithful homage till my days are o'er.

EDWARD ROBESON TAYLOR.

[NOTE.—It is a pleasure to quote further from Dr. Taylor, who writes to Mr. Mifflin: "In all sincerity, I can say that the one hundred and fifty sonnets in 'At the Gates of Song' constitute such an amazing performance in sonnet art, that I know not where its equal can be found in English literature."]

UNKNOWN HEROINES.

Nor all heroines are to be found in story books. In our cities one of the sights, almost as common on the back streets as the newsboy in the business centre, is the little girl—she may be seven years old, she may be twelve—with a baby tossed over her shoulder. Thin, hungry-looking, often scantily clad, never playing herself, but always looking on at others having a good time, the little mother—the baby's elder sister—represents a life of devotion borne without complaint.

Every moment watching her charge, that would be a burden to an older person,—waiting longingly for the real mother to come home at night from her long day's work to give the relief which too often is not given,—the little mother is the embodiment of suffering fidelity that rarely fails to excite sympathy in the thoughtful observer.

Recently, in New York City, there was an alarm of fire in one of the crowded tenement regions. Great columns of smoke arose from the upper windows of an apartment-house, and when the engines arrived, a portion of the hallway was in flames. By this time most of the tenants were in the street. In one of the groups of families gathered there, a girl of nine suddenly clapped her hands to her head, and cried out:

"O mother! where's the baby?"

The mother had not thought of the child, as she had not been accustomed to care for it. She supposed that, as usual, the baby's older sister had it in charge, and instead of blaming herself for neglect, she blamed the little mother with hysterical severity.

"I thought you had him, mother," said the little girl, patiently, "but I can get him."

Before any one thought of stopping her, she darted past the firemen, and through the smoke coming from the door, into the burning building. Up two flights of stairs she staggered, groped for a familiar room, and there she found the baby. Thoughtless as usual for herself, she rolled him in thick blankets, and began the terrible descent to the street. By this time a fireman was sent to look for her, but was driven back by the smoke and flames. In intense excitement the crowd waited. The seconds seemed hours. When the little mother and her baby had been almost given up as lost, a figure shot through the smoke—through the crumbling door, and coming to the outer air, stood still. Strong arms hurried to support her, but she said simply: "Take the baby."

Although her hair was singed, and her face burning red with heat, she seemed to be miraculously preserved. There she stood and stared. Then a loud wail burst from her parched lips.

"Oh my! O mother! mother! What is the matter with me? I cannot see."

The fire had smitten the little heroine blind for life.

The same situation might call forth a similar brave deed of love in many a home. It should be remembered, however, that the noble act is no more of commendation than was the patient fidelity that went before it in the everyday service of the little heroine.—"Zion's Watchman."

THE BRIDGE WAS DONE.

Spurgeon was fond of this story, taken from our Civil War.

Once when the Union soldiers were retreating from the valley of Virginia, they burnt a bridge over the Shenandoah. Stonewall Jackson, who wanted to pursue them, sent for his old bridge-builder. "Sir," he said, "you must keep men at work all day and night, and finish that bridge by to-morrow morning. My engineer shall give you a plan." Old Miles saluted and withdrew.

Early the next morning the general sent for Miles again. "Well, sir," said Jackson, "did the engineer give you the plan for the bridge?"

"General," said the old man slowly, "the bridge is done; I don't know whether the picture is or not!"

Now that is the kind of bridge-builders Mr. Spurgeon said we want in the church; men to go right ahead with their own work, no matter what their neighbors are doing.

"It is the growing soul within the man
That makes the man grow,
Just as the fiery sap—the touch of God—
Careening through the tree dilates the bark,
So life deepening within us deepens all."

FOR THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

THE SILENT MEETING.

Sweet were those silent hours of old to me;
E'en when no dearer sound came to my ear
Than song of bird, and from the neighboring lea
The sheep bells' lonely tinkle, loved and clear;
When day-dreams mine sought but delight to roam
Along the brooks and wood hills of my home.

Yet now by wisdom of a deeper heart
Interpreting the silence of that hour,
Come peace and sweet communion, which impart
The purest in faith in Jesus' life and power,
Begetting hope and that calm blessedness
Which no high thought nor worldly dream can guess.

And pray I that my soul may oft again
In reverend hush stand face to face with God;
Through deeper worship, highest right to men
Know his own law for me; lest yet I trod
My brother's way unbid, and judge or say Things alien to the concord of His way.

Lest stay'd in rite and pomp I reap the shame
Which not in vain might curse the Vatican,
And Christ's eternal law and sweetest name
Grow dim behind the mystic creed of man.
But may God still my being baptize
Whence Christly word and deed like incense rise.

Gray, Indiana.

J. FRANK BOOTH.

Birth.

BROWN.—Born Twelfth month 29th, 1898, to E. Howard and Ruth E. Brown of Lynnvile, Iowa, a son.

Married.

BOWLES—PICKETT.—At Glen Elder, Kansas, on Twelfth month 31st, 1898, Gilbert Bowles, of Oskaloosa, Iowa, to Minnie M. Pickett, of Glen Elder, Kansas.

KIRK—TOWNSEND.—At the bride's residence in North Adams Street, Knightstown, Indiana, on Fourth-day, Twelfth month 28th, at 8 o'clock p.m., Allen T. Kirk to Asenath C. Townsend. About forty relatives and friends were in attendance, and after congratulations from all present, refreshments of cake, ice cream, fruits, etc., were amply supplied to all the guests.

HOBSON—HART.—At the home of the bride, near New London, Ind., Twelfth month 28th, 1898, Alfred S. Hobson to Zella L. Hart.

Died.

BENBOW.—William Benbow, son of Benjamin and Rachel Benbow, a native of Guilford County, N. C., departed this life suddenly on the morning of Eleventh month 9th, 1898, aged 61 years, 6 months and 23 days. He had a birthright membership in the Society of Friends, belonging to Cherry Grove Monthly Meeting at the time of his death. He was always warmly interested in all branches of church work, and faithful to maintain family worship. Never was his voice sweeter in prayer or fuller of divine inspiration than on the last morning he spent on earth. We deeply feel our loss, but believe that our loss is his eternal gain.

BRADFORD.—Wilbur Bradford died at West Liberty, Ill., aged nearly 21 years. He was a member of Bethel Meeting and of Pleasant Grove Quarterly Meeting. His funeral was largely at tended by the neighborhood, and the exercises were participated in by Friends, Methodists and Presbyterians.

DE LONG.—Ella Metcalf De Long, daughter of Fenton and Mary Metcalf, died Twelfth month 3d, 1898, aged 29 years. She was married to Frank De Long, Fourth month 8th, 1894. Having a birthright with Friends she was always loyal to the principles of Friends, although worshipping mostly with other denominations.

While passing through the holy ordeal of motherhood, the frail cord of life was broken, and when she learned she could no more perform the duties of an earthly mother, she earnestly prayed for her children and husband, and committed her soul to Him who gave it and fell asleep. She leaves a son three years old and an infant daughter.

HADLEY.—J. Marcus Hadley died very suddenly of grippe complications, at 51 North 59th Street, Philadelphia, Pa., Twelfth month 7th. He was a birthright member of Friends and was raised at Thorntown, Ind. After graduating at Earlham College, he accepted a fellowship in astronomy at the University of Pennsylvania, where he would have completed his work for a Ph.D. degree in a few months. He leaves a bereaved wife and a babe less than a year old. A sister of the deceased accompanied the sad and broken family to Thorntown, Ind., Twelfth month 8th. The life of this worthy Christian young man was spoken of very tenderly at Twelfth Street meeting last First-day.

HARRIS.—Matilda Harris, an aged Friend and early settler, was buried at Bangor, Iowa, Twelfth month 27th, 1898.

HODGIN.—David Hodgin died at his home near Centre, N. C., on the 17th of Twelfth month, 1898, aged 69 years. He was born in Guilford County, North Carolina, and had resided here nearly all his life. He attended New Garden boarding school in the early days of that institution, and then elsewhere obtained a good education. He was a teacher from his eighteenth year until about two years before his death, teaching in his native State and for some time in Indiana, at one time holding an important position in the Graded School of Greensboro. He was a man of unswerving integrity, conscientious as a citizen, with the courage to maintain his convictions in the face of opposition and danger. He was chosen to represent his County in the State Legislature, and there served with ability and faithfulness. He was truly Christian in all his relations in life, and the close was not unexpected. We have the comforting assurance that the day's work had been done in the day time and that he was ready for the Master's call. His wife, eight sons and three daughters survive him, of whom his wife and eight children are members of the Society of Friends.

MEREDITH.—Gertrude R., daughter of Charles O. and Angie G. Meredith, died at her home near Lynnville, Ia., Twelfth month 16th, 1898, aged 19 years 5 months and 11 days. She was a Friend all her life, an active Christian Endeavorer, and a Sabbath school scholar. Although the last three years of her life were years of extreme sufferings, she fully trusted in a Saviour who was able to save to the uttermost. She was a willing worker for the Master.

NEWLIN.—Elizabeth Newlin, daughter of Stephen and Jemima Kersey, died Twelfth month 20th, 1898, aged 67 years, 4 months and 9 days. She was a member of Bloomingdale Monthly Meeting of Friends in Parke County, Ind. She was married to Exum Newlin, Seventh month 1st, 1866. For several years she was an invalid and loved to read her Bible and THE AMERICAN FRIEND. Her last words were, "It is blessed." She was a great lover of nature and took much interest in raising flowers and giving them away to make others happy.

NEWLIN.—Roscilla R., daughter of Mahlon and Alice A. Newlin (the former deceased), departed this life Twelfth month 11th, 1898, in the fortieth year of her age. She was a member of Bloomingdale Monthly Meeting of Friends, Parke County, Indiana, and an earnest worker in the Sabbath School and in Christian Endeavor work. She was taken in the midst of usefulness, her last work being in the schoolroom; she had been a teacher in the public schools eighteen years.

News and Events.

Promptly at noon on the 1st inst. the American flag was raised over the palace and forts of Havana, thus signaling the formal transfer of the Pearl of the Antilles from Spain to the United States. The Spanish flag had been hauled down surreptitiously earlier in the day, thus saving the late Captain-General Castellanos from the humiliation of lowering Spain's colors at the final hour of surrender. The ceremonies accompanying the act of American possession were comparatively quiet and free from special enthusiasm. Most noteworthy, perhaps, was the lack of Cuban participation in the event, almost no display being made by the natives. This is said to have been due to the pique felt by General Gomez on the refusal of the United States to allow the surrender to be made jointly to himself on behalf of Cuba and to Major General Brooke on behalf of the United States.

Now that Cuba is fairly under the control of our government, the work of regeneration in this island, which for four centuries has been under Spanish misrule, must be seriously undertaken. Reformation in the collection of customs has already begun. Heretofore these have been the prey of corrupt officials, and by means of bribery and misrepresentation fortunes have been made through them at the expense of the consignee and the government. It is proposed that all collections from customs in the various cities shall be reported at Havana as a central station, and that the funds shall be distributed impartially for the betterment of the island. This has caused some misapprehension in the minds of the Cubans, and in Santiago monster mass meetings have been held, protesting against a policy which many feel will divert from that city the means by which thus far, under General Wood's able administration, such great improvements have been accomplished. It is sufficient to say that the system is the same as that which prevails in the United States. On a better apprehension of its actual workings Cuba will readily adjust herself to the measure.

In the Philippines it appears that our troubles are about to descend upon us with a vengeance. The insurgents are in control of the island of Panay, and are strongly entrenched in Iloilo, the capital of the island. A proclamation was recently issued to the Filipinos by President McKinley, through Major General Otis, which was in effect an ultimatum to the insurgents to lay down their arms and submit to the government of the United States. This was replied to by Aguinaldo in a manifesto in which, in bombastic terms, he holds firmly to the determination to gain the independence of the Philippines. He asserts that this has been his object all along, and that he has never intimated that he would submit to the control of this country. Major General Otis believes that Aguinaldo, who is hot-headed and revolutionary in the extreme, does not represent the better classes in the archipelago. There is danger, however, that we may yet have to fight those whom we would save from misrule, and in the event of this being so, it is the purpose of this government to keep in service, until the danger is passed, all of the volunteers not already mustered out.

The peace treaty was transmitted by the President to the Senate on the 4th, and it is probable that it will come up for consideration this week. The anti-expansionists promise to give the administration some trouble by delaying an early vote, but there appears to be a sufficient number of Senators in favor of the treaty to assure its passage without amendment.

The Republican caucus of the Pennsylvania Legislature last week named Matthew S. Quay to succeed himself as United States Senator. This action, however, does not ensure his support by all the Republicans in the Legislature, since fifty-five refused to participate in the caucus. Accordingly, at present the Senator is nineteen votes short of election. There appears to be a defection from Quayism, and it is strongly to be hoped that it may not suffer abatement. Common decency and morality require the retirement of such an unscrupulous politician as Quay has proved himself to be for so many years.

HULDA:

The Pentecostal Prophetess.

BY BYRON J. REES.

152 Pages. Bound in Cloth. Price, 50c., postpaid.

A short life story and seventeen of the sermons of Hulda A. Rees, together with her portrait and picture of her early church. This book needs no other introduction than for the reader to know that seventeen of her sermons, which Sister Rees preached with such accompaniments of power and blessing, are for the most part to compose it. The life-story is short yet comprehensive, the writer of it avoiding anything of a eulogistic nature and making the facts of the life serve as an appropriate introduction to the character back of the sermons.

Mrs. E. E. Williams, in a beautiful poem, which is also a part of the book, gives some refreshing glimpses into the character of Sister Rees.

Esther T. Pritchard also contributes a "Tribute," glowing with fervor and truth.

A WOMAN'S LIFE WORK.

Including Thirty Year's Service on the Underground Railroad and in the War.

BY LAURA HAVILAND.

This is a story of a wonderful life. The author was an active Anti-Slavery agitator and through her underground railroad work assisted hundreds of slaves to escape from bondage. During the war she spent about two years taking care of the sick and wounded. Through her efforts more than 2,000 Union Soldiers were liberated. She accomplished a great work in providing for the Freedmen of Kansas after the close of the war. She was the founder of the State Public School, at Coldwater, Mich., an institution which was the first of its kind in the world. The Industrial School for Girls at Adrian Mich., almost utterly owes its first existence, and especially its name to her efforts. Haviland Academy at Haviland, Kansas, was named in her honor, as also the town in which it is located. At the World's Fair she was introduced by President Palmer as "The Mother of Philanthropy," and well she deserves the title. Her experience as told in this book will be read with thrilling interest.

This book is printed on good paper and contains 625 pages. It is bound in cloth with red edges. The retail price of the book is $1.50. We will send it postpaid, for $1.00. Address,

OR, AMONG THE QUAKERS.

An American Story by Richard H. Thomas, M.D., author of "Echoes and Pictures," "A History of the Society of Friends in America," etc. Preface by W. C. Braithwaite, B.A., LL.B.

This is a cool, refreshing, and in every way pleasing story.

It has much of the simplicity, purity and charm of Quaker Life, and while imaginary in outline and detail, is understood to be true in substance, as it is certainly written with full knowledge and sympathy as to what constitute the essentials of Quaker life. The grand passion asserts itself, as everywhere else, among these simple scenes, and warms the story with a thread of pleasing and rather idyllic loving. The serious point of the story, beyond the portrayal of home life among the Friends, is to show its higher and better influence by tracing its effect upon a serious-minded agnostic who is brought into the story from New York and represents in his way the worldly side of modern life.—The Independent.

360 pages, 8vo. Handsomely bound in cloth.

THE LIFE and LETTERS OF

ELIZABETH L. COMSTOCK,

Compiled by her sister, C. HARE. With portrait.

This interesting book consists largely of extracts from letters written and received by Elizabeth L. Comstock during her long sojourn in America. Her experiences in visiting prisons, asylums, hospitals, etc., during the time of the American War, are most graphically described, and form interesting reading. Her visits to England and Ireland form part of the concluding chapters.

"No one can read the pages that tell of her work among the wounded soldiers without thanking God for such tender Christian service, and one realizes more clearly than ever the meaning of war."—THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

BROUGHT HOME TO HIM.

Something like this has probably happened in other families besides that of Mr. Plunkett since the war with Spain began:

"I can't bear to think of this country going to war!" exclaimed Mrs. Plunkett. "War is so cruel—so barbarous!"

"But war in behalf of an oppressed people is glorious!" responded Mr. Plunkett. "Every man with a spark of patriotism in him feels like making sacrifices in a war for humanity! The selfishness and narrow-mindedness that would—"

"Father," said Harry, the eldest boy of the family, bursting into the room, "I want to enlist! Tom Benham and George Harris are going, and I'm older than they are. I'll be nineteen next month, and—"

"You go to war?" sternly ejaculated his father. "Are you crazy, Harry? Do you imagine I will let you go and get the yellow fever or be shot? Do you think I could spare you, anyhow—"

"I see," interrupted Harry's mother. "It's some other man's boy who must do the fighting—not yours. It's some other patriot who must make the sacrifices—not you!"

Whereupon Mr. Plunkett became silent and thoughtful.—"Youths' Companion."

A PARABLE FOR THE THOUGHTFUL.

Science teaches us that while nothing seems more capricious and accidental than the falling of a tree, yet a fixed, unalterable law, regulates the time and the method of its fall. The direction of its fall, for one thing, is mechanically determined by its mode of growth. Few trees grow symmetrical all around. Some circumstance or other makes the development lop-sided. If you examine the rings in the wood of a tree you will rarely find them forming a series of perfect concentric circles. They are irregular in their size and shape. Normally a tree grows towards the light, and develops most wood and foliage and fruit in the direction where there is most light. It is thus weighted for its fall by its inclination to the light. And the moral which this interesting circumstance teaches us, and which we may well take as our guiding lesson for each day, is, that what determines the direction of the fall of our tree of life is that towards which the bent of our being is inclined. Our fall, like that of the tree, will be no mere thing of chance, but will be foreordained by our mode of growth, by the way in which we have lived. If the bent of our being is towards the world, our nature will be developed on the worldly side; and on that side it will be weighted for its fall, and great will be the fall thereof. But if, on the other hand, it is towards God and holiness, we shall form on that side blessed and fruitful growth that will make our fall—when it comes in due season—to be across the threshold of heaven.—Dr. Hugh Macmillan.

The enthronement of the Queen of Holland took place in the so-called Nieuwe Kerk, at Amsterdam, which has some beautiful stained glass windows, and contains, among other monuments, that of Admiral de Ruyter.

Six-year-old Paul Harper is the youngest historian yet heard from on the war with Spain. He expresses himself in the Evans-ton "Index":

And then the starveing Cubans are prty sirius to. And now we have beegun the war and many comrads will be dead. Phhaps ther wont be a

NIAGARA'S ANTHEM.

An English traveler has this to say about the music of the world's greatest cataract. Surely, if "the woods were God's first temples," Niagara was God's first organ. Says the traveler:

"The noise of the falls is very great, and has usually been designated as a roar; but an American organist claims to have discovered not only the note which the waters of Niagara sing, but also that the tone is such as would be given by a broad organ-pipe, whose length was the depth of the gorge below the falls.

"The first note, or ground tone, is so deep that it never could be realized for an instant; but the two tones marked 3 and 4 are heard everywhere, with a power that makes itself felt as well as heard. The fifth and sixth notes are perfectly distinct, but of far less power than the third and fourth. And here comes a curious feature, which proves conclusively that Niagara gives a tone and not a roar—a musical note and not a mere sound or noise. The seventh note is the interval of the tenth; and this, at the falls, is of a power and clearness entirely out of proportion to the harmonies as usually heard on an organ.

"The ordinary rules for the note given by an organ-pipe of any given length assume that the diameter has a certain proportion to the length; but a theoretical correction can be given for any exceptional proportions. An ordinary pipe should be 170 $\frac{3}{4}$ feet long to give the key-note of Niagara; but it is asserted that the proper correction—10 $\frac{1}{4}$ feet less—would bring the length down to 160 $\frac{1}{2}$ feet, or the exact height of the falls."

The recent death of Senator Justin S. Morrill, of Vermont, the oldest member of the Senate, gives a special timeliness to the publication of an excellent portrait of Mr. Morrill which is contained in an article on the methods and character of the United States Senate, printed in the January magazine number of The Outlook, under the title "In the Seats of the Mighty." The article was written before Mr. Morrill's death. It is evidently from the pen of some one well acquainted with Senatorial precedents and political and social peculiarities, and is written in a light and even amusing vein. ($3.00 a year. The Outlook Company, N. Y.)

The poet's eldest son, now Lord Tennyson, had been born at Richmond; and the poet's friend, Henry Hallam, the historian, came down from London to stand as his godfather. Before the service Mr. Hallam asked, "What is to be the child's name?" "Hallam," answered the poet. "Oh, I don't like surnames for Christian names," said Hallam. "Why not call him Alfred?" "What if I were to call him Alfred," answered the poet, "and he were to turn out a fool?" He had not asked the historian what his feelings were likely to be in such a contingency.—Kegan Paul.

Comparison with other Bibles is impossible, for the new Bible stands alone—there is no other in its class. Praise of this new book is no disparagement of the many other worthy editions heretofore published.

VIA CRUCIS.

I shaped a plan,
A cherished, fair design—
It was to charm and glorify
This life of mine.

God shaped a cross,
And laid its rugged weight
Athwart my plan; in ruins it Lay desolate!

With stormful soul
And sullen steps I trod—
Slighting the hand of love—beneath
That cross of God.

Crushed by its load,
Upward I looked at length:
Through the thick dark reached out, and grasped
His hand of strength.

In contrite shame
I breathed, "Thy will be done."
And lo!—illumined with gems—my cross
Became a crown!

—"Christian Work."

THE SUPREME DEMONSTRATION.

CHRISTIANS are continually being asked to prove that Christianity is true, and they generally point to the various books of "evidences" as an answer. There are historical proofs, monumental proofs, literary proofs, so that the events of the life of Jesus are as well authenticated as any events of antiquity. But we are told that Christianity makes assumptions of a Divine origin and a Divine manifestation which no amount of historical evidence could ever prove after nineteen hundred years. It claims an Incarnation, and it assumes that through Christ God gives men eternal life. How can any book of evidence prove such claims as that? Must we not admit that no proof is possible? The two leading exponents of apostolic Christianity—Paul and John—have given us a method of proof or demonstration which is peculiarly suited to the temper and spirit of our modern ways of thinking and of testing truth. John says, "He that believeth on the Son of God hath the witness in himself," and Paul, on the top wave of his great inspiration, says, "The Spirit itself beareth witness with our spirit, that we are the children of God." In other words, the supreme demonstration of spiritual truths is an internal evidence—a witness within the soul itself. We know by immediate, first-hand knowledge that two and two are four, or that the shortest distance between two points is a straight line, or that a thing cannot both be and not be at the same time. These things are self-evident, we say. The mind is of such a nature that it cannot doubt them. In the same way we "prove" our own existence—we have the witness within ourselves, and no amount of argument could ever shake us out of the conviction, for it is based on first-hand evidence. Now our two apostles bring the whole content of spiritual revelation—the mighty message of eternal life—down to a test of a similar demonstration. It is not dependent upon historical evidence alone; it is open to the same proof as our axioms of mathematics, or even our own existence.

it proclaims salvation from sin, and a new life in Christ; it offers the privilege of sonship with God, and it promises to fill believers with the spirit of love. Now the only possible proof of such claims and promises is the demonstration of personal experience. "Try it and see," is all we can say to the skeptical. It would be impossible to prove that two and two are four to a person who had no internal faculty of perceiving mathematical truth; it would, too, be impossible to prove to a man that he existed if he had no self-consciousness of it. So, too, the only proof that we have power through Christ "to become sons of God," IS TO BECOME ONE; the only demonstration that He can save from sin and give new life is TO BECOME SAVED AND TO RECEIVE THE NEW LIFE. Does anybody want any better evidence of the greatest spiritual truths of Christianity? The only evidence of the sunrise is that you see it with your own eyes; the only evidence that one's mother is good and loving is that one FEELS her love.

Thus in our last resort we fall back upon the "demonstration of the Spirit," and cry back with this witness within, "Abba, Father." We know Christ is Divine, for He has worked divine work within us; we know He has power over sin, for He has taken away ours; we know that He brings spiritual life, for He has quickened us, and made us sit in heavenly places; we know that the atonement is a reality, for we have been reconciled with God, and are at peace with Him. Scholastic theology dealt with abstractions, and based its doctrines on logic and authority; apostolic Christianity bases itself on the demonstration of the Spirit of God to the spirit of man, on the witness within, the supreme evidence—the soul's grasp of first-hand truth. The revival of this apostolic position characterizes primitive Quakerism.

THE AMERICAN CHURCHES IN 1898.

THE "New York Independent" renders a notable service by collating each year the statistics of membership and the important occurrences in the churches of the United States. This annual census is a great undertaking and it is very well performed. We wish to notice some of the most significant facts which the religious census of the past year presents. It appears that there are 27,714,523 members in the religious bodies of the country, or about one-third of the total population. This is a net gain of 862,300 over the membership of one year ago. Of this total number, 8,395,178 are Roman Catholics, and they compose the largest single body of Christians in the country.

The Methodists come next, though they are broken up into 17 different bodies, with 5,898,094 members. The Baptists follow with 4,364,427 members, divided among 13 bodies. It is an interesting fact that though the Roman Catholics considerably outnumber any single Protestant denomination, yet the Methodists have three times as many churches as the Catholics have, the former numbering 52,779 and the latter 14,699, which is a loss of 181 from last year. The Methodists have 32,145 ministers and the Roman Catholics 11,051 (priests).

During the year the Roman Catholics have made a gain of 219,791 members and the Protestant bodies have gained 642,509. The Methodists, as would be expected, have the largest total gain, 162,196, though the Baptists follow hard after with a gain of 131,465. We sometimes hear statements made to the effect that the so-called unorthodox bodies are making enormous gains. We have always declared such reports to be incorrect and the figures are conclusive evidence of the fact. The Universalists have lost 2,169 members during the year, they being one of the few bodies to report a net loss, while the Unitarians have gained only 5,000, and the Society of Ethical Culture only 236.

Of course, we must always remember that the power of the church, or of a single denomination, cannot be estimated from statistics, but it is a gratifying fact that such great numbers of "those who are being saved" are yearly added to the church of Christ. Protestantism seems not to be dying out very fast when it adds 642,000 to its membership in one year, and the fact is significant that the living, active churches which have a fresh message of life for the present age are all increasing. We look back to apostolic days, when five thousand were added in one day as a result of special and marvelous conditions, and we falsely suppose that the gospel has lost its saving power in our days. But our figures show that in the Protestant churches of the United States alone an average number of 1800 have been added to the church every day in the year. There never was a time when the gospel was so effectual; there never was a time when the Spirit has demonstrated more convincingly, that Christ and His revelation meet men's needs, or that the Galilean is victorious. Modern study and investigation have only proved more clearly than ever that there is no other means or method of salvation, and the thought of all countries is turning back to Christ. Let none of us be found preaching Jeremiads when our faces ought to be turned prophetically and hopefully toward the better future.

THE NATIONAL SOLDIERS' HOME.

BY JOSHUA L. BAILEY.

"The National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers," created by act of Congress, now comprises seven distinct establishments or branches, located in widely separated parts of the country. Their government is vested in a Board of fourteen managers, three of whom—the President of the United States, the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court and the Secretary of War—are members ex-officio.

The largest of these branches is known as "The Central," located at Dayton, Ohio. The next in size is "The Southern," at Hampton, Va. It is the last named that I propose to make the subject of this sketch. It is situated about two miles from Fortress Monroe, on a tract of about 26 acres, which the government purchased in 1870. There was on it at that time a large building, which had been used as a young ladies' seminary. Various buildings have been added from time to time, until there is now a group of a score or more, comprising beside the main administration building, several dormitories, hospital buildings, reading room, library, dining hall, and kitchen, chapel, theatre, police quarters, canteen, and other smaller buildings, all of which seem to be well adapted to the purposes to which they are appropriated, and are kept in good repair. The land fronts on the waters of Hampton Roads, and slopes gently to the beach, being intersected by macadamized walks and drives, tastefully planted with trees and shrubbery. Many of the trees are full grown, and afford delightful shade during the heat of summer.

The number of inmates at the present time is about 3,500, which is inclusive of nearly 500 in the hospitals. In two recent visits to the home I found the men well clothed, with but rare exceptions. On both occasions I saw them at dinner; the bill of fare seemed ample in variety, and the food all that could be desired, as to quality and quantity, and it was very gratifying to observe the general good order which prevailed about the premises, and there was evidence that much was being done to promote the comfort of the inmates.

ADVANTAGEOUS CONDITIONS UNAILED OF.

One would have a right to expect, where such advantageous conditions prevailed, that the inmates would avail themselves of the opportunity for self-improvement and the maintenance of respectable characteristics, but I noticed with regret that a very large proportion of the men had a very sottish and degraded appearance. Very few of the men appeared to have any occupation, but were sitting by the roadsides or lying under the trees, sleeping or smoking, seeming to have no other object in life but to pass away the time with the least possible exertion. On the morning of my first visit, about half after ten o'clock, my attention was called to a number of men passing in and out of a building which is known as the police quarters, and I entered to see what was going on. The room was about twenty or twenty-five feet square, and was arranged like a court room. The commandant, or chief officer of the "Home," occupied the seat of the judge. At his side was a clerk, who read from his record the charges against the men brought up for misdemeanors. There were present some forty or fifty who were arraigned for various charges. I spent about an hour in listening to the proceedings. The charges were principally of four classes—going out of the grounds without leave, staying out beyond the time granted them, bringing liquor on to the premises, or for drunkenness. I noticed that the large majority of cases belonged to the latter class. The punishments awarded by the judge were either prohibiting them from leaving the grounds for a period of some months, according to the degree of offence, or compelling them to perform some manual labor. In the infliction of this last punishment, I thought I could see why the great majority of the men were lying around outside without employment: labor was degraded by being made a punishment for misdemeanors.

THE CANTEEN.

Not far from the police quarters stands the canteen, a one-story building about 35 by 120 feet in dimensions. The approach to it was indicated by a pile of empty beer barrels, thirty-six in number, as well as by the file of men returning from their drink, whose breath, as it were, seemed to blaze the path for me. Entering the building, which I had some difficulty in doing because of the crowd, I found a bar across the length-way of the building, behind which were three bartenders and a cashier. Men in line not only fronting the bar, but extending outside the door and standing close together for a distance of at least 150 feet, were waiting their turn to be waited upon. They paid their money to the cashier, who gave to each a ticket of the value of five cents, which they handed to one or the other of the bartenders, and each getting his mug of beer passed on to the other end of the building and outside. There were about two hundred men in line at the time of my visit. I noticed that many of them, after passing out, joined the line again to go in for a further supply, and I learned that it was possible for a man to get as many as three mugs of beer in the course of an hour.

On the other side of the room were twenty-four tables, at each of which were sitting from six to eight men with their mugs of beer before them. I understood that these men were all from the hospitals—cripples or convalescents, and the indulgence of the tables was allowed them on that account. Beer was carried to them from the bar by men who seemed to be kept constantly occupied. One of the guards told me that it was not expected that any of these men would get more than two beers at one sitting; yet he said there was no rule on the subject, and no attempt was made to restrict them; or indeed to restrict any of the men, only that as soon as they became disorderly or visibly affected by the drink he turned them out. The bar-room was closed at 11.30 o'clock, and notice was given that it would be opened again at 1 o'clock in the afternoon. The cashier, with whom I conversed after the room had been cleared, told me that the receipts for beer on the day preceding were $37, and that on one day in the week before, and immediately after the paying of pensions, the receipts were $46. In the half-hour that followed between the closing of the saloon and dinner, I saw a great many men about the grounds who were very perceptibly under the effects of liquor.

INTOXICANTS PROHIBITED.

In conspicuous places, not only in the police court, but in other buildings, I noticed posted the rules of the Home. My attention was particularly called to Rule III, which reads as follows:

"The use of intoxicating liquors is prohibited, and any one who brings it to this Home will be recommended for dishonorable discharge."

I called the attention of the commandant to this rule, which was made in 1884, and asked him if it was still in force, and he told me that it was. I told him that I had noticed that nearly all of the men who had been before him that morning were charged either with drunkenness or bringing liquor on to the premises, and I told him of my visit to the canteen, which I understood was established under Government authority, and I asked him whether he did not think that in this canteen the Government was creating the appetite for liquor, and thus encouraging the men in the very misdemeanors for the commission of which the Government punished them. He waived any direct answers, but said that the men would have the beer, and he did not see any way of preventing it.

To further satisfy myself as to some of the conditions above enumerated, I made a second visit to the Soldiers' Home, in which my first impressions, and especially as to the particulars last recited, were fully confirmed. At this time I had a conversation with one of the surgeons in one of the hospitals, and learned from him that not all of the inmates of the Home were drinking men, but that there was a certain number who were habitual drinkers, and these could be found with almost undeviating regularity every day at the canteen, and that the supply of the invalids in the hospitals came largely from that class, but he added these significant words: "Poor fellows, they don't live long."

At this last visit I embraced the opportunity to make some observations of the conditions in the little village of Phœbus, which lies adjacent to the grounds of the Home. The street which leads immediately into the gate of the Home, for a distance of some 200 yards, is occupied chiefly by drinking saloons and houses of bad repute. In this short distance I counted twenty-eight drinking saloons, and I learned from residents of the village, the correctness of whose information I had every reason to accept, that the soldiers of the Home were the chief patrons of these saloons; that, indeed, without this patronage, very few of them could exist; that the rear of the saloons, or the apartments above, were places of the grossest immoral resort, and that here, as well as in the saloons themselves, the inmates of the Home were the chief patrons. I also learned that these men were allowed to have pass-books, so that when they were out of money, whatever indebtedness they incurred either in the saloons or in the adjoining apartments, was placed to their account, and they were expected to come and settle the score on the payment of their pensions, and that it not unfrequently happened that the score that was cast up against them exceeded the amount of their pensions.

As to the social conditions of the inmates of the Home, it was stated to me that they were about equally divided between the married and the unmarried. I learned from those well informed that a very large proportion of the married men receiving pensions send no part of it home for the support of their wives and children, but expend it upon the places of evil resort above referred to.

GOVERNMENT RESPONSIBILITY.

From the conditions which I have attempted to describe, I can draw but this conclusion; that is, that the Government in maintaining the canteen inside the grounds of the Home, is responsible for the mischievous results. The appetite for drink is continually nurtured, and the desire for stronger liquors is created, and seeks its indulgence when the men are at liberty to go outside the grounds, with the resulting drunkenness, which is of almost daily occurrence. The most practical, if not the ONLY remedy, would seem to be the total abolition of the canteen, and the prohibition of beer as an intoxicant, not now included in the interpretation of the prohibitory rule as to intoxicating liquors.

I am informed that many efforts have been made in the past to secure the abolition of the canteen, and the strict prohibition of the use of all alcoholic liquors at the Home, but the effort has so far been unsuccessful. The late General Armstrong made a vigorous effort in this direction, and had the sympathy of many of the residents of Hampton, but without avail.

This ought not to discourage any from making a still further effort. As the people of Hampton seem powerless to abate the present disgraceful conditions, and inasmuch as the Home is a National institution, Congress and the President should be continually and energetically appealed to until the whole canteen system is abolished, not only at the Soldiers' Home, but throughout the army.

I should not fail to add that, beside being clothed and fed at public expense, a very large porportion of the inmates of the Home are enjoying pensions from the United States Government—pensions varying from $12 to $27.50 per month. I should also mention that the profits of the canteen do not go to the Government, but go for providing theatrical and other entertainments. I have heard this appropriation of money spoken of by some as so praiseworthy as to justify the maintenance of the canteen. In other words, in order to get a little money to provide amusements for the men, it is not only justifiable, but praiseworthy, to maintain this prolific agency of immorality and degradation.

JESUS AND THE PARALYTIC.

BY JAMES STALKER.

Author of "The Life of Christ."

When the paralytic was let down through the roof, the scene must have caused a great disturbance. It is well known that the roofs of Oriental houses were both flat and low, so that the removal of a part of the roof to let down the bed through it was nothing like what a similar operation would be on one of our houses. Still, as St. Mark says that they dug through the roof, the operation could not be unattended with a certain amount of noise and dust.

Besides the strange apparition descending from the ceiling must have drawn the attention of the audience completely away from Christ's teaching. Still, He uttered not a single word of complaint, but perfectly preserved His temper and good humor and thus set an example to preachers, some of whom are extremely sensitive to interruptions. The Twelve were highly displeased with the mothers who interrupted the Teacher with the request to bless their children, and on this occasion they may have been similarly incensed. but Jesus entered into the spirit of the four men who had brought their palsied friend; He admired their helpfulness, combination and originality, and He rewarded their perseverance.

The first words He spoke to the paralytic were: "Son, be of good cheer." And it is worth while to pause on these initial words in order to notice their sympathy. Jesus Himself was but a young man, yet He called the paralytic "Son," which probably proves that the latter was younger. Jesus used such caressing words freely. Another sufferer He addressed as "daughter," another as "child," and so on. Such terms of endearment betrayed the kindness of His heart, and opened a way to the hearts of others.

There generally followed a word of comfort—either "Be of good cheer," as in this case, or "Be not afraid." It is remarkable with what frequency these phrases recur in the Gospel as proceeding from His mouth. He took fear away and made people be of good heart; and He does so still. A fireman nearly driven back by the flames paused in his ascent, when a voice from below cried: "Give him a cheer." And the voices swelling from beneath carried him over the difficulty. And so shall we be carried over many a difficulty if we accustom ourselves to listen for the voice of Jesus saying to us, "Be of good cheer; be not afraid."

What Jesus said in this miracle, both to the paralytic and afterwards to the fault-finding scribes, shows that He had a supernatural knowledge of what was going on in their hearts. From their looks He may have received indications, but He penetrated much deeper than these would have led anyone else. He plainly told the scribes that He knew the evil reasonings of their hearts; but His knowledge of what was going on in the young man's heart was far more remarkable. Instead of speaking to him about his paralysis, which was what his friends were thinking of, He began at once speaking to him about his sins.

Why was this? He must have known not only that the young man had shattered his constitution by evil living, but that his sins were more a burden to him than his disease. Had not the man been penitent and longing for pardon, the assurance of sin forgiven would have done him no good. Even though God from Heaven with a voice of thunder were to say: "Thy sins are forgiven," this would be of no avail to a hard and unprepared heart.

On many occasions Jesus manifested the same penetrative acquaintance with the spiritual condition of those who came to Him, and this never failed to have a profound effect upon those to whom He revealed this supernatural knowledge. Nor did it fail in the present case.

Even more Divine, however, was the word that followed: "Thy sins are forgiven thee." How are we to understand this? Of course Jesus was acting as the representative of God upon earth; but was He merely declaring what He knew to have taken place in the Divine mind, or was He speaking with His own authority? In other words, did He forgive or did He only declare the forgiveness of Another?

In favor of the latter alternative is the fact that Jesus on one occasion delegated to the apostles the power of remitting sin, and of course they could do so only ministerially and declaratively. But was the action of Jesus necessarily of the same kind? He did not say so Himself when accused on this occasion of blasphemy. If He was not Himself forgiving but only declaring that God had done so, He would surely when accused of blasphemy, have given this explanation, which would have met the objection. But the fact that He did not give it shows that He was acting authoritatively.

Clergymen in some churches announce to sinners, being penitent, the mercy of God, and all Christians ought, as opportunity offers, to assure penitents that forgiveness is theirs at once if they only believe; but Christ does more: He pardons, and that with the authority of One who has borne our sins in His body on the tree.

He does it here on earth. We do not need to wait till we reach Heaven to know that our sins are pardoned; if only our trust is placed in the Saviour the peace of God is shed abroad in our hearts.

The scribes said that He blasphemed, and of course they did not believe that the man was pardoned. The words of Jesus were, in their opinion, a mere idle boast, which it was easy to make because the event which He said had taken place belonged to a region beyond human scrutiny.

Jesus admitted the force of this objection, but He met it by saying virtually, Well, then, I will do another thing which is open to your scrutiny, but which I could not do unless I were true and God were with Me. "Whether it is easier to say, Thy sins are forgiven thee, or to say Arise and walk?" No doubt they would have said the latter. Accordingly He did say to the paralytic, "Arise and walk"; and the young man arose and went forth in the presence of all, carrying that on which he had been carried.

The demonstration was complete; and although scribes might murmur, all honest and good hearts went away praising God who had given such power unto men.

FRIENDS WEST OF THE MISSISSIPPI.

BY M. Z. KIRK.

As the writer has gone from one meeting to the other, in the West, during the past few months, he has been very much interested in talking with the old pioneers and in looking over the early records of the Monthly and Quarterly Meeting. As one visits the four Yearly Meetings west of the Mississippi to-day, it seems hardly possible that in 1840 almost no friends had ever seen the prairies beyond the Great Father of Waters. A very interesting article could be written upon the early settlers near Salem, Iowa, but we shall leave that for some future time. To show the relation between Indiana Yearly Meeting and Iowa Friends, we quote the following from the minutes of Western Quarterly Meeting of Sixth month, 1844. In the ratio given at that time, Bloomfield Monthly Meeting paid 28 cents on the dollar; Sugar River, 19; Salem, 20; Vermillion, 14; Pleasant Plain, 10; Sugar Plain, 9. For several years the Friends in Iowa had to return to Indiana to attend Quarterly Meeting. In 1846 and 1847 they began to agitate the necessity of a Quarterly Meeting in the Far West. In 1847 Indiana Yearly Meeting granted the same, and Salem Quarterly Meeting was set up at Salem, Iowa, in Fifth month, 1848. We shall take great pleasure in giving a detailed history of this meeting at some future time; but in the present series of articles we shall trace the growth of the Friends to the North and to the West. The growth to the North formed what is now Springdale Quarterly Meeting, Winneshiek and Minneapolis. The growth to the West formed Pleasant Plain, Spring Creek, Lynn Grove, Bangor, Three Rivers, Bear Creek, and then on into Kansas.

We shall first take up the growth and development of Friends to the North. For the notes given upon this part of the History of Friends we are greatly indebted to Lawrie Tatum, and to William Mather for furnishing and assisting in examining the Monthly and Quarterly Meeting records. The first Friend to settle within the limits of the present Springdale Quarterly Meeting was Brinton Darlington, who bought a farm and settled near Muscatine. Lawrie Tatum located a little farther West in 1844, and J. H. Painter with his family settled near him in 1845. The latter demonstrated to these pioneers his Quaker principles at the very beginning. It was always customary to furnish liquor at a house-raising, but he informed the men whom he asked to help "raise" his log house that he could not furnish liquor. Although he had been informed that he could not get his house "raised" without liquor, the men all took his remarks kindly and no one declined to go on that account. At the time of the opening of the Salem Quarterly Meeting, in 1848, there were several Friends located near the present town of Springdale. M. V. Butler, Stephen Dean, Lawrie Tatum, with their wives, drove to Salem, 70 miles south, in a road wagon to attend the opening of the Quarterly Meeting. The members of the Yearly Meetings Committee were quite favorably impressed with the young Friends from the North and recommended their settlement to J. A. Grennell and others who were already thinking of moving to Iowa.

In the early part of 1849 these pioneer Friends began to hold meetings in the house of J. H. Painter, and the following summer they requested Salem Monthly Meeting for an Indulged Meeting. J. D. Hoag and another Friend visited them by appointment and the meeting was granted. The first minister to visit this new meeting was John Howard, who came in the fall of 1849. At this time the heads of the families were as follows: G. P. Wood, David Tatum, J. H. Painter, M. V. Butler, J. W. Cappell, Stephen Dean, Shaidlock Negus, J. Schooley and Lawrie Tatum. There was also one other Friend—Rebecca Bowersock. These Friends had no resident minister, so their meetings were usually held in silence; but they were greatly enjoyed and were a blessing to those who attended them. In 1850 the meeting was removed to Lawrie Tatum's log house. While it was held here Benjamin Sebohn and Robert Lindsley, ministers from England, were the first "Traveling Friends with minutes" to make them a visit. During this same year J. A. Grennell, a minister, moved with his family of seven into the neighborhood. In 1851 the meeting was removed to J. H. Painter's gravel house, where a Preparative Meeting was established. This meeting was located near the present site of Springdale, and is now known as Springdale Meeting; but at that time was called Red Cedar. Muscatine and Red Cedar asked Salem Quarterly Meeting for a Monthly Meeting, to be known as Red Cedar Monthly Meeting. The following committee from Salem Quarterly Meeting—Barclay Johnson, William P. Pickrell, Ezra A. Stephens, Hulda Hoag, Ann Howard, Martha N. Dorland—were present and helped open Red Cedar Monthly Meeting, Fourth month 9th, 1853, with Brinton Darlington as clerk, and Greenberry P. Wood as assistant of the men's meeting. At this first monthly meeting the Friends of Lynn and Jones County requested a Preparative Meeting, which was later granted, but was discontinued in Eleventh month, 1856.

One very interesting minute was found—"Postage in all cases to be prepaid and refunded to the Yearly Meeting Correspondents by the Yearly Meetings 'Treasurer.'" To those of us who have always been accustomed to a two and three-cent postage rate this seems like a very trivial affair to be mentioned in the minutes; but we must remember that the rate of postage was much higher at that time. Another interesting feature in all these old minutes is that the clerks almost never signed their names, and in order to find who was clerk at a certain time we must look over the former minutes and see who was appointed last. The first Quarterly Meeting stock to be apportioned to the Friends of the Red Cedar Monthly Meeting was $50.00.

In Fifth month, 1853, Salem Monthly Meeting turned over the Indulged Meeting at Springdale (now West Branch Meeting) to the care of Red Cedar Monthly Meeting. In Eleventh month, 1853, they were given a Preparative Meeting, which was held near the old post-office between the present West Branch and Springdale. This meeting was later moved to West Branch, and in Fifth month, 1862, its name was changed to Aberdeen, and in Eighth month, 1863, it was given its present name—West Branch. In 1854 we find a minute giving the apportionment of Quarterly Meeting stock, which shows the number and names of monthly meetings belonging to Salem Quarterly Meeting at that time. Salem paid 27 cents on the dollar; Pleasant Plain, 14; East Grove, 8; Richland, 10; Spring Creek, 15; Three Rivers, 14; Red Cedar, 12. In this one minute we can see the skeleton around which Iowa Yearly Meeting has been built.

In Eleventh month, 1854, the Friends north of Muscatine requested an Indulged Meeting at Bloomington, which was later granted. In First month, 1854, the following Friends were appointed to meet with a like committee of women Friends to carry out the advice of our last Yearly Meeting in establishing and having the care of First-day schools, viz: G. P. Wood, Elisha Stratton, Dilworth Schooley, Jeremiah A. Grennell, Richard M. Pinkham, Enoch Peasley, Brinton Darlington, David W. Miles, David Tatum, William Townsend and James Dewees. The first First-day School to be held upon this prairie was held at the home of Israel Negus.

In Second month, 1865, the Friends in Northern Iowa and Southern Minnesota requested a Preparative Meeting at Winneshiek and Spring Water, the two to be known as Winneshiek Monthly Meeting.

The Bloomington Indulged Meeting asked for a Preparative Meeting Eleventh month, 1855. To many of our young Friends the following minute regarding one of our well-known ministers will be of interest. Red Cedar Monthly Meeting, Sixth month 6th, 1855. "John Hoover and Mary Jay informs this meeting that they intend marriage with each other, parents consenting thereto. James Townsend and Samuel Abbott are appointed to inquire into John's clearness from other like engagements and to report at the next meeting."

Red Cedar Monthly Meeting, Seventh month 11th, 1855. "The committee to inquire as to John Y. Hoover's clearness from other marriage engagements report they had made what inquiry they had considered necessary and found nothing to obstruct. They are therefore left at liberty to accomplish their marriage agreeably to our rules, and we appoint David Tatum and Isaac Branson to attend the marriage and to see that good order is observed, and to place the certificate into the hand of the recorder and to report thereof at the next meeting."

Crosswicks Indulged Meeting was set up about two miles and a half west of Springdale P. O., but this meeting was not of long duration.

The Friends of Red Cedar Monthly Meeting have always had a deep interest in education. In Twelfth month, 1855, a subscription paper was signed to build a Friends' School-house, which later became the Springdale Academy. This institution was soon built and has been an important factor in the education of the pioneer Friends and others. A few years ago the Academy was turned over to the town to be supported by public funds.

In First month, 1856, the Muscatine and Bloomington Preparative Meetings had grown to such proportions that they requested a Monthly Meeting to be known as Bloomington Monthly Meeting. In Third month, 1856, Honey Grove Friends, seven miles northwest of the present Springdale, requested a Preparative Meeting, and Centre Friends, fifteen miles to the northwest, also requested one, which was discontinued in Seventh month, 1854.

We see from the above that Red Cedar Monthly Meeting has had a very interesting history, as well as a rapid growth. It received by certificate, during the first year of its existence, 290 members. Twelve were also added by request, which made at that time a total membership of 302. Members were received every month, the largest number taken in at any one time being 59. Some of the names of heads of families received during 1853 and 1854 are as follows: Richard Pinkham, William Townsend, Michael King, Caleb Gregg, William D. Branson, John Thomas, George Hughes, Nathan Satterthwait, Samuel Peasley, Griffith Lewis, James Walton, David W. Miles, James Staples, Samuel Dean, Thomas Montgomery, G. P. Smith, James Townsend, Thomas C. Battey, Samuel Pearson, Alpheus Hirst and William Miles. The Friends received that year came from Ohio, Michigan, Iowa, Indiana, Pennsylvania, New York, Vermont, Maine and Canada. During the second year there were some received every month but one. Total received second year, 192. There were 176 received the third year.

RED CEDAR QUARTERLY MEETING.

Red Cedar Quarterly Meeting of Friends opened at Red Cedar (now Springdale), in Cedar County, Iowa, Fifth month 8th, 1858, by direction of Indiana Yearly Meeting, and on request of Red Cedar, Winneshiek and Bloomington Monthly Meetings, belonging to Salem Quarterly Meeting. The members of the committee appointed by Indiana Yearly Meeting who were present were John Howard, Willet Dorland, Thomas Charles. The request was granted to hold Red Cedar Monthly Meeting at Red Cedar and at Springdale (the latter-named place is now West Branch). At this time Red Cedar Monthly Meeting had under its supervision two Indulged Meetings—one at Honey Grove, seven miles northwest, and one at Centre, fifteen miles northwest of Red Cedar. Winneshiek Monthly Meeting had three Indulged Meetings—Elkhorn, Fairview and Pleasant Valley.

Robert and Sarah Lindesley, ministers from England, were very acceptably present at the opening of this new Quarterly Meeting.

In Second month, 1859, a committee reported in favor of the establishment of Iowa Yearly Meeting to be held near Oskalossa, Iowa. These Friends began their missionary work at once, as in Fifth month, 1859, the Committee of Concerns of "People of Color" reported assistance rendered in Iowa City enabling several to attend school, and at Muscatine assistance was rendered, and a school of twenty pupils was taught by one of their color. In Eleventh month, 1859, the following committee was appointed to establish a Monthly Meeting at Baraboo, Wis.: Enoch Hoag, Israel Negus, Enoch Peasley, William B. Thompson, Ezra King, Joel Bean, Elisha Stratton, Amos Hampton and Lawrie Tatum, with a like committee of women Friends. In Second month, 1860, by direction of the Yearly Meeting, a committee was appointed to encourage "First-day Schools for Scripture Instruction." In Eighth month of the same year was liberated to visit the Sandwich Islands, and his minute was returned in Eleventh month, 1862. In the minutes of Eleventh month, 1862, mention is made of the establishment of a meeting for worship at Minneapolis, Minn. In Second month of the following year the committee reported the opening of a meeting for worship at Sweetland. In six months they reported a Preparative and Monthly Meeting had been established at Minneapolis. In 1864, Winneshiek Quarterly Meeting was established, which included Winneshiek, Baraboo and Minneapolis Monthly Meetings.

Thus we have traced briefly the growth and development of Friends from Salem to the North. To-day we find Springdale Quarterly Meeting has a membership of 537, Winneshiek a membership of 407 and Minneapolis Quarterly Meeting a membership of 358, while the original Quarterly Meeting of Salem has 399 members.

"Arnold's Practical Sabbath School Commentary on the International Lessons, 1899." T. B. Arnold, Chicago, 1899.

These Notes on the International Lessons for 1899 have the features so well known to those who have found them helpful in previous years.

There is no attempt to make the comments full in respect to historical, geographical and critical matters; of these only that is given which seems absolutely needful, and it is, for the most part, collected in a brief "Bible Dictionary" at the end of the book.

The aim of the whole volume is the practical application of the lessons to daily life and individual experience. Not the least valuable parts of the book are the "Practical Applications" of Abbie C. Morrow, which will follow each lesson.

There are "Hints to Primary Teachers," "Questions," "Teachings," and "Home Readings."

The simple, clear, practical treatment of the lessons will commend the "Notes" to many teachers.

FOR THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

TIME LIMIT FOR MEETINGS.

BY C. F. MORRIS.

Our meetings, so far as I know, are commenced promptly at the time agreed upon. I think they should be closed as punctually on or before the understood time for holding them has expired.

Certainly there may be an occasional exception, but that would be really rare, and when there is an exception as soon as it is accommodated, then we should get immediately back to regular time again. Any other way is to consent that religious matters cannot be controlled in an orderly manner.

What is more irksome than a meeting with its time out, its work done, and which ought to be dismissed, but those in charge appearing at a loss to know just when and how to get clear of it? Frequently an otherwise good meeting is spoiled by attempting to draw out testimonies which, while many good thoughts may be expressed that under proper circumstances would edify and strengthen, yet now becomes a real weakness.

The more common concerns of life are reduced to system, and are regulated in such a way that they can be understood, and this know-nothing plan that furnishes no idea when a meeting is to end is out of date. We should not be willing to admit that we cannot comprehend and manage matters purely religious, as well as we can those of simply a business character, and we should not be afraid to undertake to do it. Our Yearly Meetings set an example for us. They are timed, both the whole period and the separate sessions, and the meetings held at the time of Yearly Meetings, and in connection therewith are run by the clock, and all the affairs of these meetings, religious and secular, are finished up because the time was stipulated in which to do the work, and if it were not so we should perhaps dally along for a month, and then not do it as well.

With our idea of being led by the Spirit, and that Christ is the head of the church, we should be capable of producing and using a most perfect and efficient method of church government. This need not be a difficult thing to accomplish, for by the liberal use of good common sense, which has been brought under proper conditions, the object will be reached. God has given men facilities of mind, and He is well pleased with the exercise of our best judgment in determining the compass within which these necessary things shall operate to produce the best results, and then to hold them as sacredly as any other contract within such limited bounds.

Long ago, under the old régime, it probably would have looked rather arbitrary if, in proposing to go on a great journey, the time had been set exactly, not only the day, but the hour and minute for leaving, and having the time limited for staying abroad and the time of arrival home again definitely fixed, all of which can now easily be done by the present mode of travel. The fact is, people adapt themselves to the arrangements made, and the train comes on time, and the folks that want to go are all there; no one is left, and the train speeds away with them according to the schedule, and we find that we like it much better because of the accuracy and completeness of the management, and the life and force it puts into business. It would have the same effect upon our meetings,—the membership would fall in with the regulations. Our ministers would find that they didn't just have to occupy so much time anyhow. Clerks could leave off the old-fashioned long pauses and sad faces and slow motions, and move right up with the business, which would greatly help to make these meetings more desirable places for all classes to attend.

Revival meetings should be no exception to this time rule. It is unfortunate, but it does appear sometimes to be almost granted that people are not properly at themselves in time of a revival, and so the meetings may hold to any hour of the day or into improper hours of the night; that there must be no rule to govern them; that they must just be let alone to run themselves down, and then quit from exhaustion; that it would be a kind of sacrilege to presume to say beforehand what the period should be, and how long each session should hold. But the common way of putting it is that we are going to let the Lord run the meeting, and say when to stop, which no one could object to if it were really so; but the experience that this authority is in the hands of one or two persons casts over things a kind of chaos and vague uncertainty that does not commend itself to thinking people, nor the cause which these meetings are intended to promote, for with that only as a guide the meeting is very liable to be conducted and concluded according to the peculiar prejudices and preferences of the evangelist in charge. They should be managed in a way that would furnish a suitable criterion for our everyday life work. We have progressed beyond the reaphook and stage coach era. Discovery and invention have in the past fifty years wrought almost a complete revolution, so that we now look upon some of the opinions held and implements used in that time with a strange curiosity.

It is useless now to undertake to prove that a thing is right for us just because the fathers did it. It may be or it may not be.

Our day is peculiarly one of dispatch—of contest and push; time is measured out and divided accurately, and things put to work accordingly, so that persons engaged in any secular avocation know that they must just step into the current and make use of these specific arrangements, or else have their business continually at sea. Formerly our means of communication and transportation was largely limited to the speed and strength of the ox and the horse. This is greatly changed. Now we have fast mail and telephone and telegraph, overland and submarine, with which to transmit our thoughts, and steam and electricity, with all their quickening elasticity applied to the most perfect machinery with which to hasten manufacture and travel, and to move with rapidity the great commodities which make up the commerce of the world.

ity in the necessary though temporal affairs, it can hardly be reasonably expected that our meetings, of whatever character, will have great success if they shall continue to unnecessarily conflict with the rushing pulsations that now characterize and govern the movements of other concerns, and has so much affected and altered the habits and customs of the people, and entered so largely into their religious, financial and social relations.

I think that our established meetings will be much more effective if they will adhere carefully to a well-defined time, and that our revival meetings should be timed, before they commence, by the proper authority, which is the church, or by the committee authorized by the church, and not by the evangelist, and guard against the inclination to make the period too long. Then announce plainly beforehand, and at the opening of these meetings, so that it may be well understood as to the time and sessions, and also that the meeting will not hold beyond that time, and will close before if the work is done; and then faithfully carry out the agreement. Much more lasting good will be the outcome with a great deal less wear and tear, and in a more common sense and rational way; and we shall think more of ourselves and more of the cause, and be more willing to see the next revival meeting come.

DELIA FISTLER.

Before this comes to the readers of THE AMERICAN FRIEND, our dear sister will have reached her field in India, having sailed Twelfth month 14th, 1898.

The meeting of Ministry and Oversight of Cleveland held a very blessed prayer meeting in her behalf on the last evening of Eleventh month. From that hour she realized in a very marked degree the girding and tender upholding of His hand who was leading her on.

The first Sabbath in Twelfth month had been announced as Missionary Day and was devoted to that cause. In the morning we assembled under the covering of the Blessed Spirit and waited for the parting message of our sister. Very clearly were we made to hear again the farewell words of our Lord: "All power is given to me in heaven and in earth; go ye, therefore, and teach all nations." Under the melting power of the Spirit all limitations vanished and we saw afresh that the thought of our Lord was for the whole world to hear the gospel.

A very impressive illustration was given of the comparative needs of the home and foreign missions. One inch of black ribbon was held before us to represent seven hundred and fifty souls, the average field of a minister in the United States. Then nearly seven and a half yards of the ribbon were unrolled to represent the two hundred thousand souls to every foreign missionary. We saw the vast need as never before, and with bowed heads were constrained to ask forgiveness for the lethargy and unfaithfulness of the past. All hearts seemed to feel a quickened desire to send help to far-off India, which six years ago was brought very near our hearts when Delia Fistler and Esther Baird went from us to plant there the cross of Christ.

As a practical result a very liberal response was made when opportunity was given to subscribe to the fund for a permanent mission property in Nowgong, India.

Our hearts were touched when, in answer to the question, "How many have felt called of God to go to foreign lands?" many of the students in the Training School, together with a number of our own members, arose. There swept into our hearts a great longing that He would help us to shorten the length of that black ribbon, and take the blessed tidings to hearts who have never heard of Him whom our souls love.

In the evening we were interested in hearing from Delia Fistler of her own call to foreign work, and were brought into closer sympathy with our missionaries as she related some of the experiences of their home life and work.

While we realized in some degree the sacrifice required to take the glad tidings to those groping in darkness, we were also impressed with the gracious upholding and sustaining power of our Lord, so manifest in our sister. The rare opportunity to purchase a property for our India mission was again presented to the congregation and the people gladly gave of their substance, making the offering for the day five hundred and seventy-five dollars. Thus closed the memorable Missionary Day.

Anna Edgerton, of North Carolina, a very promising worker, loved and appreciated by all who know her, and who spent some time in the Cleveland Bible Training School, very cheerfully responded to her call to foreign work, and she sailed in company with Delia Fistler for India.

If you knew the light
That your soul casts in my sight,
How I look to you for the good and true,
The beauteous and the right!

—Robert Browning.

Take hold with God, in his steady work for lifting up the world; and you shall fairly forget that there are these grasshoppers and crickets screaming and chirping and asking questions around you, even if they aspire so far, in their wrangling disputations, as to doubt whether there be any world, be any heaven, be any God, or any life worth living. Let your vine blossom and bear fruit; let the fruit ripen and hang in fragrant and luscious bunches heavy upon the bough, and you do not put the knife to the bark to see if the vine is alive. Nay, you do not argue with any one who asks you if it be worth the manure you spread about its roots. Live in the life which enlarges, live with all your might in the life of God, and you forget that any one has asked whether life is worth the living.—E. E. Hale.

The International Lesson.

FIRST QUARTER.

Lesson V.

First month 29, 1899

CHRIST AT JACOB'S WELL.

John 4; 5 15.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Whosoever drinketh of the water that I shall give him shall never thirst.—Jno. 4: 14.

The incident described in the lesson probably took place about the close of the first year of our Lord's ministry. Jacob's well is still to be seen in the valley between Mounts Ebal and Gerizim, about a mile east of Nablous. The site seems to be fixed without question.

We are not to suppose that this was the only time that Christ gave utterance to these doctrines; John chose that time and those words which best suited the object he had in view.

5. "Then." Read the preceding verses. The direct route from Jerusalem to Galilee lay through Samaria. It is said that the Galileans did not hesitate to go by this route, but the Judeans would often cross the Jordan and go through Perea, rather than contaminate themselves by touching the soil of Samaria. "Sychar." This is now believed to be the modern Askar, which would fulfill all the requirements of the narrative. "Parcel of ground," etc. See Gen. 33: 19; 48: 22; Josh. 24: 32.

6. "Well." In this verse and in verse 14 the word in the original means "spring"; this would imply that the well was fed by springs. In verses 11 and 12 the word used is exactly equivalent to our well. The well is dry at most seasons of the year, and at the present time its depth is 75 feet; it is walled up with rough masonry; it was formerly deeper: Robinson, in 1838, reported it as 105 feet deep. It is $7\frac{1}{2}$ feet in diameter. "Wearied." Jesus was subject to the limitations of the physical body. "Sat thus." Either, wearied as he was, or, just as he was; the latter seems to be preferable. These particulars suggest the narrative of an eye witness, and it is possible that John was present. "Sixth hour." According to the Jewish mode of reckoning, this would be about noon.

7. "Of Samaria." Not of the city, but of the country Samaria. "Draw water." This work was generally put upon the women. The wells in the East are not furnished with buckets or pumps; the person who wishes to draw water brings buckets and rope.

"Give me to drink." According to Eastern customs a perfectly proper request to make, even of a stranger. One of the best ways "to gain another's good will is not at first by doing, but by receiving a kindness."

8. "Meat." Food. This verse would seem to show that it is not meant that the laborer in the Lord's vineyard should always depend upon hospitality. The injunction elsewhere was particular, not general. (Matt. 10: 9, 10.)

9. "Woman of Samaria." "Samaritan woman." Revised version in both places. "How," etc. His dress, language and whole appearance showed his nationality. There was continual ill-will between the Jews and Samaritans; they had just enough in common to make them antagonistic. The Samaritans accepted the Pentateuch but rejected the Prophets; they were a mixed race. 2 Kings 17: 24, 41; also Luke 9: 52, 53. "For the Jews," etc. These words would seem to be an explanation of the writer. They must not be taken too literally, as the fact of the disciples buying food in a Samaritan town shows Galileans were more liberal than Judeans.

10. "The gift of God." "The gift of God is all that is freely offered in his Son." "Thou." The pronoun is emphatic. If thou hadst known, our positions would have been reversed; thou wouldst have asked of me the living water. "Living." Living water primarily means spring water as distinguished from cistern water. Here it means perennial, ever fresh, full of life. Though it has life-giving qualities, that is not the sense here. Compare Zech. 14: 8; Rev. 7: 17.

11. "Sir." The woman now speaks with great respect. "That living water," of which thou hast been speaking—she understands him to speak of spring water. She is perplexed.

12. "Art thou greater," etc. Again the emphasis is on the pronoun. Surely thou art not greater than our brother Jacob. The Samaritans claimed to be descended from Joseph. Some think that Samaria was entirely depopulated at the time of the overthrow of the kingdom of Israel, and that the Samaritans had no claims to an Israelitish ancestry. In the lessons of last year we have seen the improbability of a whole nation being deported, and the woman's claim was therefore not altogether without foundation. Her statements must have been based on Samaritan tradition, as there is no reference to these matters in the Old Testament.

13. Christ passes by her question very much as he did in the case of Nicodemus (John 3: 4, 5) and carries on the thought of verse 10. "This water." Such as is in the well.

14. "I" is emphatic. "Give him." It cannot be earned—it is a gift. "Shall never thirst." The expression is very strong. "Shall not by any means thirst again." If any one really receives (by faith) the water that I will give, he will always have that which will satisfy his (spiritual) thirst. True satisfaction can only come when the soul is fed with spiritual food. "In him a well (spring)." It is not a draught of water, but a perennial spring. If the desire for what God alone can supply is eager, and if God meet the craving, then the desire is absolutely satisfied.

15. The woman still does not understand, but she sees that there is some blessing which the stranger can bestow and she is eager to get it. She seems to think that he can relieve her from some outward toil. The rest of the interview reveals much to her.

PRACTICAL THOUGHTS.

- 1 Christ was always ready to help a needy soul.
2. "The gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ, our Lord."
3. Salvation is free.

(Christian Endeavor Day.)

Do not begin your meeting this week by singing "Hold the fort." God's army is now on the march. There is no question about the meaning of our Constitution. It is "Expansion" to the ends of the earth. No Caesar or Napoleon ever dreamed of an empire so vast as did King Jesus. In the "Name of our God" we are to set up our banners on the far away plains and most inaccessible mountains of the whole earth, and take them for him. We are sure at least that we are never to haul down our colors any place where once they have been flung to the breeze. I love to think of the mission stations of the whole earth as so many places where the banner of the Lord is flying, and where his hosts are rallying.

An army is a body of men sworn to obey orders. A man is no good as a soldier who has not absolutely surrendered his will to that of his superior. By day or by night he must be ready for marching orders, for picket duty, for a charge or a reserve. If God had a church like that how long would it take to rout the dominant forces of evil? Do you fill this description of a soldier? Does your Society answer to it? If not, why not? Let us begin with one, and be that one. Do not spend so much time scolding those who are not, as you do in inspiring them by your example.

An army is a body of men who have given up their own business for that of their country. "No man that warreth entangleth himself with the affairs of this life, that he may please him who enrolled him as a soldier." What would an army of occupation be worth in Cuba if all the men should go into business for themselves? I was in a western city during the Klondike excitement where the mayor and nearly all the police force had suddenly left for Alaska. There are too many Christian people who have other business besides serving the King. Of what good is an Endeavorer who is at a card table or a theatre when he ought to be at his prayer meeting or committee meeting? Show me a society made up of material like that, and I will show you one that is of no use to God.

An army is a body of men ready to endure hardship, danger and death for their leader. Do not let heroism die out of your Christian life. If missions have accomplished no other result for the Church, their reflex influence in stimulating heroic service would be a justification of their work. But Christian heroism finds as wide a field in the steady work of the church as in the mission field. There is a tendency to exalt the more spectacular forms of heroism and to ignore the larger field for the heroic service in the less-noticed things of life.

Notice in verse seven of the Psalm the contrast in munitions of war. The Christian warfare is defined with marvellous accuracy in the last clause of the verse. To make known the name of God is the sum total of our service. Nothing is necessary in this world but to reveal the nature of God. Jesus said that was what he came for. We can have no higher mission. We reveal God by our spoken message and by our acted message. A true Christian living over again the life of Christ among men, thus making known the nature of God, is God's best warrior. He who incarnates purity, love, and truth among men fights with invincible weapons. The King will ever hear such men when they call.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR DAY.

February second, 1881 was one of the coldest of New England days, when the crisp snow rang under the runners of the flying sleigs and the merry shouts rang out from the skaters on the ice ponds. A Portland pastor to whose church there had come a gracious revival, had invited his young people to the parsonage for the evening, tremblingly hoping that he might lead them to form some sort of a society for the promotion of their spiritual life that might not go the way of most similar organizations for young people in connection with the church. After a brief talk as to the importance of starting right, showing one's colors on the right side, and working for the church, he produced a constitution embodying the essentials of the Endeavor movement and the name, and presented it to the young people, some forty in number, who had responded to his invitation. "A deathly silence fell upon the meeting. Those strict provisions were evidently more than the young people had bargained for. They had not been accustomed to take their religious duties so seriously," says Dr. Clark, in his account of this first Christian Endeavor meeting, and it seemed for the moment as though the movement would die at its inception. But Mr. W. H. Pennell, teacher of the young men's Bible class, signed the Constitution first and urged his class to do so, and the pastor's wife moved about among the young women urging them to do likewise, and one by one they all affixed their names, and after a hymn and prayer the meeting closed, and the first Christian Endeavor society was formed.

At the first annual convention six societies were reported, and it was thought remarkable that delegates should come from as far as Bath, Maine, to Portland, to attend the convention! Ten years later, in New York city, the largest halls and churches could not accommodate half the delegates. Sixteen years later, twenty thousand people crossed the continent to attend a convention on the Pacific coast. Another remarkable thing is the fact Christian Endeavor has never had any internal strife in its history. There has never been any disloyalty to the church with which it has been connected. It has proven adapted to more than thirty different denominations, and enrolls as its members to-day a larger number of young people than were ever associated in any other movement. At the present time there are over 54,000 societies, and over 3,250,000 members throughout the world. Last year 225,754 young people came from these societies into the church membership. Among Friends there are now 476 societies, 14,230 members.

There will soon be issued from the press of the Revell Company a new book by one of their most popular authors. Dr. Newell Dwight Hillis, whose name is now mentioned in connection with the pastorate of Plymouth Church, Brooklyn, has taken ten masterpieces of literature and treated them under the title of "Great Books as Life Teachers." The books on which the studies are based are Tennyson's "Idylls of the King," Ruskin's "Seven Lamps of Architecture," George Eliot's "Tito," Victor Hugo's "Les Misérables," Hawthorne's "Scarlet Letter," "Browning's "Saul," Emerson's "Conduct of Life," Thoreau's "Walden," Channing's "Symphony of Life," and the personality of James Russell Lowell as the Prophet of the New Era of Social Sympathy and Service. Dr. Hillis is the author of "A Man's Value to Society," "Investment of Influence," "How the Inner Light Failed," and "Foretokens of Immortality," which have all received deserved recognition from the public.

The Turkish government, through its minister of Foreign Affairs, has informed the Department of State at Washington that it will prevent the further colonization of Palestine by Hebrews, and, by implication, by any others as religious bodies; for it states explicitly that the settlement there of religious bodies in preponderating numbers might lead to political complications which it is the determined purpose of the Ottoman government to avoid. At the same time it explains that it has no intention of preventing American citizens, whether Hebrews or Christians, coming as individuals and not in a body, from entering Syria or Palestine as travelers or visitors. This decree has a direct bearing on the "Zionist" movement for the establishment of a Hebrew nation in Palestine. A number of Pre-Millenarians, ready to catch at every straw to support their contention, have been arguing great things from the migration of Jews to Palestine. Perhaps they will now say that this decree will hasten the downfall of the Turkish Empire, which has been predicted for three hundred years, as "imminent," and seems further away now than at any time during the past century.

A POSSIBLE MISSION IN AFRICA.

The following article by Mrs. C. E. Goodenough, missionary of the American Board at Johannesburg, South African Republic, South Africa, appeared in "The Independent" of Seventh month 28th, 1898:

THE GOLD MINES OF SOUTH AFRICA.

It is doubtful whether there are in the whole round globe any more strategic points for evangelization than Johannesburg. Here are fifty miles of gold-bearing reef, dotted with perhaps 140 mines.

These mines are worked by native labor, a small force of white men being employed to oversee the unskilled native miners. Each mine employs hundreds of these young natives, and some mines employ thousands. Here, then, is the missionary's golden opportunity. The compounds are generally open to the missionary, and every day and any hour he may find some hundreds who are off duty, as the natives who are working at night have part of the day for rest. Some are sleeping, some are cooking, some are too indifferent to listen; but there are always some of these heathen who are willing and glad to gather about the Gospel messenger, and hear the message that has such never-failing power over the human heart.

It stirs one's soul to look on such a group. They come from such remote places—from every point in the southern half of Africa; there are representatives from fever districts where the white man cannot live; from remote corners, where it would cost a fortune to attempt to plant a mission station. Here they are, and all understand more or less of Zulu, and all plan to return to their homes when a desired amount of money shall be obtained.

To one who looks at these gold fields with spiritual insight and understanding, is it not clear that in the design of the Lord of the harvest they are not opened for the obtaining of the gold that perisheth, but for the souls that are to be reached and saved, and made in turn missionaries of the Gospel of the grace of God to the distant and inaccessible corners of Africa? These natives respond to the Gospel. Two months ago a new station close by the Crown Reef, the largest of the mines, was opened by the representatives of the American Board. Already an inspiring and daily work is progressing at this center, forty of these native miners being under the daily instruction of a Zulu evangelist and teacher, a young man of lovely Christian spirit. A few, we hope, have already received the Gospel into their hearts. Only lack of means prevent such centers being opened up all along the reef. God has sent these men here for the Gospel. Shall they have it?

An allowance for $400 for outfit and travel, and $600 yearly allowance, will enable a missionary to begin work at Johannesburg for the following reasons:

1. He can rent a house so that no money will be required at first for his house. Other buildings may afterwards be required.

2. He can purchase supplies there, not having to take one or two years' supplies with him. Johannesburg has 100,000 inhabitants, with railroads.

3. The expenses for itinerating will be small, as the natives are already there in the mines.

4. Books are printed in the Zulu.

5. Johannesburg is in the temperate zone, is inland, and has a good elevation; so that, compared with tropical Africa, it is healthy. Many in the Friends' Church have prayed that we might have a mission in Africa. This can be the fulfillment of that.

It is expected that at least two of us may soon be (D. V.) at Johannesburg. May the Holy Spirit guide in all of this.

May not this be read in every meeting, that there may be at least one in every meeting who may receive a copy of the letters written from Johannesburg? By using a duplicating machine, copies of the letters may be sent to every one who may be in any way interested in such a mission. This is asked under the conviction that since the privilege is given of sending the Gospel to every creature, if part of our missionary interest, as God may direct, goes into Africa, then our interest in all other places will be increased.

I will be glad to give any information or answer any questions I can.

A SWISS SANITARIUM FOR CONSUMPTIVES.

BY JEANNE D'ESTIMANVILLE.

So accustomed are we to the widely-diffused notion that sufferers from consumption must have an abundance of exercise, that it is rather startling to find the opposite theory introduced as a great curer of this seemingly hopeless disease.

At Feydey sur Leysin, Switzerland, 4,500 feet above sea level, in a sheltered position on the side of a mountain, backed by pine forests, a vast range of mountain peaks in front, stands a sanitarium wherein the theory of perfect rest, fresh air, plenty of food, absence of medicine and stimulants is advanced, and the benefits received therefrom great. As far back as 1860, consumptive patients were invariably sent to warm climates. Between 1860 and 1870 the progress of pathology opened new lights on the study of the tubercle; it was found that pulmonary consumption existed in as great a degree in the South as in the North. It became evident that zones entirely exempt from tuberculosis must be sought. The eyes of physicians were turned to certain parts of Switzerland, Silesia, Iceland, the high table lands of the Andes, Mexico, etc., where in varying degrees of altitude immunity from the disease was found. The first attempt was made at Goerbersdorf, in Silesia (2,500 feet above sea level). Dr. Brehmer founded there, thirty years ago, a sanitarium where patients were subjected to a treatment of ventilation, friction, nourishing food, etc. Then came the Engadine, where a well known doctor from Saxony was entirely cured at Daros. Later came the establishment of Falkenstein in the Taunus (2,000 feet), under Dr. Dettweiler, a pupil of Dr. Brehmer, in which life in the open air, lying for hours on couchessimilar to steamer chairs, plays a principal part.

Sanitariums were multiplied in the Grison's Alps. A few years ago some doctors of the French side of Switzerland began to study the Vandese Alps, finally choosing Leysin, which overhangs the valley of the Rhone at an altitude of about 4,000 feet, as combining the right elevation, plenty of sun, good water, little wind, excellent means of communication by coach or carriage with Aigle, thence by train to Lausaune or Geneva. This locality had long possessed a certain reputation among the Swiss as being a climate less damp, more tonic.

If Leysin be good, then Feydey, 700 feet higher, must be better—such was the argument. This table land slopes from northwest to southeast, the mountain chain of Tour d'Ai and Mayen at the back keeps out the cold winds, especially the dreaded "la bise," a cutting east wind felt in the neighborhood of Geneva, and even Lausaune.

In this favored spot a few years ago two fine hotels were constructed, supplied with every modern convenience, even according to American ideas. Above all, one finds here that thing so dear to our hearts—absolute cleanliness in all departments, a marvellous care as regards disinfection, a perfect safeguard for the well, who must, perforce, sometimes accompany the invalids. Acknowledging the verdict of famous European specialists that tuberculosis is contagious through the expectoration only, the greatest care is taken that "crachoirs" in the shape of glass bottles with metal tops, or covered cups for night, are used. No expectorating other than that is permitted. No detail is lacking as regards disinfecting—from rooms, furniture, daily washing of floors, burning of dust, scalding of utensils, even to the individual bag for each napkin at table.

To the east of the sanitarium, and communicating with it on first floor, is a spacious gallery in wood, opened to the south. Here is practiced the air cure which is so important a factor in diseases of the respiratory organs. Here the patients settle themselves for the day, stretched on Sedan chairs or lying in basket beds—a joyous company. Yes, strange as it may seem, almost all the patients have an air of gayety. One is inclined to ask, "Is it possible these are sick people?" One hears so little coughing; one sees, in general, good complexions, rosy cheeks, bright eyes.

According to the gravity of the disease, the length of time prescribed for absolute rest is long or short. By rest, I mean cessation from all exertion, even walking. Time must be given the tubercles to heal; until that is accomplished every exertion which tends to irritate the weak spot must be avoided. After perhaps from two to four months of complete rest, "doing gallery" every day, the patient is permitted to take short walks to some of the numerous sun boxes scattered about the different walks, always provided with straw hat and umbrella, even in winter. It is argued that while plenty of sun is needed for the body, in no case must it strike the head or eyes. Day and night, at all seasons of the year, windows of sleeping rooms stand wide open; as the air is perfectly dry, one cannot have too much of it—but it must be remembered that hot bottles and plenty of warm covering must always be at hand to keep the body warm. High fevers are reduced by this method of air baths, as quickly as by water baths in typhoid fever. It is also argued that in general liquors of all kinds are bad for the disease, and while a little red wine is permitted, the patient is urged to relinquish even that. For the disease itself no medicine, other than occasionally charcoal for the stomach, or creosote for the throat, is given—the great care is simply air, food and rest.

Would I could write these words in letters of indelible ink—aye, print them in the minds of every man, woman and child, thereby perhaps saving many precious lives. I write this not so much to induce Americans to cross the ocean in search of health and cure at Leysin, but in the hope that similar common sense ideas may be established in our own good climates—that some physician from our own land may be induced to visit this sanitarium, and study the methods there employed. How often I have seen in American health resorts patients, too weak to walk, advised to try riding a horse. Let us get rid of all these notions of excessive exercise, which in the first stages of the disease are suicidal.

At Leysin tuberculosis is considered curable; wonderful and many are the cures effected, wherein the patients return to their homes, taking up their lines of duty as before. It takes six months, a year, two, three, and even five years, according to individual conditions.

There is no special line of diet observed, other than raw or rare beef, scraped, and plenty of it, milk, eggs raw or cooked, and the ordinary nourishing foods, meats predominating. Temperatures, weights, percentage of bacilli, are taken and noted.

So dry is the air that one can sit with open windows in a room with the thermometer at 45 degrees, the snow several feet deep on the mountains, and yet experience no feeling of cold.

For the convalescent one finds skating and sledding; for the invalid proper the calm pleasure of contemplating an ever-changing panorama of mountain peaks, glorious sunsets and sunrises; a panorama which includes the valley of the Rhone, with its towns of Aigle and Monthey, the glorious "Dent du Midi" from base to summit; the Grammont, the Deut d'Oche, the Cornettes de Bise, the glacier of the Trient, the needles of Argentière, wooded hills, jagged rocks. Lastly, in a hollow of the Dent du Midi, looms up a smaller summit of Mont Blanc, which, though seemingly smaller than the others, is the first to be lit up by the morning sun, and at sunset the last to disappear.

Stand and shine. Lift up thy face to the divine airs. Reflect the light. Perchance only this is required of thee. Prove thy willingness to serve, and that thy service is a labor of love, and broader opportunities for the more interior action of the spirit will open out to thee.

APPOINTMENTS.

BY NEWTON A. TRUEBLOOD.

During the first month of each year many Friends' meetings have appointments to make in connection with business affairs, and it seems proper that opinions and suggestions on the subject might be kindly given, and reasons why extra care and wiser judgments should be practiced in these things.

The good and practical editorial, in a late number of this paper, entitled, "Weak Meetings," and the idea advanced that "it was easier to describe a weak meeting than to tell how to make it strong," is admitted, and allow me to state the latter part of the sentence is decidedly the object of this article.

I am strongly inclined to believe, from close observation, that the principal cause of our weak meetings is to be found in the weak and non-attending officers, and the subject is, therefore, headed "Appointments."

The five most important officers to be appointed in our regular meetings are elders, overseers, clerks, trustees and treasurers. When committees are appointed to bring forward names for any such places the first and most important thing to be considered by the committee is "qualifications."

The question should be openly and plainly asked in said committee: First, Is that man or woman whose name has been proposed the best qualified to fill the place? Secondly, If qualified and appointed, will he or she do their whole duty? Thirdly, Has the past record of the life of that person proposed been above reproach: no stain on their character, as to morals, honesty and uprightness in every-day life? If these three questions were bravely asked, and the committee bravely do their duty, we would have better officers in some of our Friends' meetings than we have; in fact, meetings would grow stronger. Principle and not policy should be the standard to work by in all appointments.

My individual experience in such matters has been different from some others, simply because I have been so deficient in the sense of hearing for many years that I necessarily placed a great part of my conclusions on the sense of sight and close observation.

Stating plain facts, I have known of some persons who were appointed as elders because they had wealth and gave to the Society more and larger amounts of their money than others less favored. This motive is so low, and morally wrong, that bad results nearly always follow.

I have known of some persons who were appointed overseers because, having served one or two terms of two or three years, it was known that if not appointed again the over-sensitive officer would be displeased and not attend meetings as usual. This is nothing more than giving offices to persons to please them.

I have known of other persons appointed overseers who had not attended a preparative or monthly meeting in six months, and yet in good health, and duty bound to be there. This was neglect of duty, and certainly needing change.

I have known of some persons appointed as trustees because they paid more money in to the treasurer's hands than any other member. Here money had too great an influence. I have known of some persons appointed as treasurers simply because they had held the office a long time, and if a change was made they would make the untruthful remark that it was a reflection on their honesty.

I have known of committees appointing a person as clerk simply because he was a regular and punctual attender of all meetings, and yet his knowledge of the English language was so poor he could not write one complete sentence of correct language.

These deficiencies generally refer to smaller meetings, such as those called preparative, monthly and quarterly meetings.

Again, it has been charged that weakness has crept into our Society in some few places, because all the appointments were made by certain persons known privately as "inside rings." No one could be appointed to an office unless the approval of those few with appointing power was obtained. This would be verging on to monarchical rules, and our Society, like our government, is, or should be, republican in its practices. But I cannot think, from my observation, that such meetings are to be found, or at least are so rare and so weak as not to deserve much attention.

With every one of our elders, overseers, trustees, clerks and treasurers working all spare time for the development of their meetings, and always present, except kept away by sickness or absence from home, I am fully persuaded in my own mind that all the other members would work also for the success of the meeting, and our meetings would be wide awake, active, deeply religious ones, and that this remedy of qualified, active, irreproachable officers is the one to apply wherever needed. In conclusion, allow me to say not an iota of personal feeling is to be found in these suggestions as to improvements in appointments.

Reader, whosoever thou mayest be, ask these questions as to thy own meeting, and answer silently in thy own heart, if thou desirest so to do.

Quakerism is not a creed to be learnt by rote, but it is a habit of life—a habit that even in the most trivial concerns of life should tend towards uprightness of character. It should be remembered that the strength of the Quaker character on the past was the recognition of the closest communion with God. It must now be seen that he is ready to help at every turn. John Bright was alluded to as an example of Quaker straightforwardness and conscientiousness; principle was at the back of his success. The simplicity of this statesman was remarkable, and more than once in the House of Commons he won his adversaries over by his unconventional manner. John Bright was one of the few men who could quote Scripture in Parliament, because it was recognized that his character was consistent with the words he was using.—Address by Frederick Andrews.

For THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

REST IN HEAVEN.

I am weak and worn—
Each fast-revolving season brings decay,
And voices, as by unseen spirits borne,
Forewarn a final day.

Long years my feet have trod
Life's checkered scenes of sunshine and of shade,
Yet through them all the providence of God
A pathway made.

In prime of early youth
He marked the course wherein my life should be,
And, faithful ever to His word of truth,
Remembered me.

Unscathed and undismayed,
He saved me from threats and wiles of men;
Or, when in sorrow drooped my fainting head,
Raised me again.

A loving mate and true
Shared all my joys or sympathized in grief,
One who the fittest word of counsel knew
To give relief.

She rests in glory now,
'Mid echoing anthems of celestial throngs,
Where countless thousands to the Saviour bow
In choral songs.

I feel her spirit near,
As I still linger on the shores of Time,
And faith perhaps, in mental vision clear,
That world sublime.

No mortal eyes behold
The radiant glory of that blest abode—
Nor tongue of man the joys of heaven has told—Prepared by God.

O, Father! 'tis to Thee
And Thy dear Son my soul in faith would cling,
Rising, from earth and all its fetters free,
On joyful wing.

Let my undoubting mind
In good or ill await the closing day,
'Till I shall know and my Redeemer find—
"The Life, the Truth, the Way."

Twelfth month, 1898.

JOHN COLLINS.

News from the Field.

We have received an attractive volume of the first series of "Present-Day Papers," published at York, England. It is a valuable collection of fresh, illuminative and vigorous essays on present subjects—subjects which never get out of date. We shall, as occasion offers, give our readers some selections from these "Present-Day Papers," and we hope the new series, edited by our friend, John Wilhelm Rowntree, will find many readers in this country.

We hear excellent reports of the way Thomas Newlin's mission is progressing in England. He has been well received, and he has obtained some liberal subscriptions for Pacific College. An interested Friend gave him a Christmas present of a trip to Italy. He has, therefore, been visiting Rome, Naples, Florence, Venice and Paris. His trip will occupy three weeks. He hopes to complete his work of visiting all the English meetings, and he plans to return in Third month.

NEW YORK YEARLY MEETING.

Batavia, N. Y.—Our dear friend, Luke Woodard, conducted a series of meetings at Farmington, beginning with the Week of Prayer. Although not largely attended, those who were at the meetings were amply repaid. A blessing attended the instructive preaching of our brother, and as he goes from place to place in Farmington Quarterly Meeting, may there be much prayer from earnest hearts that the church be revived and many souls be brought from darkness into light. Luke Woodard expects to attend the Quarterly Meeting at Collins and engage in a series of meetings at that place, after which the other meetings will be visited as the dear Master shall indicate and as strength shall be given.

We regret that our sister, Elvira Woodard, has taken a severe cold, from which, we trust, she will soon recover. We earnestly ask Friends to pray for the evangelistic work in prospect, and that our brother and sister have the physical strength so necessary for this arduous service, and that the power of the Holy Spirit rest upon them and upon all who shall co-operate in the work.

H. H. LEGGETT.

WESTERN YEARLY MEETING.

Amos Cook is now located as pastor of New London Meeting. He has been recently engaged in a successful series of meetings at this place.

Willis Bond is located at Westfield, Ind., as pastor. He and Flora Holiday have held a successful series of meetings, lasting more than two weeks.

Willis Bond held a very spiritual revival recently in West Indianapolis, and in connection with David Commons has held similar services at Lapel, Ind., that were greatly blessed of the Lord.

Leannah Hobson assisted the pastor, F. H. Tarmohlen, of Watseka, Ill., in holding a most successful meeting at that place. The results were forty-five conversions, fifteen renewals and forty-five accessions. This meeting has been greatly increased in spiritual life and numbers since F. H. Tarmohlen and wife have been there.

Alice Mendenhall, formerly a member of the faculty of Earlham College, has been chosen pastor of the meeting at Bloomington, Ind., and is serving the meeting most acceptably.

Lindley M. Reagan has taken pastoral charge of the meetings south of Terre Haute, Ind., in the limits of Bloomington Quarterly Meeting.

David Hadley held a week's meeting at Azalia, Ind., assisted by the pastor, Louis E. Stout. These meetings were especially blessed of the Lord.

Gertrude Moore is now serving the meeting at Haughville, near Indianapolis, as pastor. Since moving there she has held a most successful meeting. Many have been saved and the meeting greatly built up.

Mary Mills, of New Castle, Ind., has been engaged in evangelistic work in Western Yearly Meeting. The meeting held by her at West Liberty, Ind., was a season of great blessing to this meeting. About fifty persons received a definite blessing.

John L. Kittrell, of East Linn, has been engaged in evangelistic service in Chicago Meeting; also Thorntown and Kokomo Meetings, and will soon hold similar services at Plainfield, Ind.

The Friends at Russiaville, Ind., have recently repaired and enlarged their meeting house.

Hanover, Mich.—Ida Ryan, of Hanover Monthly Meeting, has accepted the call to the pastorate of Vandalia Meeting. She also goes to Penn Meeting once in two weeks on First-day evening.

Watsika, Ill.—Friends here began revival work on Thanksgiving Day and are still in the work indefinitely. The meeting house is crowded every night. Many have been strengthened in faith, and many more have been brought from darkness into light. The assistance of Leannah Hobson, of Stanton Monthly Meeting, and of Mary Cocks, our Yearly Meeting Superintendent of Junior Christian Endeavor work, was much appreciated by the people and blessed of God. M. Cocks was here a week and L. Hobson a month. The remainder of the time the home members in the hands of God have been carrying on the work. Up to date fifty-one have come into the meeting. All glory to our God, who hath power to bless.

JULIA STANLEY HENDERSON.

IOWA YEARLY MEETING.

Isaac T. Gibson, who formerly was engaged in Indian work, and who is known as a pronounced enemy of the liquor traffic, has moved from Salem, Iowa, to San Antonio, Texas.

Evi Sharpless, of Salem Quarter, has been holding meetings at Ackworth, Ia., for more than three weeks. The meetings have grown in interest and much spiritual good has been done, especially among the young people.

Jesse Lloyd is engaged in a series of meetings at Indianola.

KANSAS YEARLY MEETING.

The Committee on Literature and Peace of Kansas Yearly Meeting has undertaken to publish four times a year a magazine in the interests of "best reading." The first issue has reached us and is very interesting and valuable for its purpose. William S. Wooton is editor of it, and he has shown a good deal of push and enterprise in the new undertaking. It contains twenty-four pages and cover. We hope it will accomplish a work in stirring up the membership of the Yearly Meeting to the importance of good reading and the influence of literature.

McFall, Indian Territory.—To all who may be interested in the work of the Master and the building up of His cause in this part of His vineyard, I wish to announce through the pages of this most welcome visitor once a week in our homes—THE AMERICAN FRIEND—that there is an opening at this place for Friends and others who wish to locate in a good country, in a village or town situated on the new railroad that is now being built at this place. A town company is organized, town site surveyed, and lots laid off. A public well is now being dug. They are offering free lots for a limited time to any one who will build on same. Any one is allowed two lots free—a business and dwelling lot—by building on same. It is the especial wish of the writer that Friends look after this and make use of this opportunity.

Our nearest railroad station is Talala at present. Any one coming this way will find accommodation by mail carrier, which arrives here at twelve o'clock each day. It is a beautiful location, six miles east and three miles north of Friends' mission at Skiatook. For further information address Eli Carr.

La Crosse, Jan. 11th.—A series of meetings has just closed at North Fairview, Sand Creek Monthly Meeting. They were held by Mary A. Sibbitt, of Sterling Quarterly. The members were built up, some coming into a much brighter experience by conversions and renewals. Two accessions to the church. May God's good work go on.

Fred. J. Ryon, of Hanover, Mich., is engaged in evangelistic work in the Indian Territory under the direction of the "Associated Executive Committee of Indian Affairs." He and John Sargent have recently closed a very interesting meeting at Modoc, and they went from there to Seneca.

INDIANA YEARLY MEETING.

Little Blue River Monthly Meeting.—Henry McKinley, assisted by Luther Addington, commenced a meeting here Twelfth month 25th, 1898, holding twelve meetings. The Gospel was presented to the people in a plain, practical way, and we trust it will prove a great blessing to the church.

D. E. BARNARD.

Fairmount, Ind.—On First month 2d, Charles Stalker, of Westfield, Ind., began a series of meetings at this place, continuing two weeks. Many received definite experiences of conversion or renewal, and many others, in answer to the prayer of faith, received the Holy Ghost as an abiding comforter and guide. So markedly did the Holy Ghost have charge in the services, controlling all persons and conditions, that His supremacy was acknowledged by all. Instrumentality was so subordinated that we "perceived that this work was wrought of our God." Praises be to Father, Son and Holy Ghost. ENOS HARVEY.

Dear Endeavorers:—The sixth annual convention of Indiana Yearly Meeting Christian Endevor Union will be held at Amboy, Ind., Second month 10, 11 and 12, 1899. The program is almost completed and promises to be one of the best ever yet given. The railroad companies have granted a one and one-third fare rate from all points in Indiana. Tickets on sale Second month 9th and 10th, with return limit, leaving Amboy, Second month 13th. These tickets are round trip. Please do not buy your ticket on the certificate plan expecting a return reduction. Every Christian Endeavor Society in the Yearly Meeting should be represented at this convention by at least one delegate, and just as many more as can attend. The Amboy Endeavorers will furnish free entertainment for all delegates. Those expecting to attend the convention should forward their names at least three days before the opening session to the chairman of the Entertainment Committee, Lewis McFarland, Amboy, Ind., so that homes can be assigned.

Yours for the work,

RICHARD HAWORTH,
Yearly Meeting President.

OREGON YEARLY MEETING.

John Henry Douglas and wife are spending the winter at the home of their son-in-law, Frank Taylor, at McMinnville, Oregon.

NEW ENGLAND YEARLY MEETING.

Sandwich Quarterly Meeting.—Sandwich Quarterly Meeting was held at New Bedford, Mass., First month 12th, 1899. The attendance was perhaps a little smaller than usual; no ministers were in attendance from other sections. The meeting for worship was an interesting occasion. It was concluded hereafter to hold this Quarterly Meeting as a united meeting of men and women. Although a few of the women Friends regretted to have the women's meeting for business given up, the conclusion was reached with great unanimity, and objections, if any had existed, were cheerfully yielded, and the meeting concluded to meet as a united meeting in New Bedford in the Fourth month next. Sandwich has been the last one of the New England Quarterly Meetings to hold to the old order of separate meetings for the transaction of business. Within the past few days the last member of this Quarterly Meeting residing at Nantucket has passed away, and a meeting house now stands upon that island without a member there—a reminder of what has been.

WILMINGTON YEARLY MEETING.

Westboro, Ohio.—Amos Cook, superintendent of the Evangelistic Committee, of the Wilmington Yearly Meeting, came to this place and commenced a series of meetings lasting fifteen days. At the first meeting the power of the spirit was manifest in the conviction of sinners; the preaching was in the demonstration of the spirit and with power. The doctrine of justification and the new birth was preached, and the Holy Spirit did His perfect office work in the hearts of the people throughout the entire neighborhood, and sinners were convicted and converted, and backsliders reclaimed, and believers more fully established and built up in the most holy faith of the children of God.

Members of other denominations came into the meetings, and said they were wonderfully blessed. There were twenty-five services in all, and twenty-five or thirty families visited. There were twenty-five conversions and renewals. Thirteen made application for membership. These are the visible results, but the extent of the work eternity alone will reveal. We are very thankful the Lord sent Brother Cook this way. May the Lord continue to bless him wherever he goes. May he be enabled to sow beside all waters, and when the harvest is past and the summer ended he may come with rejoicing, bringing his sheaves with him.

MARRIED.

BOWMAN—HOCKETT.—At the residence of the bride's parents, in Stevens County, Kansas, on Christmas Eve, William F. Bowman and Ethel Hockett, both members of Lafayette Monthly Meeting of Friends.

Died.

CARTER.—Eli Carter died at his home near New London, Ind., where he had lived for thirty-seven years, First month 9th, 1899. On 26th of Twelfth month, 1898, he met with an accident, breaking his left leg at the hip joint. Owing to his advanced age (75 years) and the severity of the accident, it resulted in his death on the date mentioned. He was a birthright member of Friends, and was very regular in attendance at all the meetings. He always manifested an interest in education, and was influential in making New London High School what it is to-day. He bore his two weeks of severe suffering with a great degree of patience, and left as evidence his work and word that all was well, and that no cloud dimmed his anticipation and hopes of eternal rest. He leaves an aged wife and one daughter, with a host of relatives and friends, to mourn his departure.

COOK.—Joel Cook died Twelfth month 22d, 1898, in the 71st year of his age. The deceased was the son of Joel and Deborah Cook, of Isle of Wight County, Va., and removed to Richmond, Va., shortly after his marriage (1882). He was a birthright member of the Society of Friends and a regular attendant. He was of a meek and quiet disposition and bore his sufferings with Christian fortitude, and expressed himself as desiring to go to his eternal home.

COOK.—Louisa J. Cook, on First month 1st, 1899, at Los Angeles, Cal., where she had gone to be treated. She was born at Moresville, Ind., Twelfth month 14th, 1834. She was a consistent Friend. She bore her illness, which lasted for more than a year, with patience to the end. She leaves a husband and one daughter to mourn her loss.

EDGE.—On First month 1st, 1899, near Darlington, Harford County, Md., Mary S. Edge, widow of Joseph Edge, in the 81st year of her age. A beloved member and Elder of Deer Creek Monthly Meeting.

MORRIS.—On Twelfth month 25th, 1898, at the home of her daughter and son-in-law, Leantha and Mahlon Outland, near Georgetown, Ill., Sarah H., wife of William C. Morris and daughter of William and Achsah Hill, in the 71st year of her age. She was a lifelong member with Friends, a devoted Christian and temperance worker. She was the mother of nine children, all of whom, with two stepchildren and her husband, survive her. She bore with Christian fortitude great suffering from cancer for the last four years of her life.

NEWLIN.—Joshua Newlin, on Twelfth month 10th, 1898, aged 85 years, 2 months and 14 days. His mental faculties were much impaired during the last two years, but his faith in his Saviour remained firm, and when rational he conversed on his favorite theme, indicating that he was ready when the call came.

VANPELT.—Anor J. Vanpelt was born Third month 1st, 1821; died at her son-in-law's, John O. Johnson, near Samantha, Ohio, Ninth month 19th, 1898, aged 77 years, 6 months and 18 days. She was married to Tristram Smith in 1840, who departed this life in 1873. She was the mother of eleven children, six of whom have gone on before. Five are left to mourn the loss of a kind and affectionate mother. She was converted and joined Friends many years ago. She bore her sufferings with Christian fortitude and was anxious to go and be with Christ. She said, "I am ready," and peacefully passed away.

News and Events.

The report of the War Commission has been delayed by the unexpectedly long time consumed in considering the charges relating to the condition of the beef furnished to the army. Major General Miles some time since made a strong arraignment of the management which was responsible for supplying beef, which he had been assured by inferior officers was utterly unfit for use, and which appeared to have been subjected to chemical treatment to preserve it. This has been facetiously styled "embalmed beef." General Miles was undoubtedly honest in his statements, and his conclusions have been sustained by such an eminent officer as Governor Theodore Roosevelt, whose word is indisputable. Yet General Miles has not escaped criticism, and in fact his testimony was the red flag which inflamed Commissary-General Eagan, on the 13th, to make a scurrilous and infamous attack on his superior officer. Eagan unqualifiedly called General Miles a liar, and further luridly portrayed such a character.

Even granting the truthfulness of Eagan's countercharges regarding the beef supply, the language which he indulged in was entirely unbecoming a gentleman, and especially reprehensible in addressing a superior officer. On all hands indignation has been expressed at General Eagan's testimony, and the probability appears to be that he will have to face a court martial for his unsoldierly conduct. It is true that the War Commission have given him the opportunity to modify his language, but his first utterances will stand against him. The report of the Commission may be expected shortly.

Affairs in the Philippines are still ominous, but the administration claims that General Otis still has the situation well in hand, and hopes are entertained for a peaceful solution. Some complication and misunderstanding appears to have been caused by the too friendly treatment of the Filipinos in Sixth month last by our Consul, General Pratt, stationed at Singapore. At that time it seems that in replying on behalf of the United States to a Filipino address he indiscreetly expressed sentiments which led the Filipinos to suppose that it was the purpose of this country to assist them in securing their independence. This may partially explain the apparently hostile attitude of Aguinaldo and his followers.

The policy which the United States will pursue in the government of the Philippine Islands is yet to be outlined. President McKinley, it is announced, will appoint a commission to investigate the conditions prevailing in the islands, and to report on the best policy to be followed in governing these new possessions after the Paris Treaty has been ratified and the islands transferred to us.

The House of Representatives, last week, lost one of its most able members. After a prolonged attack of pneumonia, Hon. Nelson Dingley, of Maine, died on the 13th. He was an upright public servant, and was universally recognized for his incorruptible character, both in a public and private capacity. His political enemies, as well as his friends, have testified in strong terms to his sterling integrity. As the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, in 1897, he introduced the now celebrated Dingley Tariff Bill.

New York was honored last week with the naming by President McKinley of Joseph H. Choate to be Ambassador Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to Great Britain to succeed the Hon. John Hay, now Secretary of State. Joseph H. Choate comes of an illustrious family; he is a lawyer of international fame, and experienced in diplomacy; he is well able to fill the most important diplomatic position which this country has to offer. On the day preceding Choate's nomination, Charlemagne Tower, now minister to Austria-Hungary, was named for the position of Ambassador to Russia. The Russian embassy ranks next to that of Great Britain on the diplomatic list.

The sensation of the moment in Paris is the resignation of M. Quesnay de Beaurepaire from the Presidency of the Civil Section of the Court of Cassation. Beaurepaire claims that his withdrawal from the judiciary is due to the pro-Dreyfusite sentiments of his colleagues, and, as he states, to their efforts to defeat justice while doing what seems to an impartial observer their duty in bringing to the light of day the mysterious circumstances connected with the condemnation of Dreyfus. In a sensational "appeal to the Deputies," as he terms it, he calls for the removal of the Dreyfus case from the hands of the criminal Chamber of the Court, intimating the corruption of the same. Beaurepaire is a rabid anti-Semite, and appears to be bidding for popular favor, and especially the favor of the army, which he immoderately eulogizes in his appeal.

HULDA:

The Pentecostal Prophetess.

BY BYRON J. REES.

152 Pages. Bound in Cloth. Price, 50c., postpaid.

A short life story and seventeen of the sermons of Hulda A. Rees, together with her portrait and picture of her early church. This book needs no other introduction than for the reader to know that seventeen of her sermons, which Sister Rees preached with such accompaniments of power and blessing, are for the most part to compose it. The life-story is short yet comprehensive, the writer of it avoiding anything of a eulogistic nature and making the facts of the life serve as an appropriate introduction to the character back of the sermons.

Mrs. E. E. Williams, in a beautiful poem, which is also a part of the book, gives some refreshing glimpses into the character of Sister Rees.

Esther T. Pritchard also contributes a "Tribute," glowing with fervor and truth.

A WOMAN'S LIFE WORK.

Including Thirty Year's Service on the Underground Railroad and in the War.

BY LAURA HAVILAND.

This is a story of a wonderful life. The author was an active Anti-Slavery agitator and through her underground railroad work assisted hundreds of slaves to escape from bondage. During the war she spent about two years taking care of the sick and wounded. Through her efforts more than 2,000 Union Soldiers were liberated. She accomplished a great work in providing for the Freedmen of Kansas after the close of the war. She was the founder of the State Public School, at Coldwater, Mich., an institution which was the first of its kind in the world. The Industrial School for Girls at Adrian Mich., almost utterly owes its first existence, and especially its name to her efforts. Haviland Academy at Haviland, Kansas, was named in her honor, as also the town in which it is located. At the World's Fair she was introduced by President Palmer as "The Mother of Philanthropy," and well she deserves the title. Her experience as told in this book will be read with thrilling interest.

This book is printed on good paper and contains 625 pages. It is bound in cloth with red edges. The retail price of the book is $1.50. We will send it postpaid, for $1.00. Address,

PENELVE;

OR, AMONG THE QUAKERS.

An American Story by Richard H. Thomas, M.D., author of "Echoes and Pictures," "A History of the Society of Friends in America," etc. Preface by W. C. Braithwaite, B.A., LL.B.

This is a cool, refreshing, and in every way pleasing story.

It has much of the simplicity, purity and charm of Quaker Life, and while imaginary in outline and detail, is understood to be true in substance, as it is certainly written with full knowledge and sympathy as to what constitute the essentials of Quaker Life. The grand passion asserts itself, as every where else, among these simple scenes, and warms the story with a thread of pleasing and rather idyllic loving. The serious point of the story, beyond the portrayal of home life among the Friends, is to show its higher and better influence by tracing its effect upon a serious-minded agnostic who is brought into the story from New York and represents in his way the worldly side of modern life.—The Independent.

THE LIFE and LETTERS OF

ELIZABETH L. COMSTOCK,

Compiled by her sister, C. HARE. With portrait.

This interesting book consists largely of extracts from letters written and received by Elizabeth L. Comstock during her long sojourn in America. Her experiences in visiting prisons, asylums, hospitals, etc., during the time of the American War, are most graphically described, and form interesting reading. Her visits to England and Ireland form part of the concluding chapters.

"No one can read the pages that tell of her work among the wounded soldiers without thanking God for such tender Christian service, and one realizes more clearly than ever the meaning of war."—THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

"BIG JACK," THE EXPRESS HORSE.

I wonder how many of the little people in New York City who read this magazine have ever heard of "Big Jack." Not many, I fancy; and yet "Big Jack" is quite an important character, and holds a very responsible position, which he fills with much dignity as well as credit to himself, and satisfaction to his employers.

His headquarters are at Broadway and Twenty-second Street, where he can usually be found at about ten o'clock in the morning, and from that hour, off and on, until 5 p.m. In the intervals his business affairs call him to various parts of the city, but, being extremely methodical in his habits, he is usually at his office about lunch-time.

that he is strictly a vegetarian, confining his diet solely to cereals or fruit, with occasionally a few lumps of sugar. He should have been a Scotchman, judging by his fondness for oats, but he was born, I am told, in our own country.

Possibly his love for oats may account for his beautiful complexion, which is snowy white, with just a suggestion of pink showing through and telling of the warm, rich blood flowing underneath.

I first became acquainted with Jack about five years ago. Indeed, I must confess that we scraped acquaintance. It came about in this manner. I was standing with my little daughter upon the corner of Broadway and Twenty-second Street, waiting for an uptown car, when I became aware that we were being very closely regarded by a pair of unusually large and extremely beautiful brown eyes—eyes which were very eloquent, and seemed to say much more plainly than words could have done: "I am very favorably impressed with that little girl, and I should like to know her. Will she speak to me, do you think?"

I called the little girl's attention to the big eyes looking at her so steadfastly, and, do you know, I believe she understood their language even better than I did, and yet I flatter myself that I am a pretty good interpreter of such glances. At any rate, she walked straight up to their owner and said: "Why do you look at me that way? I just guess you know I keep lumps of sugar in my pocket to give to great, big lovely horses like you!"

Slowly a great white head with the most intelligent eyes I have ever seen was lowered to a level with the little maid's face, and two or three queer, sidling steps taken to bring it closer to the outstretched arms. The owner seemed to realize that those little arms never gave any save the tenderest caresses, and he was very glad to feel one circle around his huge, soft neck, while the other carried a small hand to stroke a very silky muzzle, for Big Jack is a horse among horses. And big, indeed, he is—a giant of his kind.—"St. Nicholas."

DRAWING ON THE BANK.

A little girl who had a rich papa, had also an iron savings bank, out of which, it is to be feared, she drew more than she deposited. Anyway, here is the way she became insolvent at her bank:

He was a bouncing big turkey, and they hung him by the heels, so that his nose almost touched the walk just outside the butcher's shop. A little girl was standing there and watching it. You could see that she was a hungry little girl; and worse than that, she was cold, too, for her shawl had to do for hood and almost everything else. No one was looking, and so she put out a little red hand, and gave the great turkey a push, and he swung back and forth, almost making the great iron hook creak, he was so heavy.

"What a splendid big turkey!"

The poor little girl turned round; and there was another little girl looking at the turkey, too. She was out walking with her dolls, and had on a cloak with real fur all around the edges; and she had a real muff, white with little black spots all over it.

"Good morning, miss," said the butcher man. You see he knew the little girl with the muff perfectly well.

"That's a big turkey, Mr. Martin."

"Yes," said the poor little girl, timidly. "He's the biggest I ever saw in my life. He must be splendid to eat."

"Pooh!" said the little girl with the muff. "He isn't any bigger than the one my papa brought home for Thanksgiving to-morrow."

"Could I have a leg, if I came for it to-morrow?" asked the poor little girl, softly.

"What, haven't you a whole turkey?"

"Never had one in my life," said the poor little girl.

"Then you shall have this one," said the little girl with the muff. "Mr. Martin, I've got some money in my savings bank at home, and my papa said I could do just as I wanted to with it; and I'm going to buy the turkey for this little girl."

The poor little girl's eyes grew so very large you wouldn't have known them. "I shall love you always, so very, very much; and I'll go home for Foxy to help. Foxy is my brother, and I know we can carry him."

I haven't room to tell you all about it; but the poor little girl got the turkey, and papa his bill.

"What's this," he said; "another turkey, eighteen pounds, three dollars and sixty cents?"

"That's all right," said the little girl who had the muff. "I bought him, and gave him to a poor little girl who never ate one; and the money is in my iron bank."

The bank was opened and there were just four big pennies in it—"Zion's Watchman."

MARY TODD'S HOOP-SKIRT.

In an article upon Mary Todd Lincoln, wife of President Lincoln, printed in "McClure's Magazine," an interesting account is given of Mrs. Lincoln in her girlhood. She is described as a bright, warm-hearted girl, far beyond most girls of her age in education. An old schoolmate narrates one of the young girl's efforts to make a fashionable appearance.

Mary and I each had a white dress, but Mary was not satisfied; the dresses were too long and narrow. She liked pretty things, and wanted to be in the fashion. Hoops were worn at this time by women; not the steel ones,—those came in later,—but home-made affairs, with small reeds, basted on the inside of the skirt, such as milliners used in drawn-silk bonnets.

Properly worn, their effect was quite pretty. Mary admired them above all things, and was frantic for one, but it would have been an unheard-of request to ask for it. After much worry and thought, she at last said:

"Lizzie, I am going over to Mrs. Hestetter's and ask her for some of her weeping willows. We can make hoop-skirts, and wear them to Sunday school to-morrow."

I agreed to it, and she put on her sun-bonnet, and with a basket, started on her errand. It was a long time before she returned, but she was abundantly supplied with the material, and deposited her basket with its precious burden in a closet in our room.

After tea we began our preparations. We seated ourselves upon the floor and lost no time, but worked diligently. We were startled to find how late it was when my aunt, Mrs. Todd, on her way to her room, tapped on our door, telling us it was time to be in our beds.

We did put out the light, and waited until we thought everybody was asleep; then we relighted our candle and worked until late in the night, when we hung up the finished garments with a thrill of delight.

Our sleep was too short to be satisfying, but we managed to get to breakfast in time. As soon as it was over, we rushed to our room. Mary was always quick in her movements, but now she made uncommon haste, and was dressed and out upon the street as I reached the front hall door.

One moment and we should have been safe; but, as fate would have it, aunt caught a glimpse of me. One glance was enough to show her what we had been striving for. She reached the door in a second, and called Mary back.

There we stood, a burlesque on vanity, as grotesque figures as eye need ever fall on, in hoops that bulged in front and at the back, while they fell in on the sides, and with our narrow white dresses stretched over them to their utmost extent. We had basted the willows in just as they came off the tree, one end being very large and the other very small.

Aunt looked us over from head to foot, and said, "What frights you are! Take those things off and go to Sunday school."

It was well our display was confined to our own premises. If we had gone to the McCord church, as we were so anxious to do, the congregation would have been convulsed with laughter, and aunt too deeply mortified to lift up her head.

THE TELESCOPIC SIGHT OF BIRDS.

Very learned theories of considerable length have been published as to how and why birds of a certain class are able to tell when one or more of the species they belong to have, by their own searching or by mere accident, found out a liberal food supply. But could the writers of such theories as these, at any period of their lives, ever have made a companion of a bird, one of the great Creator's most perfect works? I think not. If a small creature like a bullfinch can tell when his mistress is going out; and not only that, but will welcome her back with all the notes his little throat can get out before she is barely near enough for a dog to make out for certain, such a fact alone proves that birds' eyes are far-seeing. Many times has my wife placed her bullfinch's cage the length of three rooms away, one leading direct to the other, with the door open—it was rarely closed—and he would be busily engaged on a small plum twig, full of buds, that I had cut for him, when, just to test his keenness of vision, she has held the pip from an apple that I had been eating between her finger and thumb, and stood in the doorway farthest from him. The bird looked; down went his twig, out of his cage he dashed, and he was on her shoulder with crest raised and breast feathery puffed out, singing to her for his apple pip.

All birds have more or less telescopic sight, so to speak, and some of them have it to a wonderful degree. To return to our crow. Hardly had he found time to give one or two vicious digs at the now tender skin, in order to get at his highly-flavored meat, when from all points of the compass other crows came shooting along, like so many hawks, to join in the fish banquet. It was not long before they had transferred that luscious morsel to their crops. We could have knocked one or two of them over easily, but on no account would we have done so, for they were doing their appointed work honestly and well—that of clearing up the refuse of the tide.—"Pall Mall Magazine."

AT REST.

Sarah Coutant Jones, wife of Rufus M. Jones, passed peacefully away Seventh-day afternoon, First month 14th, 1899, aged 37 years. She was a pure and noble woman, who loved everything beautiful and true and good, and whose life was the best evidence of a high faith and devotion to the Master, who went about doing good. "These are they that have come up out of great tribulation and have washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb, therefore are they before the throne of God."

RELIGIOUS LIFE IN CUBA, PORTO RICO AND THE PHILIPPINES.

WHATEVER may be our political responsibilities toward the peoples recently brought into new relations with us, Christian people must feel a deep concern for their religious welfare. Recent and reliable information shows their religious condition to be pitiful indeed. The late General Sherman and his family were Roman Catholics, and one of his sons is a Catholic priest. He was recently sent to Porto Rico to study the conditions there, and has made an intelligent, broad-minded, truly catholic report. The utter failure of the Roman Catholic Church there is frankly admitted. There is very little religious life. The church has driven the people away from itself into worldliness, indifference and open irreligion. Recent statements made by the Bishop of Havana in connection with the changed relation of the church to the government show a similar condition in Cuba. The authorities at Rome, recognizing the necessity for a complete change in the church administration in these islands, have appointed an American, Mgr. Chapelle, of New Orleans, to the highest position there.

These admissions of the Roman officials must be very humiliating to their church. They attribute the deplorable condition of affairs to the union of church and state, and the unpopularity of Spanish rule. The people look upon the government and the church as one, and hating the one they cannot love the other. It is also claimed that Free Masonry has much to do with this. As there is no freedom of the press, and people were not permitted to criticize the government in public, they resorted to the privacy of the lodges to do this, and thus these became centres for disloyalty to both church and state. This explanation, gravely put forth by high church officials, comes with scant propriety from an organization that has always advocated the union of church and state—when the church was Roman Catholic.

In the Philippines the religious conditions seem to be even worse than those in Cuba and Porto Rico. We have no testimony from them upon the authority of Roman Catholic officials, but we have evidence of most reliable character from a very competent investigator. Rev. John R. Hykes, D.D., the agent of the American Bible Society in China, has recently spent a considerable time at Manila and elsewhere in the archipelago, investigating the state of religion and the opportunities for distributing the Scriptures among the people, and he has made two very full and interesting reports to the Society. He finds the condition to be deplorable and shocking. The church has utterly failed in its work there. It has worse than failed,—it has so influenced the people that they not only reject Christianity, but they despise its very name. The priests and friars have oppressed the people with numberless exactions, and have thus enabled themselves to live in luxury, and have accumulated vast wealth for the orders to which they belonged. Added to this has been a shocking immorality, publicly known, and often shamelessly displayed. The result of all this has been what might have been expected. Instead of the people being drawn to Christianity by its example of purity and holiness, they have been driven from it by this display of injustice and vice.

The changed relations to these peoples have brought to us great opportunities and grave responsibilities, and it is cause for thankfulness that the Christian organizations of our country are promptly stepping forward to meet them. A meeting was held some months since, in the city of New York, of the representatives of all the foreign missionary boards of the United States and Canada to consider the fields and to apportion them among the different organizations. It is a most satisfactory thing to know that these bodies have a "Committee on Comity and Unoccupied Fields," so that there may be no clashing as to the territory to be occupied and the work to be done. Nearly all the Protestant bodies, including Orthodox Friends, were assigned districts in the West Indies, while the Presbyterian Board assumed the chief work in the Philippines. It would be a great advantage, at this juncture, if our Yearly Meetings had some general missionary organization to undertake this work.

Even more promising, perhaps, is the work undertaken by the American Bible Society. Already its agents are actively at work in distributing the Scriptures in Cuba and Porto Rico. One gentleman in New York city has purchased 40,000 copies of the Gospel of John, in parallel columns of Spanish and English. The people are very desirous to learn our language, and this method of printing the Scriptures may be instrumental in accomplishing the double purpose of acquiring that language, which seems destined to dominate the world, and of obtaining those truths which, under the divine blessing, will change and dominate their lives.

During the past summer, even before the war was ended, the British and Foreign Bible Society addressed a communication to the American Bible Society in reference to the distribution of the Scriptures in the Philippines. Years ago the former body sent its agents there, but they were quickly killed by poison, and the work was stopped. Other attempts had been made, but state and church influence and authority were combined against them. In the new state of affairs, about to open, that Society felt that the American organization had the first right to the field, but if it could not enter upon it the older body would arrange to do it. Fortunately, the American Bible Society had a very capable and efficient representative in China, already referred to, and he was sent to Manila in the Ninth month, and, acting upon his reports, the Society is making thorough preparations for meeting the great opportunity that is offered. Admiral Dewey and General Otis offer every aid within their power, and the native leader, Aguinaldo, received Dr. Hykes very courteously, and offered no objections to the work.

It is very gratifying, too, that Christian people are acting under a sense of these new responsibilities. Collections are being voluntarily made in many places, and individual donations are being sent to the Society to enable it to meet the great expense that will be involved.

While there are so many things connected with and following the late war which we have to deplore, we may be thankful that the light of the Gospel of our Lord and Saviour may now shine into many hearts that have so long sat in darkness.

A YIELDED LIFE.

I've placed myself in Jesus' hands
To do His will;
To listen to His blessed voice,
And be still.
I'm walking with Him day by day
Upon the straight and narrow way.

And, when the path is rough and steep,
How tenderly
He clasps my hand, and with what love
He smiles on me!
"My child, I know the weary way,—
I'm with thee still," I hear Him say.

I lean upon His loving heart,—
He holds me close;
And I forget all pain and loss,
All earthly woes,
Soft nestling in His kind embrace;
Oh, what a precious resting-place!

As clay in potter's hands is now
My yielded life;
And oh, what peace within my soul,—
No war, no strife!
His will is mine,—He knoweth best,—
So in His love I sweetly rest.

With perfect trust I look into His loving eyes;
And as I look, each selfish thought
Within me dies.
All worldly gain henceforth is loss,—
I glory only in His cross.

Though for His sake I may despised, Forsaken be,
I count it joy if Christ's reproach
Shall fall on me!
If through the Garden I must go,
I'll lean on Him who loves me so.

My soul no longer shall delight
In things of earth;
For Christ is all;—and they are now
Of trifling worth.
Yea, all my boast and all my pride
Shall be in Jesus crucified!

Forevermore to earthly joys Dead shall I be.
But still I live, and yet not I,— Christ lives in me!
Oh, blessed mystery divine!
I am my Lord's, and He is mine.

Naught of myself, but all in Him,
For He is all.
And when in Heaven at His dear feet
I humbly fall,
Before the Throne my cry shall be,—
"The blood, the blood is all my plea."

ORIGIN AND OBJECT OF THE QUERIES.

BY JOHN NICHOLSON.

In presenting this subject it seems necessary to go back to the beginning of the Society that we may note, during its formative period, the development and gradual setting forth of its standard of Christian life, which all of its members were affectionately exhorted to make their own, and to which a reasonable degree of conformity was to be exacted under the penalty of excommunication or expulsion from the Society, for which they substituted the somewhat milder term of "disownment."

The "Society" was a result of a new religious movement for freedom from the forms, ceremonies and standards of life and doctrine prevailing in the established church. It was necessary for it to define its own position—to formulate its own rules and regulations, and to provide for the acceptance and observance of the same by its members.

The rise of the Society of Friends dates from 1644, with a slow but steady growth to 1651. From 1651 to 1654 the growth was more rapid, and at the end of this period there were 60 of their number more or less actively engaged in public ministry, and recognized by others as ministers of the Gospel.

In 1652 meetings began to be established, through which arrangements were made for the exercise of Christian care over one another, and for coöperation in meeting the new conditions which confronted them.

In this early period of the Society exhortations were addressed to those who were enrolled or otherwise recognized as members, sometimes by one or another of the leading members who felt thus drawn, but oftener by those meetings which at first assumed, and soon after acquired something of a representative character. As meetings were established one after another in widely separated communities, having little or no official connection with each other, need was soon felt for a form of organization which would establish proper relations between them and promote the general welfare of the Society, and they were gradually gathered into a system, very similar to that now existing.

From the establishment of London Yearly Meeting, in 1672 or 1678, exhortations and advices touching some phase of Christian life, conduct or duty were carefully prepared every year, and embodied in its annual epistle addressed to meetings and members.

The scope of these exhortations and advices were thus enlarged from time to time, until they apparently embraced every subject of vital interest to the members of a body or society, making so high a profession as their self-chosen name implied.

The judgment of the Society as to the duties of its members, in their relations to the church, to each other, and to the world, thus expressed in exhortations and injunctions, became the foundation for disciplinary regulations.

The superior meeting very naturally felt a desire to be informed in regard to the faithfulness of Friends generally in conforming themselves to the standard thus placed before them under the authority of the church.

At the Yearly Meeting, in 1682, we find three questions were proposed to the Friends who appeared for the respective Quarterly Meetings to give answers to.

The first related to ministers who had died during the year; the second to Friends who had died in prison during the year; the third, "how the truth has prospered amongst them since the last Yearly Meeting? and how Friends are in peace and unity?"

The Yearly Meeting was then composed of two members from each county or Quarterly Meeting.

The record states: "The Friends of the counties (or meetings) gave their respective answers, to the meeting's satisfaction and comfort, in relation to the truth's prosperity and peace and unity among Friends."

This is the first notice I find of the use in Friends' meetings of questions (or queries), and although these had probably been formulated with proper care and reduced to writing, the answers were given verbally.

In 1720 this "question" was added by direction of the Yearly Meeting, in language as follows: "To the questions already put in our Yearly Meeting it is agreed that this be added, 'How are the poor Friends among you taken care of?'"

Up to this time (1720) probably the three questions formulated in 1682 had been used in London Yearly Meeting each year, and verbal answers had been given by one or both of the two members from each county or Quarterly Meeting; and each annual epistle to the subordinate meetings, during this period of thirty-eight years, refers to the information thus received somewhat in this manner, quoting from the epistle of 1683:

"It was a matter of comfort and refreshment to us to hear the testimonies of Friends of the general prosperity of truth and unity and peace among Friends in the most counties of England and Wales." And from the epistle of 1717, thirty-four years afterwards:

"The Friends and brethren come up from the several Quarterly Meetings in this nation have given a good account to this meeting of truth's prosperity, and that Friends are generally in love and unity one with another."

I am unable to state how long these "questions" were thus answered verbally. In the epistle of 1720 the introductory clause to the information thus annually received underwent an important modification, and was changed from a personal to an impersonal form of statement, thus: "by the accounts received from the several Quarterly Meetings," and in that of 1722: "By the several accounts brought from the Monthly and Quarterly Meetings in England," which form of expression would rather seem to imply that the accounts were forwarded officially by the subordinate meetings.

However this may have been, it was not until 1739 that I find reference made to written answers. In the epistle for that year the form of introduction is as follows: "By accounts received in writing from the several Quarterly Meetings in England, etc., we have many acceptable informations respecting the state of the church."

I do not find the dates at which other questions were formulated, but as from this time onward the references to the information thus received are frequently more extended, and embrace matters that are the subjects of other well known queries, it seems fair to infer that from the date when written answers were required from the subordinate meetings additional "questions" were prepared, and that the term "query" was substituted for "question" as more suitable when addressed to a meeting.

About 1780 London Yearly Meeting directed that all the minutes and exhortations or advices issued from its beginning, in 1678, be care fully collated, and that suitable extracts therefrom be made and arranged under heads, and printed in a book for the use of Monthly and Quarterly Meetings in administering the discipline of the church, and for the general service of the Society. This work was completed, and the book published in 1783. It is now out of print, but a revised edition, published in 1802, contains a list of fifteen queries for the Monthly and Quarterly Meetings, and almost as many for the Meetings on Ministry and Oversight, and states that there had been a general revision of the "queries" in 1791. In the edition of 1834 the number of queries was increased to seventeen.

From the foregoing I infer that the use of stated "questions" or "queries" in the Society began in 1682, and originated in a desire on the part of the Friends who composed London Yearly Meeting to know to what extent members of the Society were living in conformity to the standard of Christian life as set forth from time to time in the exhortations or advices sent down from the Yearly Meeting.

At a later date, however, this desire was extended so as to embrace the thought of close self-examination—that when they were read in the meetings the members would carefully examine themselves as to their own faithfulness, and then with a proper regard for the result of this examination, and for their general knowledge of the conduct and experience of others in membership would formulate answers that would indicate the true condition of the meeting and its members.

At a still later period, in order to emphasize its sense of the value and importance of this close self-examination, and of a concern for the good of others, certain other "queries" of a most direct personal character were added, and designated "unanswered queries." These were directed to be read in the meetings for discipline to be seriously and deliberately considered, but not answered.

SEVENTH CONFERENCE OF FOREIGN MISSION BOARDS OF THE UNITED STATES AND CANADA.

BY M. M. BINFORD.

The seventh of these annual conferences that have come to be so notable in the history of American missions was held in New York, First month 10th to 12th, upon invitation of the American Board of Commissioners of Foreign Missions, who most hospitably entertained the one hundred or more delegates, representing some thirty of the mission boards of different denominations in the United States and Canada. The fact itself is an inspiring one, that those who stand for obedience to the Great Commission to carry the Gospel to all the world can thus meet to consider best ways and means of accomplishing this work, and can share with each other their plans for the campaign, and inspire one another with fresh energy for the conflict.

An hour was given at the first session to the question of missionary candidates and their special training. The question has arisen not only from the fact that large numbers of unordained men have been sent out, but also from a doubt as to whether ordained men generally have the most practical sort of training. Some valuable points adduced in the discussion were: That the chief need is a practical test of men in preaching at home, and in contact with various classes of society; training should be focussed rather than extended; any missionary should have the teaching faculty; child study here is useful, because child study fits for the study of the heathen mind; even too many theological graduates are unsophisticated; they need some knowledge of men, and manners, and customs of society; training in language is rarely of use, for a man may know language too soon, before he knows the people and their customs; it is well to study carefully comparative religion, but the actual heathen is far from any resemblance to the system under which he is classified; he must be studied on the spot. In general, it was urged that a man must know his Bible; he ought to be able to cook, to carpenter, to turn his hand to many things; he should know how to fight the devil here among the vicious; he should know that feverish zeal and haste count for nothing. Missionaries should study the question of their relation to boards, and should learn to do "team work,"—that is, to work with other people. It was also wisely suggested that probably the best training schools could be established on the field itself, where there were already missionaries. A secretary of one of the strongest boards remarked that after all it must be largely of the nature of an experiment to send out any candidate, however promising; for the best health often failed, and the most promising man proved ill-adapted to the work.

Last year Robert E. Speer raised the question of the need of a science of missions, so he was invited to prepare a paper for the conference of this year upon the subject. No paper of the two days' session aroused so much attention, or was more suggestive.

The possibilities of such a science lie in the fact observed by every one visiting missions, that after all the world is one; that sin is the same; the human heart the same, with its joys and sorrows, and there is but one Gospel to preach for all men. The Japanese or others may say, "Oh, you do not understand us," but we do understand them better than they know, for "God hath made of one blood all men that dwell on the face of the earth." Such a visitor will also see that missionaries are often working out the same problems in different places, ignorant of the success or failure of their brethren for the lack of such a science, and often costly experiments only prove again what has always proven elsewhere of the impracticability of certain plans or methods. After one hundred years of modern missions surely we are in possession of a sufficient number of facts to proceed on the inductive method in the construction of a science of missions. Such a science should determine dominant principles and methods of work. If it be said that there is no such science for home work, it may be answered that we ought to be wiser abroad than at home. Here there are correctives, but abroad we work among primitive peoples where mistakes are far-reaching in importance. The decisions of this conference have already assumed the nature of a science for the missionaries, and they are fully ready to assist in the development of such a science by the contribution of such facts as may be needed for study.

Such a science should define:

1. The aim of missions. Whether it is merely to announce the Gospel, or to preach it for the salvation of men, and the founding of the church. It should determine whether the church is an autonomous, independent national organization, or a dependence upon boards and churches at home.

2. The means of missions. Institutions must not dominate over the enterprise. The legitimate means are spiritual. "I am come that ye may have life."

3. Methods or agencies. These are evangelistic, educational and literary. The evangelistic agency transcends all others, and the most prosperous missions are those which use it most. It is a mistake to think that we can do nothing save with the children. Hundreds of adult natives have been transformed into most effective preachers of the Gospel. But the whole question of the best methods of developing native evangelists needs to be more fully understood. The educational work of a mission is twofold—academic and professional. What is the aim of the first or primary and intermediate work? Simply stated, it is to develop Christian character and raise up Christian men and women. The work must be thorough because of its effect on character, and it must be adapted to the needs of the pupils, but above all it must be unqualifiedly Christian. There should be enough Christian pupils in the school to create a dominant Christian influence, and the school should be limited to small enough number for thorough training. It is a mistake to admit large enough heathen influence to rule the school. Frugality and simplicity must be observed.

Such schools should follow, and not precede, Christian communities, and should serve chiefly for the children of Christian parents. The expenses should be met by Christian parents, excepting salaries of foreign teachers, and even those as far as possible. Exceptions to this rule will occur, however. Missionaries cannot meet all the needs of the world in educational matters, and must see to it that their schools are dominated by an evangelistic spirit.

The literary work of missions greatly needs a statement of such principles as are warranted by the experience of the past hundred years. Only such men should engage in it as are fully qualified. It is useless for men to waste time in book-making who are not fitted for that work. The best judgment is needed as to the kind of literature that should be published.

The most important matter before the conference, however, was the Ecumenical Conference on Missions, to be held next year in New York. I hope to be able very soon to lay before the readers the provisional program for this conference, so will omit further reference to it here. A meeting for business men was held one afternoon, and the plans laid before them, securing the hearty endorsement of some of the most prominent men of the city, and the appointment of committees to further the interests of this great rallying of the missionary hosts.

The delegates to the conference were given a reception and banquet at Hotel Manhattan on Fourth-day evening, by the Rev. Dr. Lamson, President of the American Board, and D. Willis James, Vice-President, and were entertained most royally. After dinner, speeches by prominent laymen, showing their cordial co-operation in the work of world-wide evangelization, kept us until a late hour.

Fifth-day was given to the consideration of missionary comity, unoccupied fields, relation of missions and missionaries to native churches, self-support, and relation to governments. Able papers were presented on these topics, with suggestive discussion by men who are experts in the various departments of missions. The question of missionary comity raised the question as to the ultimate church in foreign lands, now divided by our denominational lines drawn upon questions about which the heathen care nothing, and concerning which a Chinaman said, "It is the foreigners who keep us native Christians apart." But it is not likely that we of this land will move in the direction of unity in the near future. There is still too much denominational boastfulness with some of us. But most of the boards are ready for territorial division of the foreign field, so that we need not infringe upon each other's territory, and it was strongly urged that it is unwise for us to duplicate educational and medical institutions in the same city where one plant is sufficient. The administration of missions so that practically the same scale of wage for native workers, and the same principles of self-support in contiguous fields is also a pressing necessity.

The paper on relation of missions and missionaries to native churches was presented by Dr. S. H. Chester, secretary of the Southern Presbyterian Board, and urged the views which until recently have obtained in the stations under care of that board in Mexico contiguous to our own work, viz., that the missionary should not be a member of the local Presbytery, but of that of his home church, so that his only influence over its action would be advisory, and their control over him would be of the same nature. As to the management of funds the native churches should control the expenditure of only such funds as they raise themselves, and the missionaries should direct the disbursement of all foreign funds. But in the discussion our Methodist brethren naturally took the opposite view, since all their missionaries are members of the conferences created in the field. But we must remember that they send out bishops to hold these conferences, whose word is practically law, so that after all the same safeguard against the action of the native church is maintained.

But it is impossible to present in this brief article further points of these interesting discussions, and I must refer you to the official report, which can soon be obtained of W. Henry Grant, 156 Fifth Avenue, New York, at about fifteen cents per copy. It will not be ready for two or three weeks yet.

FOR THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

A NOBLE HOPE.

BY WAYLAND HOYT, D.D.

Righteousness—think of that a moment! What is Righteousness? It is "the state of him who is such as we ought to be," to adopt the definition of the original word by the authoritative New Testament Lexicon. To put it shorter: righteousness is right-being.

Righteousness is right-being toward one's surroundings.

You remember about Ahab's palace. It was large; it was sumptuously furnished; it was delightfully placed. But Ahab found one trouble with it. Looking forth from the palace lattice he saw a corner of the palace grounds shorn away by Naboth's vineyard. He tried to buy the intruding patch, but Naboth would not sell it. It was his heir-loom. Thereupon Ahab grew sick with discontent, went to bed, turned grumblingly to the wall. True picture that of life. Somehow, somewhere, between the soul and any set of circumstances there is tare and tret. "For the bed is shorter than that a man can stretch himself on it, and the covering narrower than that he can wrap himself in it."

Contrast with this the sweet adjustment of Jesus with His circumstances, making even Gethsemane tolerable with the submissive prayer, "Father, not My will, but Thine be done."

Righteousness is right-being toward others.

It is, toward others, honesty, beneficence, patience, glad service, refusal of attrition, the withholding of all mean criticism.

It is the exemplification of St. Paul's great hymn of love—of love which is not easily provoked, thinketh no evil, rejoiceth not in iniquity but rejoiceth in the truth; which beareth all things, believeth all things, hopeth all things, endureth all things; which never faileth. Remember the prayer of Jesus even for His crucifiers, "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do."

But how we fail of such right-being toward others—how swift our fault-finding; how harsh our judgments; how cutting our criticism; how grudging our service; how often strained toward others our relations!

Righteousness is right-being within the self.

I think Mr. Huxley has admirably sketched for us an ideal man. "A man so trained in youth that his body is the ready servant of his will, and does with ease and pleasure all the work that as a mechanism it is capable of; one whose intellect is a clear, cold, logical engine, with all its parts of equal strength, and in smooth working order, ready like a steam engine to be turned to any kind of work, and spin the gossamers as well as forge the anchors of the mind; one whose mind is stored with the knowledge of the great and fundamental truths of nature and of the laws of her operations; one who—no stunted ascetic—is full of life and fire, but whose passions are trained to come 'to heel,' by a vigorous will, the servant of a tender conscience; one who has learned to love all beauty, whether of nature or art, to hate all vileness, and to respect others as himself." But how far are we from such ideal triumph over the sensual strength of will, of sensitiveness of conscience, of large intellect, of sweet, wide sympathy. How the kingdom of the self is one of insurgence of the lower against the loftier; what a chaos is it, instead of cosmos!

Righteousness is right-being with God.

This is the root of all right-being other; being perfectly right with God we shall be perfectly right in every other quarter.

Spirit, how is it with those rooms of thine?

What front the world look very clean and fair,
Thy curtains are so white; thy windows shine;
Are dirt and cobwebs hiding anywhere?

Ah, souls are houses; and to keep them well,
Nor Spring and Autumn mourn their wretched plight,
To daily toil must vigilance compel,
Right underneath God's scrutinizing light.

But beneath God's "scrutinizing light" how much dirt and cobweb disclose themselves. How often the thought of God's inspecting presence is a pain rather than a peace.

But, the Apostle tells us, "We through the Spirit, by faith, wait for the hope of righteousness."

Think a little of this Hope of righteousness—this Noble Hope. I have read how Dr. Barnardo in London has gathered into various homes in the United Kingdom so many of the stained and draggled waifs of the city streets that now his family numbers beyond five thousand.

But I am sure you can see plainly that though Dr. Barnardo has furnished for so many of those street waifs home, shelter, clothing, food, culture; that though from their sad external plight—he has utterly defended them, yet those street-waifs enter those homes with the habits and manners of the street-waif still upon them. They are by no means, in the beginning, finished gentlemen. Their language is wrong; their manners are wrong; their ignorance still blights and depresses them.

After the boys have been gathered in the home, and have been thus wholly rescued from their sorry state, there is an immensity of various training and culture needed to lift them to the high level of good citizens and real gentlemen.

Which things are a kind of parable of what Christ's Gospel does for us.

By justification we are set at rights with the law of God which we had broken; by the atonement of the Saviour our sins are remitted and their penalties overpassed; in the strong language of the Scripture, we are saved with an "eternal salvation."

But, being thus saved and justified, it does not follow that here has been wrought out within us complete right-being in all directions. We have not yet reached the ideal of it on every side. We are Christians, but we are by no means yet perfect Christians. But nothing less than perfection is the ideal for us. "Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in Heaven is perfect."

Conceive now one of Dr. Barnardo's boys introduced into a gracious home. He is within the home. He is delivered from the evils and the poverty of the streets. He is fed, clothed, sheltered, put at school. But the street-waif habits are still strong in him. He is not yet what such a home would suggest his being—what Dr. Barnardo desires him to become.

But suppose the boy seized with a great passion for becoming what Dr. Barnardo wants him to be. Suppose it is his supreme longing, his effort by day, his dream by night. Why, a great and energetic hope is wakened in the boy. Such hope is the strongest possible propulsion toward becoming.

Such is the Noble Hope—the hope of righteousness. It is a passionate longing and vigorous attempt toward right-being—as to circumstance, to others, to self, to God. It is gravitation upward.

In a prayer written by Robert Louis Stevenson to be used in family worship in his island home at Samoa, occurs this clause, "Deliver us from mean hopes and from cheap pleasures." This Noble Hope will cast out mean hopes and prevent cheap pleasures. It will summon a man to tense and glorious effort. And it cannot be disappointed; it holds within itself the sure "promise and potency" of the ultimate and radiant bloom.

With an eternal destiny confronting us, is it not sad to be stirred and strung with any lower hope than this noble one?

FOR THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

SHALL ANY MORE WHITE MISSIONARIES BE SENT TO JAMAICA ?

BY JOSIAH DILLON.

It is a sad thing to reflect upon, that we have lost two of our missionaries sent out by Iowa Yearly Meeting to Jamaica, and one small child in fifteen years, out of about thirty who have been sent in the interest of the missionary work, twenty-one or more of whom have remained one or more years in the field. But it is a sadder thing to note that for the lack of the Christian influence of those sent out, perhaps a thousand or more of the poor, sinful inhabitants of Jamaica would have died and gone down to eternal ruin without salvation. Several of those who were converted to Christ by our white missionaries have already died, and we believe are now enjoying eternal life with the two loved missionaries who have given their lives for them after the Saviour's example. It is true that white people do die there from the effects of malaria, and it is just as true that colored people die from the same cause. There are malarial districts there where it is very unhealthy in the lowlands and near the swamps, but it is not an unhealthy climate in the highlands and the mountains, although some malaria exists even there. But upon the whole the climate of Jamaica is as healthy as our Southern States.

Colored missionaries would be very acceptable, and might be very efficient if they could be found that were available, and found in time. But those who are available and efficient are not easily found by Iowa Yearly Meeting, and it is not worth while to say that we have not tried, for we know we have not sufficient colored members to supply our missionary demand. Those who are not members with us, if available at all, most likely go with the churches to which they belong. Even if we could get them they would not very well represent Friends. Therefore, however desirable it might be to send colored missionaries into the field, it is at present utterly impractical.

On the other hand, if we were to wait until we could have everything just as we would like, without danger and sacrifice of (white) life, to send the Gospel to Jamaica, Africa, Madagascar, India, Cuba, Hayti, and many other places that are subject to malaria and other diseases that are common to these countries, we would wait another nineteen hundred years, as we have the past nineteen hundred since Christ told the church to go and preach the Gospel to every creature.

If Livingston had waited until some colored man had been found capable and willing to explore the malarial regions of central Africa for the purpose that he explored it, it perhaps would not have been done for a thousand years. To-day it is open to the Gospel, and a few white missionaries have sacrificed their lives, and more are ready to do so, to carry the Gospel to them, and thousands of poor heathen have already been saved from sin and eternal death.

Fourteen thousand white people are now in Jamaica for trade and commerce and fruit raising. There are many white missionaries of other churches, and no special complaint of danger to life when proper care is taken to locate their residences in healthy places, of which there are plenty to be found.

Shall Iowa Yearly Meeting now give up the field and call our missionaries home, and send no more unless we can find colored ones to supply the needs? No; I believe we will be more faithful to God, who has called us, than that; and if need be offer up a few more of our lives, not to destroy men's lives as in war, but to save men's lives by the command of Christ to go and preach the Gospel to every creature, with the assurance that He is with us unto the end of the world.

FOR THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

THE CZAR'S PROPOSAL.

The proposals made just recently by the Czar of Russia, inviting all the chief governments of the world to unite in holding a Peace Conference have the impress upon them of sincerity and good faith, and are therefore worthy of the most profound thought and respectful attention. It is the dawn of a New Era if the time is now here when governments can be induced to agree to stop and dispassionately confer together upon the practicability of lessening and finally disposing of these great armaments which are now upon the nations, and it will be an advanced step toward the establishment of a general and permanent peace. It is certainly an opportune time for all the friends of peace to be aroused by the advantage that his call affords and see that it receives their hearty encouragement and support.

And it appears especially appropriate for the Friends' Church, on account of its present and past record upon this question, to be quick to bring its full force to bear in favor of this great movement.

The propositions are general in their application, and hence wherever the Friends' Church exists it should be reasonable to expect that good use will be made of this opportunity in endeavoring to influence their respective governments to become willing parties to and in the Conference. If our church in the United States could, through properly accredited representatives, unite as a whole in one petition to our government, it would probably have more force and better effect and be more businesslike. This, though, may not be practicable now. If not, then it does appear that each Yearly Meeting, in its own Disciplinary way, should take immediate action and forward petitions and thereby assist the government in coming to a wise decision.

C. F. MORRIS.

Coloma, Ind.

In all "Christendom" there is collected annually $10,000,000 for missions. This is a large sum, but it is stated that the expenditure in the United States alone for artificial flowers, etc., on women's bonnets, is $20,000,000.

THE FIELDS ARE WHITE!

Where are the laborers? Every few days I receive letters asking for help in new fields, and for pastoral and evangelistic help in other places. My first thought when I read these letters is, I will go, but after more than forty years of this kind of work, I find my strength unequal for the work in these new and needy places.

Are there not quite a number who may read this notice, who, if true to the call of the Master, will enter some of these fields and plant a vineyard, and enjoy seeing an abundance of fruits in the near future to the glory of Him whose you are and whom you serve, and yourselves be partakers of the fruit for your outward comfort and support?

In this Yearly Meeting we have been wonderfully deprived of quite a number of very efficient ministers and workers. Among them, Prof. George Hartley, now in charge of the religious work in the Indian Territory; Thomas C. Brown, Clerk of Western Yearly Meeting; Elwood Scott, now pastor at Carthage, Ind.; James Price, now pastor at Clintondale, N. Y.; Alfred Ware, now pastor at Mt. Pleasant, O.; Matilda W. Atkinson, city missionary in Augusta, Me.; Marion George, now pastor at Payton, Ia.; Nelson Morrison and wife, working in Indiana; Prof Folger, gone to Kansas; and J. H. Hadly, now pastor in Iowa. We have only four regular pastors left in this Yearly Meeting. There are some good earnest workers left, but none who can go out as evangelists and build up new churches. This is a great field for Friends, and there is no better country in the world for people of small means, a very healthy climate, plenty of pure water and fuel, and very rich soil.

I will add an extract from a letter from one of our noble women: "Providence has opened the way most wonderfully for the establishment of a Friends' meeting in this place (Boise, Idaho). We have a house raised which will be completed soon, a very few members from different localities, several members of the Methodist Church, and others, who are ready to unite with us for the sake of a place of worship in this thickly-settled suburban addition to the city. We want a series of meetings just as soon as we can go into our new house.

"Of course we have no money to pay, for it has drained the pockets of the people to build, but we will entertain the evangelist and do all we can to aid in the work, and if the pocket-books get converted all will be well." It was a great trial to say no to this invitation; let some soul-winners say yes.

Then there are some very inviting fields where meetings are already established. A letter just received from one of these places says: "I thought I would like to talk with you for a few minutes, thinking over the past—how the Lord has blessed us here in times past; and as they have put me on as chairman of the Pastoral Committee, and I look around and see the needs, oh! what shall we do? I feel to ask from one who has been through all such places. We need a revival very badly, and also some one in future for pastor. We are few in number, yet strangers are coming until all the houses are filled up. I do not know how long they will stay, yet it looks like a good time to work. We can give for support only about $12 or $15 per month. For that reason it seems hard to find any one who would take the place. Do you know of anyone coming this way in your wide acquaintance? I did not know but that you might know of some one. Hope you will be able to come to Quarterly Meeting next month. If we do not hold a meeting before, I hope we can then for a few days after." This is one of the best fields we have in this Yearly Meeting. It is a good place for a faithful, self-sacrificing worker to develop his gift as well as build up the cause in this inviting place. 'He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches.'

I am glad to say that my health has greatly improved, but I am not able for the pioneer work, as in other days.

LA GRIPPE.

I see by accounts that la grippe is very prevalent in many parts of the United States. I saw an article in a Chicago paper on that subject, in 1891, by Dr. Keeley. He recommended very highly the use of asafetida as an antidote and curative for that complaint, as well as a nervine to tone up the system. He recommended from four to eight grains at a dose, four times a day, stating that he had been more successful in treating that disease by its use than in any other way. Just at that time I was prostrated by a very severe attack. I took that remedy freely, and it broke it up and cleared my system, and I have never had any symptoms of it since. It is perfectly safe, and I have no doubt would prove effective in very many cases.

The most truly heroic thing may be the refusal to appear as a hero. To resist a temptation to make a display of energy, courage, or whatever is likely to show itself conspicuously in that which is visible heroism to the world, sometimes calls for the invisible employment of those very forces. It takes courage to be silent, and "strength to sit still." Restraint and self-control are in reality forms of high energy, physical and moral. At their best, they constitute a heroism as noble as it is secret and invisible.—"Sunday School Times."

Progress, in the sense of acquisition, is something; but progress in the sense of Being is a great deal more. To grow higher, deeper, wider, as the years go on; to conquer difficulties, and acquire more and more power; to feel all one's faculties unfolding, and truth descending into the soul,—this makes life worth living.—James Freeman Clarke.

FIRST QUARTER.

Lesson IV.

Second month 5 1899.

THE NOBLEMAN'S SON HEALED.

John 4: 43-54.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Jesus said unto him, Thy son liveth; and himself believed, and his whole house.—Jno. 4: 53.

The incident probably took place in the early part of the second year of Christ's public ministry, and at the beginning of his Galilean ministry. The scene is laid at Cana of Galilee, and the whole narrative has the mark of reality and naturalness.

The meeting with the woman of Samaria; the conversation with her, and the two days spent with the Samaritans were episodes in the journey from Judea to Galilee. The lesson refers back to verses 3 and 4 of the chapter, and what intervenes is a parenthesis.

43. "After the two days." Revised Version. The days mentioned in verse 40.

44. "For Jesus himself testified," etc. The verse is confessedly difficult of explanation, and no explanation is entirely satisfactory. What do the words "his own country" refer to? If they mean Galilee, why should they account for his going there? They would give rather a reason for his staying away. Compare Matt. 13: 57; Luke 4: 24, which describe later uses of the same proverb. Some of the ablest commentators refer them to Judea—the native country of our Lord. He had not been well received in Jerusalem, and went back to Galilee hoping to gain a better reception of his message. Others say he was in search of retirement, and so sought his own country. Of the two views the former presents the fewest difficulties, and is more in harmony with the immediate context.

45. The feast means the Passover, and probably the one mentioned in John 2: 13-25. The Galileans were impressed by the miracles wrought by Jesus in Jerusalem.

46. He would be likely to be welcomed in Cana because of his previous visit, and it was also the home of Nathanael (John 21: 2). "Nobleman." Literally, "king's officer." He was a man in the service of Herod Antipas. Herod was really a "Tetrarch," but was popularly known as "king" (Matt. 14: 9). Some have imagined that this was Chuza, whose wife is mentioned afterwards as a believer, and legends trace her conversion to the healing of her boy (Luke 8: 3). Capernaum was twenty to twenty-five miles distant from Cana. "Sick." Verse 52 tells us that it was a fever from which he was suffering.

47. He had heard that Jesus had wrought cures in Judea, possibly Jesus had already healed some in Capernaum itself. At any rate here was a chance that his sons' life might be saved, and he at once takes the journey. "Come down." These words show the accuracy of the narrator. Cana was among the hills, Capernaum by the lake, whose surface is 682 feet below sea level. To go from Cana to the lake meant a descent of several hundred feet. Marshy land abounds in the neighborhood of Capernaum; the climate there is almost tropical, and malarial fevers are frequent.

48. "Jesus therefore said." Revised Version. He read the man's heart. The father came, not so much on account of his great faith, as because he had heard of the miracles which Jesus had performed. "Sign" refers rather to the spiritual aspect suggesting some truth; "wonder" refers rather to the external aspect where something strange attracts the attention. The words are in the nature of a soliloquy; they state a general truth regarding the Galileans, and imply that the father was a Jew. This was in great contrast with the Samaritans who had believed without signs or wonders. Still the man had faith, though it was a weak faith.

49. It is clear that the man did not regard Christ's words as a reproof, but he does not wish to discuss anything while his son—his "little boy" (as the word might be translated) lies at the point of death. His faith, weak at it was, clung tenaciously to what he did believe. He, however, had no conception that Christ could heal without going to the sick boy.

50. "Go thy way." This was a great test—was his faith sufficiently strong to accept the assurance without a sign or even a wonder? The man's faith grew from contact with the great personality—"before he believed about Jesus, now he believed on him"; he accepted the Lord's words in simple trust, and went his way. If the Jewish reckoning is the one used by John, it would be about 1 p.m. that Christ spoke the cheering words; from the next verse it would seem that the father let a night pass before he started homewards.

51. "Going down." From Cana to Capernaum. "Servants met him." They hurried to carry the joyful news; perhaps to tell him it was no longer needful to seek the prophet, for they were ignorant through what means the boy had been cured.

52. "Amend." Still the father could not think that there would be anything but a gradual recovery. He wished to fix the time so that he might be sure. His faith had grown, but it was to grow still more. "The fever left him." It disappeared all at once.

53. "Believed." A full belief. "That which convinced the nobleman's household that a miracle had been wrought was not the recovery of the boy, but his recovery in connection with the word of Jesus." The spiritual history of this man is very encouraging. His faith grew by using—each step led him into a higher and better faith. Our Heavenly Father condescends to our weakness. He as much as says, use the faith you have; go as far as you can; as you do this you will see more light, and you will come to know "a stronger faith to be your own."

54. "Second miracle." Probably the second miracle wrought in Galilee, not the next one after that of turning water into wine.

PRACTICAL THOUGHTS.

1. He who would have his petitions answered must be in earnest.
2. Faith only grows by using.

FRIENDS WEST OF THE MISSISSIPPI.

BY M. Z. KIRK.

Last week we considered the growth and development of Friends from Salem, Iowa, to the north. This week we shall follow their development to the westward. The first meeting west of Salem was Pleasant Plain. As early as 1840 a few Friends had settled in this neighborhood, and an indulged meeting was set up. In 1841 they built a log house, in which they conducted a Friends' school and held meetings. By the opening of their monthly meeting, in Twelfth month 28th, 1842, they had completed their double log meeting-house, each room being about 16 by 18 feet. For the information of much in this article we are indebted to Eli Jones, who not only gave much valuable information, but helped to look over the old monthly meeting records. He states that among the early members and founders of Pleasant Plain Monthly Meeting were the following heads of families: John Jones, Isaiah Hinshaw, Benjamin W. Hinshaw, Joseph Roberts, William Pickrell, William Pickering, Phineas Heston, Jesse Arnold, Alexander Bell, John Beals, and others.

After the formal opening of this monthly meeting, the first minutes made related to the marriage of John Conner and Almeda Shockly; this matter coming up from Salem Monthly Meeting.

In Third month, 1843, Salem Monthly Meeting turned over Richland Indulged Meeting to the care of this monthly meeting, and they appointed a committee to have care of the same. It is very interesting to note that the first monthly meeting stock was $4.00. In Fifth month, 1843, Joseph Hoag (well known for the remarkable vision) was very acceptably present with them, and was wonderfully appreciated. In the early months of this meeting they had no resident ministers, and it was a great treat to have the traveling ministers in their monthly and quarterly meeting.

From the very beginning, even to the present time, the Pleasant Plain Friends have been very much interested in education. In Seventh month, 1843, their records show that there were 109 children of a suitable school age, 49 of which were taught under the direction of Friends, and 25 taught in schools not set up by the monthly meeting. In Eighth month, 1843, a committee was appointed "to consider the propriety of opening a First-day school at this place, and also to have the care of said school, if they think best to open one." This school was opened, but discontinued before the next monthly meeting. It was, however, re-established permanently in Fifth month, 1844. In this new and vigorous meeting upon the prairie, made up of Friends from North Carolina, Tennessee, Ohio, Indiana and Illinois, it was difficult to get all of its membership to adhere to the various customs of Friends at that time. A very large percentage of the minutes of all the monthly meetings held are made up of complaints against Friends, appointing committees to deal with them, and reports of the same, bearing testimony against them and disowning them. We find that Friends were dealt with for sleeping in meeting, card playing, dancing, fiddling, attending weddings accomplished contrary to discipline, for neglecting attendance of meeting, for telling untruths, for having difficulties with neighbors and refusing to arbitrate, and for deviating from the good order of Friends in the plainness of language, dress and address.

In Third month, 1844, the monthly meeting was directed to raise money for the Friends' boarding-school at Richland, Ind. It seemed very difficult for these pioneer Friends to collect this part of their meeting money paid, as this minute occurs very frequently, and it seems that they were usually having difficulty in raising the proper amount of money. Contributions for aiding in the Indian work seemed to be collected with ease, as $48.00 was appropriated at this session of the monthly meeting, and $32.00 was raised for yearly meeting stock. In Tenth month, 1844, Richland requests a preparative meeting, which was not granted, and the matter was also brought before Western Quarterly Meeting in 1845, but was again not granted. A committee from Salem Monthly Meeting came up in Third month, 1845, to confer with them in regard to asking Indiana Yearly Meeting to give them a quarterly meeting this side of the Mississippi, and in the following month the request was issued. In Fifth month a committee from Western Quarterly Meeting visited them to investigate the advisability of establishing a new quarterly meeting. This matter was kept under consideration, and Pleasant Plain and Salem Monthly Meetings held another conference in Third month, 1847, and in the following month the joint committee proposed a quarterly meeting to be established at Salem, Iowa, to be known as Salem Quarterly Meeting, to be held the third Seventh-day in Second, Fifth, Eighth and Eleventh months. Their request was taken up and granted in Indiana Yearly Meeting, and the Quarterly Meetings were established in Fifth month, 1848.

As was mentioned in our article last week, we are often surprised to find that the clerks have not signed their names to the minutes. A little examination, however, shows why this is as it is. Instead of the clerk copying off the minutes as they do at the present time, the monthly meeting allowed the minutes to accumulate for some months, and then appointed a committee to assist in writing the minutes in their record book; in some of these we find that one Friend writes until he is tired, and then another Friend takes the quill and writes until he is tired, etc. Thus we see the minutes are not so much those of the clerk, but they are really compiled and corrected by the whole committee.

In Third month, 1847, the monthly meeting directed that five-month schools should be opened at Pleasant Plain and at Richland. However, schools for shorter terms had been taught here before. In Ninth month, 1847, this meeting was united in judgment that it would be right to grant Mahaska County Friends a meeting, which was to be opened in Tenth month next. Joseph Roberts, John Beals, John Hadley, Job Smith, John Howard, Phineas Heston, with a like committee of women Friends, were appointed to attend the opening of this meeting in Mahaska County, which was located a little east of Oskaloosa, and was named Spring Creek. In Eleventh month the monthly meeting appointed Wm. Sopher, Jonas Hoover and Samuel Hull to take and hold the title to the ground for Spring Creek Meeting.

From the very beginning the English Friends were very thoughtful of these pioneers, and sent them not only a good supply of the general epistles, but also sent a great many tracts for distribution, and books to start their new library. We often find record of committees to be appointed to have charge of and to buy new books for the library, and to hold out a subscription to defray the expenses of the same.

In Fifth month, 1849, the Friends living on the three rivers (a large tract of land to the south of Des Moines) requested the privilege of holding an indulged meeting among themselves on the First- and Fourth-day of each week, to be known as the Three Rivers Meeting. The same committee that was appointed to establish the meeting at Spring Creek, with the addition of David Wilson, was appointed to confer with these Friends. At the next monthly meeting they made the following report: "Those directed to confer with the Friends of the Three Rivers made the following report, with which the meeting unites and grants the request. Job Smith, David Wilson, John Hull, Thomas Stafford, John Hadley, George Smith, and Moses Hockett are appointed to attend the opening of the said indulged meeting in conjunction with a like committee of women Friends, and report to the quarterly meeting." In Seventh month the committee reported that they had established this new meeting, which was called Middle River Meeting. In Eleventh month, 1848, the Friends in and about Richland had become more numerous, and they asked that at the beginning of next year the monthly meeting should be held at their place half the time, which both the monthly meeting and quarterly meeting united with. In Second month, 1849, they also asked that an indulged meeting should be established northeast of Richland, which was allowed, and the meeting was known as Rocky Run. It is interesting to note that in Fourth month, 1849, Benjamin C. Andrews, a young Friend who had recently brought his new wife from Ohio, was appointed recorder of births and deaths. Since that time all these meetings have undergone a great change. He has brought up a large family, the youngest of whom died on the Jamaica mission field not long since, and he has been changed from one of the strong, vigorous young men to one of the oldest men not only of the meeting in Oskaloosa, but also in the Iowa Yearly Meeting.

We find that the tide of emigration was moving rapidly westward, and the Friends in the Three Rivers country asked for another meeting in Eleventh month, 1849, to be known as South River. John Howard, Isaac Jones, David Wilson, Job Smith, William Hobson and John Hull were appointed to join a like committee of women Friends and visit them, and hold a conference with them on account of their request, and report at next meeting. The preparative meeting was opened on South River in Tenth month.

As we visit Pleasant Plain and Richland to-day we meet the following, who are a few of the old pioneers: John Howard, Phoebe Humphrey, Mary Hoskins, Mary Jane Pickard, Patsey Hoskins, Ruth Hoskins, Rachel Crumley, Eli Jones, and others. In Richland we find Charles Stewart, Nettie Mendenhall, Dr. David and Rebecca P. Jones, Joseph and Martha Henson, Jesse Hinshaw, William, Joshua and Millie Hadway, and others.

In the above article we have traced the meetings from Salem to the west as far as Oskaloosa, and from here there are again two branches,—one extending to the west, as we have already noticed, and as will be described in another article, and the other branch extending to the north, forming what is to-day a part of Oskaloosa Quarterly Meeting, which has a membership of 1,289, Lynn Grove with 600 members, Bangor with 841, Honeycreek with 1,270, and Greenville with 438 members.

Next week we shall follow the Friends in their advance to the West, through Ackworth and Bear Creek Quarters on to Kansas.

"I SHALL BE SATISFIED."

The day of life is waning fast,
The sunset glow is in the sky.
Behind,—the visions of our youth
That with the tide of life rose high;
On left,—upon maturer life we write,—
In words with disappointment fraught—
"Weak is the effort, little won;
Alas, sad soul, thy work is nought!
Master, for Thee we would have chosen
The richest gifts; Thy battles fought,
Our hopes lie shattered in the dust;
We have no name for what we've wrought."

But God in mercy looketh down—
He sees not with the eye of man—
"Take courage, child," he kindly says,
"Thy life's a part of My great plan."
If this be true, why, then, complain—
Shall we not here content abide,
Our trust in Him, His joy our strength?
For He will surely, safely guide.

The day of life is waning fast,
Beyond us still is life's ideal—
But with each fleeting, passing day
The priceless goal is far more real.
The sunset glow is in the sky—
"At evening time it shall be light"—
'Tis but the break of eternal day
That scatters far the shades of night.

Then faithful be, thou weary one,
Confide in Him—the time will come
When thou thine ideal shall have won,
And thou shalt rest content at home;
Thou shalt awake beyond this life,
In His own likeness to abide—
No vain regrets—for 'tis God's plan
That thou shalt then be satisfied.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC FOR SECOND MONTH FIFTH, 1899.

IDLE IN THE MARKET PLACE.
Matt. 20: 1-16.

Second-day, First month 30th. The idle talent. Matt. 25: 24-30.

Third-day, First month 31st. Idle words. Matt. 12: 33-37.

Fourth-day, Second month 1st. Sowing, morning and evening. Eccl. 11: 1-6.

Fifth-day, Second month 2d. Untiring activity. 2 Cor. 11: 23-28.

Sixth-day, Second month 3d. The night cometh. John 9: 1-7.

Seventh-day, Second month 4th. Laborers are few. Matt. 9: 36-38.

It is important to know what this parable was not intended to teach. It was not intended to teach that salvation is a free gift, just as good at the eleventh hour as at the first hour. It was not intended that the reward to eleventh-hour men is just as great as that to first-hour men, other things being equal. It was not intended to teach that all men are equal at a final day of account. It does teach very simply and clearly that everything depends upon the spirit of the laborer; that true service for God cannot be undertaken on any basis of bargaining for pay or reward. It is only a hireling who bargains,—a son can trust his father to do what is right. It is confidence in the justice of the Master—service for love rather than for pay—that makes a Christian worker.

It also suggests that some who have entered the vineyard early may labor with so little energy that eleventh hour men may enter and do more than they, and with a more acceptable spirit Zaccheus came in late, but at one gift he did more than some men do in a whole lifetime.

There are some things that need to be made emphatic on this topic. It is not enough for you simply to abstain from doing bad things. Idleness is not a virtue. You may not be robbing the vineyard, but that does not mean that you are working in it. Neither are you working because you are in the midst of a company that are at work. We get lost in organization; imagine we are doing something because we have the machinery for it, or because somebody is making the machinery go while we are only riding round on it. Some people are wonderfully interested in Christian work, but it is only as critics of the work of others. They stand by and maintain the "testimonies" of the church while others do the work.

The Lord does not wait for every worker to be perfect before he gives him work to do. He takes a willing man, even though he is a Peter, full of impulsive self-confidence. He can train a man who will move. It is the continuous worker that the Master wants. One who is not weary in well doing; one whose faith fails not. He wants the worker who is willing to do little things. There are plenty of people in almost every church who are idle because they cannot do great things,—things that show. I know of no church that does not suffer for the lack of the workers who do the little things.

A Christian worker is of little value until he has learned to work under somebody else. The guidance of the Spirit is a precious doctrine, but it is practically useless without the co-ordinate truth of obedience to others.

It is a general rule in missionary societies that only those should go to the foreign field who have already proven their call by work at home. It is a mere bit of sentimentalism to imagine that if you were only in the foreign field you would find people hungry for the Gospel, and that you could then work for the Master. The man who has not found more to do at home than he is able to do will never be worth much abroad.

Neither the man who neglects the spiritual endowment for service nor he who neglects the human element of preparation is fitted for Christ's service. We only prove our own littleness by setting these two things over against each other. As well start an argument on the opposition of the two blades of a pair of scissors. If you can find nothing to do for the Master, then find a new qualification for service, and you will soon find use for the gift. Have you only one blade of the scissors? Then secure the other also.

CONFERENCE OF THE WOMAN'S BOARDS OF FOREIGN MISSIONS FOR UNITED STATES AND CANADA.

The third of these annual conferences has just been held in New York city at the same time as the conference of Church Boards, reported in this number, and, judging from the newspaper reports, must have been a most interesting and profitable gathering, but it was impossible for the writer to attend both at the same time, so he cannot give a report at first hand. The Woman's Board of the Congregational Church were the hosts of the occasion, and royally discharged their duties in that particular. "The Ideal Missionary Magazine," "The Forward Movement," "Higher Education for Girls in Missionary Fields," "The Conference of 1900," "The Missionary Spirit in Women's Colleges in America," and other topics were discussed. A most interesting paper on the "Higher Education of Girls in Foreign Lands" was read by Mrs. J. R. Mott, from which we gather the following points:

"Within the last fifty years," said Mrs. Mott, "in every civilized land there has arisen a movement for the higher education of women. In 1840 only one college in this or any other land was open to women—that of Oberlin, Ohio. In the early days of this movement its motive power was the spirit of helpfulness, the missionary spirit awakened in the days of Mary Lyon, when the Mount Holyoke girls were among the first to go out to help the world. We shall never know what America owes to the fact that higher education in this land was begun and fostered by most earnest Christian men and women for the highest purposes. The aim of Mary Lyon, Mr. Durant and others was spiritual no less than intellectual. To-day sees the fruit of their toil, in the fact that America has a larger proportion of women students than any other land. She has thirty-five thousand in her universities and colleges, and ten thousand of them, in three hundred institutions, are enrolled as active members of Christian associations.

"We are not yet far enough away from the beginning of the movement in our own land to write its history or to see clearly all its results, but to-day the women of America are a mighty power in the social, intellectual and spiritual life of our country. Is it chance that, corresponding almost exactly in time to the beginning of the remarkable movement for higher education in our own land, there should also have come to us the knowledge of the condition of hundreds of millions of women of non-Christian lands, and open doors should swing back before India, China, Japan, Africa, South America and Mexico? Could, indeed, such infinite opportunities for service and such a cry of need and such God-given facilities for preparation have no relation to each other?"

To the question, "What is the aim and scope and what are some of the advantages of the higher education of girls in mission fields?" Mrs. Mott answered in the words of Dr. Duff, when asked his theory of missions.

"Theory," he said; "I have no theory; anything and everything that will promote the cause of Christ."

The immediate objects of higher education she defined as, "first, to build up Christian character, or, in other words, to give to the individual the highest intellectual, moral and spiritual culture he is capable of receiving; second, to create a demand for the higher education of women, and where the demand already exists to supply it under the best Christian influences; third, to provide well-ordered Christian homes.

"A current proverb among the Indians and Mahometans," declared Mrs. Mott, "is to the effect that a woman's wisdom should not extend beyond the oven, and many in every land practically believe the same thing. It is true that a college degree cannot make a good wife or mother or woman, but in the long years of daily contact in school life there is an opportunity to shape the home life, the social life, the religious life, and through these the whole character of a people."

"A fourth object" she defined to provide Christian teachers for schools and to train for Christian leadership wherever needed, and a fifth, to reach classes not otherwise accessible to the Gospel. The need of the most elementary education for girls when missionaries first went out and the progress which higher education has already made in these lands stand to-day in startling contrast. Cyrus Hamlin says that in the first year of his missionary life in Turkey he met but one woman who could read, and the entering wedge was driven in the guise of a school of embroidery. When Duff went to India, he said, one might as well "try to scale a wall 500 feet high as to attempt female education."

In China Mrs. Nevins estimates that to-day, aside from those trained in mission schools, possibly not one woman in ten thousand can read. In 1879 Miss Russell and Miss Gheer began with one pupil in Nagasaki, Japan, what they meant should some day be a college, and their buildings were pointed out to passengers on the steamer as "Ladies' Folly." According to the most recent statistics attainable, there are to-day in the mission fields forty-nine institutions for women, under sixteen different boards or agencies, giving higher education. About three-fifths of the whole number are found under the Presbyterian, the American Board, and that of the Methodist Episcopal.

To the question, "What influences are going out from these colleges and what results are apparent?" Mrs. Mott gave answer: "Some thousands of women have been thoroughly educated. This means much in lands where a few years ago it was believed to be impossible or disgraceful for a woman to learn to read. Can the wonderful record of 'the mother of a thousand daughters,' Eliza Agnew, of Ceylon, ever be surpassed in this respect? During her forty-one years of consecutive service in one school some 660 girls were graduated, and every one was a professed Christian. In the college at Harpoot the regular work is laid aside once a week for half an hour, and volunteers from the college go to the lower schools to work for souls. From the Methodist College at Nagasaki, Japan, thirty-five girls go out every week to teach four hundred pupils. The True Light Seminary, of Canton, China, has given to the cause of missions in China eighty-five teachers, fifty-eight Bible readers, and nine graduates of the medical college, who are practising their profession. During the twenty-five years of its history the American College, of Constantinople, has graduated one hundred and eight young women from eight different nations, nearly all of whom are engaged in some specific work. From the Nagasaki College one Japanese girl has gone as a missionary to the Loochoo Islands, and another has offered for Corea. In India the large majority of the students in the Dufferin Medical Training Schools, and a still greater majority in the university colleges, are Christians, and Christians are largely in the majority in Bombay, Lahore and Calcutta. During our recent war with Spain there was one spot where Americans and Spanish worked and lived together in perfect harmony—the teachers and pupils of the International Institute for Girls, at San Sebastian, Spain.

"Intellectually, the girls from that school have a wonderful record of 'leaping over everything,' taking the highest marks ever given at State institute and university. This school was founded to reach the daughters of the better classes and to raise up Christian workers for Spain. The regeneration of Spain must begin with the education of her women.

"The whole understanding of women's education is alien to the thought and spirit of Oriental civilization, and involves a readjustment of woman's position in the home and society.

"It was a Chinese girl, educated in a mission school and then sent to America for the study of medicine, who so much impressed Li Hung Chang when he met her on his return to China that he asked her to represent the women of China in the World's Congress of Women in London. It was a native daughter of India who wrote the hymn which has touched the heart of Christendom, 'In the Secret of His Presence'."

In closing, Mrs. Mott said: "We owe our best missionary effort to the Christian woman and her daughter in mission lands, because of her representative character, her influence and her opportunity."

Dear Endeavorers:—The sixth annual convention of Indiana Yearly Meeting Christian Endeavor Union will be held at Amboy, Ind., Second month 10, 11 and 12, 1899. The program is almost completed and promises to be one of the best ever yet given. The railroad companies have granted a one and one-third fare rate from all points in Indiana. Tickets on sale Second month 9th and 10th, with return limit, leaving Amboy, Second month 13th. These tickets are round trip. Please do not buy your ticket on the certificate plan expecting a return reduction. Every Christian Endeavor Society in the Yearly Meeting should be represented at this convention by at least one delegate, and just as many more as can attend. The Amboy Endeavorers will furnish free entertainment for all delegates. Those expecting to attend the convention should forward their names at least three days before the opening session to the chairman of the Entertainment Committee, Lewis McFarland, Amboy, Ind., so that homes can be assigned.

Yours for the work,

RICHARD HAWORTH,
Yearly Meeting President.

AFRICA.

The Great Commission gives the privilege of sending the Gospel to every creature. Many are in Africa, and so part of our missionary interest belongs there. For the sake of the person paying money for missions it is better that part of his money be sent to China, part to Africa, and part to other places, provided he will keep in touch with the people to whom it is sent. If his missionary work and responsibility is finished when he pays the money, it makes no particular difference where it goes, for all mission fields are alike needy. The Friends have no mission in Africa, but now the missionary board of Western Yearly Meeting has assumed the care of one. This board earnestly asks that this letter and the leaflet accompanying it be read in every Friends' meeting in every Yearly Meeting, that all may know that there is a channel through which our missionary responsibility as a church may be discharged so far as Africa is concerned. It is asked that a collector be appointed for an African fund. Please send the name and address of every person, or Sabbath School or meeting contributing one dollar or more, that there may be at least two letters each year from Africa to those interested. This can be done by using a duplicating machine. It is hoped that these letters will be an aid in giving direct information from the mission.

This board respectfully submits this plan for the prayerful consideration of every meeting. This in no way conflicts with work already undertaken, but is a plea for that part of the missionary money of the church that belongs in Africa, knowing that in this way the activity in every place may be quickened.

The board recommends that this plan be adopted in every field. Every Yearly Meeting having work in some particular field can handle its own funds, appoint its own missionaries; at the same time send to every meeting in all the other Yearly Meetings information concerning the channel through which funds may be sent to that particular field; and let the missionaries see to it that they keep in touch with every contributor to the mission with which they are connected. This may be done by using a duplicating machine, or in some such way.

We have no central board, but that does not relieve us of the responsibility that we have as a church toward every mission established by the church. The Friends have, or are to establish, missions in Alaska, Armenia, Africa, China, Cuba, India, Japan, Jamaica, Mexico, Palestine, Syria, and among the North American Indians. There can and should be contributions, however small, from every meeting for every one of these, the meeting receiving letters and missionary information from them all. If this plan is adopted the expense of a central missionary board can be saved, and at the same time our responsibility toward every one of these missions be discharged.

Pledges are asked for this African Mission in any amounts, large or small, the pledges to run for three years or more, but will be returned at any time on the request of the person giving the pledge. The first payment is due at any time before Thanksgiving, 1899, but, if possible, it is hoped that it may be paid at once. If this is done all the missionaries under appointment can be sent within two months. Please send contributions, with the names and addresses of the persons to whom the letters are to be sent, to Martha E. Newlin, Treasurer Missionary Board Western Yearly Meeting, Kokomo, Ind.

SARAH J. KING,
President Missionary Board.

NEW YORK YEARLY MEETING.

New Platz, Ulster Co., N. Y.—It is not known to many of the readers of THE AMERICAN FRIEND that there exists in the town of New Paltz, Ulster Co., N. Y., a Friends' mission.

It has just closed its third year of successful work.

It is under the care of a committee of Marlboro Monthly Meeting (Cornwall Quarter).

It occupies a comfortable room in the central part of the town.

The work consists of a Sabbath School (which was first organized)—regular service the first Sabbath in each month, and other mission meetings as helpers can be found—a sewing school, and children's temperance meeting. A teacher's meeting has been held a part of the year with good results.

All the officers and three of the teachers in the Sabbath School are Friends, and we prize the privilege of uniting in the Lord's work here where we are so perfectly separated from our own church in a way which will not bring reproach to the cause. The school has enrolled 99 the past year, but the attendance has varied. Quite a revival spirit has been shown and some souls saved. On account of jealousy and a prejudice in the churches, some have left us, but others have come, and the work the past year has been further reaching than ever before. It is now ranked with the best Christian work of the place and has the approval of all unprejudiced minds.

We have a nucleus of 50 volumes for a library, and if in any home or Sabbath School there are books to donate they would be thankfully received, as an addition is sadly needed. The sewing school and temperance meeting have been well attended and full of interest, and we believe that much good seed has been sown there.

Any one wishing to help the work can do so by donating material, either second-hand or new, for the sewing school. It is worth much to have the hold that Friends now have here in this educational centre.

The new year begins with a new superintendent, and we look forward to much good work. SOPHRONIA ELLIOTT REYNOLDS

NEW ENGLAND YEARLY MEETING.

Providence, R. I.—The "mid-winter convention" of Portsmouth Camp Meeting Association, held in the hall occupied by the Church of Emmanuel, was one of great power and blessing. The Bible readings, given twice a day by that marvelous man of God, Dr. Godbey, were helpful and inspiring. The preaching by E. H. Dashiels, Dr. Fowler, Mattie Curry, Henrietta Moke, Seth C. Rees and others was in the power of the Spirit and resulted in blessed victory. Many were saved and sanctified. Men who were confirmed drunkards found Christ and are new creatures. Noon-day meetings are now held in the Church of Emmanuel, 348 Westminster Street.

Friends stopping in the city are cordially invited to attend and assist in these services.

Evening services each evening, except Third and Fifth-days.

We ask the prayers of the Lord's people for this work.

JOHN PENNINGTON.

Gonic, N. H.—Dover Quarterly Meeting was held at this place First month 6th, 7th and 8th. Perrin Reynolds, of New York Yearly Meeting was the only visiting minister in attendance. Only two of our own ministers were present. Owing to much sickness the attendance was smaller than usual, but those favored to be present found it an occasion of much blessing. Perrin Reynolds was much favored in service and we felt that surely the Lord sent him here.

Since quarterly meeting two of our young people have professed conversion.

Rochester Meeting has remodeled its meeting-house and now has a good house for worship at a distance from all other meetings. This is an excellent chance for a young man or woman to build up a good meeting.

C. E. PEASLEE.

KANSAS YEARLY MEETING.

Northbranch, Kansas.—A series of meetings was held near here at Oak Creek Meeting by Achsa Kenyon and Adolphus Folger—twenty-four sessions in all. The spirit of the Lord was manifest throughout the meeting, which resulted in the conversion and renewal of a number of souls, also in the sanctification of a few. The church is much strengthened and revived. All glory to the great Head of the church for His blessings.

A. H. KINARD.

INDIANA YEARLY MEETING.

Antioch Meeting, Ohio.—Jonathan M. Jay, from Pleasant Hill, Ohio, commenced a series of meetings here Twelfth month 11th, 1898, and closed Twelfth month 27th—in all twenty-six sessions. The day meetings were praise and testimony meetings, much blessed of the Lord. The preaching was plain, practical, and in the demonstration of the Spirit and of power,—in all twenty sermons. The labors of our dear Friend here was much blessed in strengthening the church. Some were definitely blessed and bore testimony to full salvation. We can but praise the Lord for such faithful workers. A. Lincoln Everett will have the pastoral care of our meeting this year.

Murray Shipley, of Cincinnati, died suddenly First month 20th.

Rufina White has removed from Wilmington Yearly Meeting and settled within the limits of Westland Monthly Meeting, being engaged in religious work at Maxwell.

IOWA YEARLY MEETING.

Greenville Quarterly Meeting was held at Spencer, Iowa, First month 13th, 14th and 15th. Though many were deprived of being present on account of sickness, yet the attendance was good and all the meetings were held under the power and blessing of God. There was a deep current of spiritual life manifest; believers were strengthened, some backsliders reclaimed, and unsaved ones were under conviction. The Christian Endeavor Union was held on Sixth-day evening with representatives present from all societies in the Quarter. Also, by invitation, all the local societies were represented. Chas. Sweet, State President of the United Societies and President of Friends' Societies in the United States, addressed the meeting. The different meetings in the Quarter appear to be in a prosperous condition, as also do the outposts. There is a prospect now of opening a new work within our limits. The fields are white before us. Greenville Meeting has had a series of meetings, conducted by Emma F. Coffin, Brother Witmar and Isaac N. Rich. Much lasting good was accomplished.

The Okoboji Meeting is in charge of Mary R. Hornady as pastor. A good work is going on. Spencer Meeting has about completed quite extensive repairs and improvements upon the church building, on account of which some services have been adjourned. The spiritual condition of the meeting is good; several persons have recently been reclaimed, some converted, and others have dedicated their all to the Master and received the abiding One. Emma F. Coffin is the pastor for this year.

West Branch Monthly Meeting was held at 10 a.m. on the 14th. While the attendance was not large, on account of sickness, indifference, and other causes, yet the Lord owned and blessed the services. Our mid-week prayer meeting was changed back from Fourth-day night to 10 in the morning, and our Endeavor meeting from First-day evening to Fourth-day evening. We hope a blessing to the church will follow these changes. I believe every Friends' meeting sustains a loss by not having a mid-week meeting and teaching our people that God will bless all our outward efforts as well as all our spiritual life if we are only willing to let the world know that we are ready to make some sacrifice for the cause of Christ. Friends in early days proved this fact so clearly that there can be no questioning it, and many Friends have proved it true all along the line of our experience as a church.

A card on the doors of our business houses ("Opened at 1 p.m.: Attending Church Services") will give the public a confidence in us which will tend to increase our business rather than decrease it, and have an influence for good which will be a blessing to the church and the world.

J. Y. HOOVER.

NORTH CAROLINA YEARLY MEETING.

Springfield, N. C.—Dr. David H. Herald, the evangelist from Indiana, commenced a series of meetings, held at Springfield, N. C., on New Year's day. The gospel was preached with the demonstration of the Spirit and with power, so that the young people and children came flocking home to Christ as doves to the window. Had twenty-three conversions and some renewals and the church built up. Our dear Brother Robert Parker assisted in the work.

Our dear Brothers commenced a series of meetings the 19th of this month at Deep River.

FRIENDS IN NEBRASKA.

Nestling in the broad valley of the Platte, 130 miles from Omaha as the river runs, is the well-built county-seat of Merrick County. The inhabitants, numbering 1,400, are sober, industrious and well-to-do, for Central City is a radical temperance town with not a saloon shingle in sight. The altitude is 1,500 feet above sea level, the atmosphere pure and invigorating, the climate mild and healthful, and the skies as clear and blue as the "eyes of a Saxon baby."

Recently this charming little town had the pleasure of witnessing a scene both novel and interesting. Since early autumn

Herbert J. Mott has been putting forth his utmost efforts to secure funds and secure a meeting-house in that place. All things being ready, the 15th inst. was chosen as a day appropriate for setting apart this newly erected house for divine worship. On the evening of the 14th an educational address was delivered to a large and appreciative audience. On Sabbath morning every available foot of space was occupied and scores could not gain admittance. In the audience were persons who had not been in a sanctuary for years. In solemn stillness, with bowed heads, there was a reverent waiting upon the Lord. In a few plain words Zenas L. Martin, Superintendent of Evangelistic Work in Iowa Yearly Meeting, set forth the purpose and responsibilities of the new undertaking, and earnest prayers ascended from many hearts that Jesus Christ might ever be the Head thereof.

The house is a neat frame structure, 40 x 40, with 200 substantial assembly chairs, and drop-seats around three walls, well lighted and heated, carpeted aisles, and everything furnished complete, from organ and song-book to fire-shovel and tongs. The citizens of Central City manifested their sincere interest in having a Friends' meeting in their midst by contributing in cash $1,300 of the $1,650 incurred in the erection of the house. Over the door outside stand the unostentatious words, "Friends' Meeting-House." What a profound faith was exercised on the part of both Central City and the Nebraska Friends in opening up a work at such a cost in treasure and time in a place where there is but one family of Friends—a house without a congregation to worship therein. Their faith and hope are as far-reaching as the magnificent expanse of their western skies. In the good providence of God the time is not remote when a bounteous harvest shall reward their sacrifices.

Central City is a strategic point for Quakerism in Nebraska, from the fact that at this place Friends have recently acquired a splendid school property, clear of incumbrance. The dimensions of the building are 70 x 74 feet, well planned and substantial in every respect, three stories high, and erected at a cost of $17,000, not including the campus of 27 acres. To put the building into "ship-shape" will require no grand outlay of capital. A school, offering a high grade of academic instruction, is to be opened there in September of this year. Somehow the Friends have obtained a deep hold upon the Nebraska people, and may God grant that it may never be forfeited.

The life and labors of these dear people are surrounded by a spirit of romance that is extremely fascinating. Twenty years ago, William Abel and family, of Iowa, located as the pioneer Friends in the Platte Valley, and three monthly meetings are the result of their faithfulness. B. Compton and family, of Ohio, in 1888 settled in Hall County and prepared the way for three more monthly meetings. Joel Townsend and family, from Indiana, in an early day located in the North Loup country, where two monthly meetings have been established. Eternity alone will reveal the results of the self-sacrificing labors of Turner Abel and brother, Elwood Knight and Susie E. Allen, of Clarke; Alden Knight, of Alda; Oliver P. Henderson, of Pleasant Hill; Oliver Frazer, of North Loup; Otto Reger, of Belgrade; Brother Ginn, the singer, and many others who should be numbered among earth's worthies. All were kindly entertained and cared for by the Friends during these days.

The Friends seem willing to undergo any sacrifice for the good of the cause. Herbert J. Mott is doing a great work for the future of the church.

serves the right to protect it. The President is directed to negotiate for the abrogation of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty now existing between the United States and England. According to this treaty, which was made years ago, the two governments agreed that neither would construct an Isthmian canal connecting the Atlantic and Pacific without the consent or equal participation of the other. The board of directors of the company provided for is to consist of seven members, five to be appointed by the United States and one each by the Republics of Nicaragua and Costa Rica. This bill is considered rather tentative, and will probably serve mainly as the basis of further Congressional action.

Reports from the Samoan Islands picture a very apprehensive condition of affairs there. Samoa is under the tripartite protectorate of the United States, Great Britain and Germany, with judicial power vested in a Supreme Court with one Chief Justice. Recently it became necessary to select a new king. The natives, by a large majority, elected Chief Mataafa to the place. He was, however, on the 31st ultimo, declared ineligible by Chief Justice Chambers, inasmuch as it had been made one of the conditions of his return from banishment that he would not intermeddle with the political affairs of the islands. Accordingly, the Chief Justice announced Malietoa Tanus as king and Tamesese vice-king. This decision was accepted by the United States and English consuls, but it seems that the German consul refused to concur, and declined to co-operate in suppressing the hostilities which broke out between the rival factions. The forces of Mataafa triumphed, and by reason of the exigencies of the situation the Chief Justice decided it best to recognize him as temporary ruler pending instructions from the Powers. The German consul, and with him Germany, has been severely criticised, as it is thought the Emperor is playing for absolute control of Samoa.

The outcome will be watched with interest, but not necessarily anxiety, by all. Our Ambassador in Germany, who is always optimistic of our relations with Germany, is very hopeful of a perfectly peaceful settlement, and, as it appears, Germany repudiates the action of her representatives. Samoa has become well known as the home of the late Robert Louis Stevenson, who, it is said, was almost worshiped by the natives.

A funereal solemnity overspread Washington last week. On the 16th, in the House of Representatives, a state funeral was given the late Representative Nelson Dingley, the most impressive of its kind that has been held in years. Glowing tributes were paid to the worth of the man, and much sincere sorrow was evident in the large company of statesmen, diplomats and prominent citizens that were present. Following close upon the funeral of Representative Dingley came the unexpected death of John Russell Young, the Librarian of Congress, on the 17th. His career has been a repetition of the old story of American self-made manhood. Starting as "copy" boy in a newspaper office he rose rapidly to the positions of reporter, manager and editor. He has achieved considerable public fame, having occupied the position of Minister to China during the first Cleveland administration. As a man of letters he was well and favorably known; as Librarian of Congress he is said to have been one of the most efficient that ever held the position, having reduced order out of chaos. His death is a genuine loss to the country.

Senatorial elections were held in many states last week, but upon none has more interest centered than that in Pennsylvania. Balloting for the successor to Senator Quay began on the 17th, when it was conclusively brought out that the majority is against the present incumbent and will probably remain so. Balloting continued throughout the week, without any sign of the deadlock being broken. He now lacks thirteen votes of the number necessary to secure his re-election. In New York Chauncey M. Depew, who may be said to be both Platt's and the people's choice, was elected Senator by majorities in both Houses of the Legislature. A deadlock prevails in Delaware.

* News and Events.

By a vote of forty-eight to six the Senate last week passed the Nicaragua Canal Bill. The bill provides for taking over the property of the Maritime Canal Company by the United States at a cost not to exceed $5,000,000. The canal is to be constructed within six years at a total expense of not more than $115,000,000, and of this only $20,000,000 is to be expended annually. The neutrality of the canal is to be observed, but this country re-

A TEA AT CARLYLE'S.

Thomas Carlyle was one of our earliest visitors, says Mrs. Julia Ward Howe in the February "Atlantic." Some time before leaving home, Dr. Howe had received from him a letter expressing his great interest in the story of Laura Bridgman, as narrated by Chas. Dickens. In this letter he mentioned Laura's childlike question "Do horses sit up late?" In the course of his conversation he referred to the question again. He invited us to take tea with him on the following Sunday. When the day arrived, my husband was kept at home by a severe headache, but Mr. and Mrs. Mann, my sister and myself, drove out to Chelsea, where Mr. Carlisle resided at that time. In receiving us he apologized for his wife, who was also suffering from headache and could not appear. In her absence, I was requested to pour tea. Our host partook of it copiously, in all the strength of the teapot. As I filled and refilled his cup I thought that his chronic dyspepsia was not to be wondered at. The repast was a simple one. It consisted of a plate of toast and two small dishes of stewed fruit, which he offered us with the words, "Perhaps ye can eat some of this. I never eat these things myself."

The conversation was mostly a monologue. Mr. Carlyle spoke with a strong Scotch accent, and his talk sounded to me like page of his writings. He had recently been annoyed by some movement tending to the disestablishment of the Scottish Church. Apropos of this he said, "That auld Kirk of Scotland! To think that a man like Johnny Graham should be able to wipe it out with a flit of his pen!" Charles Sumner was spoken of, and Mr. Carlyle said "Oh yes; Mr. Sumner was a vera dull man, but he did not offend people, and he got on in society here."

Carlyle's hair was dark, shaggy, and rather unkempt; his complexion was sallow, with a light glow of red on the cheek; his eye was full of fire. As we drove back to town, Mr. Mann expressed great disappointment with our visit. He did not feel, he said, that we had seen the real Carlyle at all. I insisted that we had. —Mrs. Julia Ward Howe, in the February "Atlantic."

The Australian papers contain two not unamusing stories concerning the recent general election in Victoria. One oratorical candidate for a Melbourne constituency, in a fine burst of eloquence, asked the question, "What is it that has made England what she is—mighty, revered, feared and respected?" "Oireland!" was the prompt and unexpected reply, in a racy brogue, from the rear of the hall. Another Melbourne candidate, after enunciating an advanced democratic programme, remarked, "Yes, gentlemen, and I will go one step further," saying which he stepped over the footlights in his absent-minded enthusiasm and fell among the reporters beneath.—"London Chronicle."

ISAAC SHARP,

AN APOSTLE OF THE NINETEENTH CENTURY. By Frances Anne Budge. Preface by Sir Joseph W. Pease, Bart, M.P. Seven illustrations and Map. Demy 8vo.

Isaac Sharp traveled from Greenland to New Zealand, preaching the Gospel. Twice he circled the globe, returning from one journey of seven years at seventy-seven, and penetrating far into the interior of China in his eighty-seventh year. The book will therefore be of great interest. Price, $1.25. If sent by mail, $1.40.

Nearly 1,000 copies sold in London within a few weeks after issue.

PENELVE;

OR, AMONG THE QUAKERS.

An American Story by Richard H. Thomas, M.D., author of "Echoes and Pictures," "A History of the Society of Friends in America," etc. Preface by W. C. Braithwaite, B.A., LL.B.

This is a cool, refreshing, and in every way pleasing story.

It has much of the simplicity, purity and charm of Quaker Life, and while imaginary in outline and detail, is understood to be true in substance, as it is certainly written with full knowledge and sympathy as to what constitute the essentials of Quaker life. The grand passion asserts itself, as everywhere else, among these simple scenes, and warms the story with a thread of pleasing and rather idyllic loving. The serious point of the story, beyond the portrayal of home life among the Friends, is to show its higher and better influence by tracing its effect upon a serious-minded agnostic who is brought into the story from New York and represents in his way the worldly side of modern life.—The Independent.

360 pages, 8vo. Handsomely bound in cloth. Price, $1.25, postage paid.

THE LIFE and LETTERS OF

ELIZABETH L. COMSTOCK,

Compiled by her sister, C. HARE. With portrait.

This interesting book consists largely of extracts from letters written and received by Elizabeth L. Comstock during her long sojourn in America. Her experiences in visiting prisons, asylums, hospitals, etc., during the time of the American War, are most graphically described, and form interesting reading. Her visits to England and Ireland form part of the concluding chapters.

"No one can read the pages that tell of her work among the wounded soldiers without thanking God for such tender Christian service, and one realizes more clearly than ever the meaning of war."—THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

12mo. Cloth. 580 pages. With portrait, $1.50, postpaid.

HULDA:

The Pentecostal Prophetess.

BY BYRON J. REES.

152 Pages. Bound in Cloth. Price, 50c., postpaid.

A short life story and seventeen of the sermons of Hulda A. Rees, together with her portrait and picture of her early church. This book needs no other introduction than for the reader to know that seventeen of her sermons, which Sister Rees preached with such accompaniments of power and blessing, are for the most part to compose it. The life-story is short yet comprehensive, the writer of it avoiding anything of a eulogistic nature and making the facts of the life serve as an appropriate introduction to the character back of the sermons.

Mrs. E. E. Williams, in a beautiful poem, which is also a part of the book, gives some refreshing glimpses into the character of Sister Rees.

Esther T. Pritchard also contributes a "Tribute," glowing with fervor and truth.

A WOMAN'S LIFE WORK.

Including Thirty Year's Service on the Underground Railroad and in the War.

BY LAURA HAVILAND.

This is a story of a wonderful life. The author was an active Anti-Slavery agitator and through her underground railroad work assisted hundreds of slaves to escape from bondage. During the war she spent about two years taking care of the sick and wounded. Through her efforts more than 2,000 Union Soldiers were liberated. She accomplished a great work in providing for the Freedmen of Kansas after the close of the war. She was the founder of the State Public School, at Coldwater, Mich., an institution which was the first of its kind in the world. The Industrial School for Girls at Adrian Mich., almost utterly owes its first existence, and especially its name to her efforts. Haviland Academy at Haviland, Kansas, was named in her honor, as also the town in which it is located. At the World's Fair she was introduced by President Palmer as "The Mother of Philanthropy," and well she deserves the title. Her experience as told in this book will be read with thrilling interest.

This book is printed on good paper and contains 625 pages. It is bound in cloth with red edges. The retail price of the book is $1.50. We will send it postpaid, for $1.00. Address,

A Scientific Truth

Prof. Atwater says: "We eat too much of the fuel elements of food—too much fat, butter, starch and sugar; too little of the flesh-forming elements; too little of blood, bone and nerve foods."

Quaker Oats contains the desired elements to an unequalled degree. Delicate and delicious.

ACCEPT NO SUBSTITUTE

The grand difficulty is to feel the reality of both worlds, so as to give each its due place in our thoughts and feelings, to keep our mind's eye and our heart's eye ever fixed on the land of promise, without looking away from the road we are to travel toward it.—Augustus Hare.

When Tired Out

Use Horsford's Acid Phosphate.

Dr. M. H. HENRY, New York, says: "When completely tired out by prolonged wakefulness and overwork, it is of the greatest value to me. As a beverage it possesses charms beyond anything I know of in the form of medicine."

Whooping Cough, Croup, Asthma, Colds

Hundreds of thousands of mothers use Vapo-Cresolene. Do You? Cresolene cures Whooping Cough every time; stops Croup almost immediately, and if used at once will cure a Cold before any complications can arise. I. N. Love, M.D., of St. Louis, says: "I have instructed every family under my direction to secure it." Mrs. Ballington Booth, says: "I recommend that no family where there are young children should be without it." W. R. Chichester, M.D., of New York, says: "As a vehicle for disinfecting purposes Cresolene is immediately successful." Anthony Comstock, says: "Malignant Diphtheria in my house; Cresolene used; cases recovered in two weeks; no others were affected." Descriptive booklet with testimonials free. Sold by all druggists.

THE PRIMITIVE RELATIONS OF THE POOR.

A very little familiarity with the poor districts of any city is sufficient to show how primitive and frontier-like are the neighborly relations, says Jane Addams in the February "Atlantic." The fact that the economic condition of all alike is on a most precarious level makes the ready outflow of sympathy and material assistance the most natural thing in the world. There are numberless instances of heroic self-sacrifice quite unknown in the circles where greater economic advantages make that kind of intimate knowledge of one's neighbors impossible. An Irish family, in which the man has lost his place, and the woman is struggling to eke out the scanty savings by day work, will take in a widow and her five children who have been turned into the street, without a moment's reflection upon the physical discomforts involved. The most maligned landlady is usually ready to lend a scuttful of coal to a suffering tenant, or to share her supper. A woman for whom the writer had long tried in vain to find work failed to appear at the appointed time when a job turned up at last. Upon investigation it transpired that a neighbor further down the street was taken ill; that the children ran for the family friend, who went, of course; saying simply, when reasons for her non-appearance were asked, "It broke me heart to leave the place, but what could I do?"—Jane Addams, in the February Atlantic.

Teacher—"What is the equator?"

Pupil (confidently)—"An imaginary lion running around the earth."

NEW ILLUMINATED TEACHER'S BIBLE

We have selected the NEW ILLUMINATED TEACHER'S BIBLE for premium purposes this year, because it is the most complete and handsomest Teachers' Bible in the world.

OUR WONDERFUL PREMIUM OFFER.

The growing demand for a wisely and faithfully illustrated Teacher's Bible has been fully satisfied at last by the AMERICAN BIBLE HOUSE, of New York and Philadelphia. This well-known concern has just completed a new edition of the Holy Scriptures, which combines every valuable feature of the usual Teacher's Bible with a wealth of descriptive and historical illustrations so superb as to distinctly separate this Bible from all others and place it in a class all by itself. In this magnificent new edition, there are

which not only beautify the volume but must inevitably prove a source of endless instruction alike to Bible students and Bible teachers. This Bible is not merely embellished; it is truly and accurately illustrated. Other Bibles there are containing pictures; none other in which the individual texts are actually illuminated, as though by the touch of inspiration. Comparison with other Bibles is impossible, for the new Bible stands alone—there is no other in its class. Praise of this new book is no disparagement of the many other worthy editions heretofore published.

OPEN—Showing Style of Illustration.—Popular 12mo. size. $5\frac{3}{4}$ inches wide by 8 inches long when closed. Divinity Circuit Binding.—Can be rolled up and carried anywhere.

SCHAUFFLER, D.D., Editor-in-Chief, assisted by most famous theologians and Bible scholars of America and Europe—men who are known throughout Christendom as the most learned in their several departments of Biblical study. These "Helps" are unique in conception, absolutely original, and confined to the actual essentials of Bible teaching and research. Every necessary point and topic is fully covered, and in the smallest possible space. There is not a superfluous word or line, yet every actual need of Bible student or Sabbath School worker is amply met and by a master-mind.

FOR THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

WHO SHALL ROLL AWAY THE STONE?

Is thy heart o'erborne with sorrow?
Art thou weary, sad and lone?
Art thou ready, then, to question
Who shall roll away the stone?

When the storm is fierce and raging,
Strength and courage almost gone,
Then dost thou in wonder question
Who shall roll away the stone?

When thy life's made sad by trial,
Joy and gladness all unknown,
Tell the Saviour all thy burden—
He will roll away the stone.

By the bedside of thy darling,
When the gentle spirit's flown,
Seek the God of peace and comfort—
He can help and He alone.

POLITICS ARE IMPROVING.

A DISTINGUISHED author of standard works of history has recently said that the great satisfaction that he derives from his investigations is the undoubted proof that the world was never so good as now. Any one who peers closely into the actual conditions existing a hundred years ago, and rests not his faith on histories whose object seems to be to extol the merits of heroes, will recognize more of evil in the political, social, commercial and religious world than he can find to-day.

It is mortifying to one who values the good name of his country to see accounts of purchased legislators and judges. He wonders whether there is any virtue left, and he turns to his Bancroft or McMaster and reads of the integrity of the Revolutionary fathers and the motives which inspired Chief Justice Marshall. The decadence seems too manifest to doubt it. But let him look at the daily and weekly "Gazettes" of their time; let him read between the lines of Governors' addresses and Senators' speeches; let him consider some very suggestive pieces of correspondence which the recipient omitted to destroy, and reflect how much wickedness has been hidden out of sight by time, and he will face the revelations of the newspapers of to-day with renewed hope for the future. Our republic has gone through vastly darker days than the favoritism and commercialism of the present bring to us now. The general tone of political morality at the end of this century is higher than it was at the beginning. Do we forget that the constitution of the United States, upon which the fate of the country hung in a most precarious condition, was ratified by Pennsylvania by a trick which to-day would hardly have been tolerated, and that on this same event rested its general adoption? Do we forget that United States Senators speculated in objects of legislation, to which their votes gave value, more unblushingly than now? That churches and colleges alike built themselves up by legalized lotteries? That drunkenness in high positions was hardly a disgrace, and that the writings of our greatest men make references to gross immorality in a way which would drive men from public life to-day?

Intellectually we may not be greater than they. Indeed we might compare unfavorably man for man with the Grecians of the time of Pericles. But humanity as a whole is better, its average individual acts from better motives, its representatives in the highest public life are purer against greater temptations, and the progress towards higher standards was never more rapid.

It is true one must immediately begin to make exceptions. Municipal government in large cities is shockingly bad; one can hardly say too much in this direction; and there was no counterpart to this a hundred years ago—not because men were better, but because conditions were different. Great organizations, with indefinite capital, and without conscience, now place temptations before men which make us wonder—not why so many are corrupted, but why so many can resist. When a man like Nelson Dingley, with infinite opportunities for wealth, in his position of chairman of the Ways and Means Committee of our National House of Representatives—opportunities, too, which he could use secretly—dies in comparative poverty, we may believe the race of high-principled legislators is not extinct. There are thousands of such men in official places, despite the beef-contracts and gassing Senators, of which we read. The administrations of Cleveland and McKinley show more political virtue than those of Adams and Jefferson. The fierce light which now beats upon public life reveals the worst, but often conceals the best. The histories, as we read them, reveal the best of the past and conceal the worst. A better sort of history is coming, and if some ancient characters cease to be demigods and are shown to be fallible men—if we lose some of the veneration for the heroes of the past—perhaps we may gain in respect and veneration for the heroes of the present, who in the face of greater difficulties are solving higher problems by purer methods and from better motives.

DECISION.

Once to every man and nation comes the moment to decide,
In the strife of truth with falsehood, for the good or evil side.

Then it is the brave man chooses, while the coward stands aside, Doubting in his abject spirit, till his Lord is crucified.

—James Russell Lowell.

God knows your need, and listens for the cry to come from your soul which will draw forth his response. . . . O child, it is strange that you must suffer, and suffer, before the depths are stirred; and in them is God found.

THE QUAKER MESSAGE FOR THE AGE.*

BY RUFUS M. JONES.

What is to characterize the Quakerism of the twentieth century? what is the message the world needs from us, and how are we to deliver it? The thing which mainly characterized the message of original Quakerism, when it burst upon seventeenth century England and made its fifty thousand converts, when it crossed the ocean and gathered its five great Yearly Meetings, was that it discarded the thousand and one speculations of the medieval church and of scholastic philosophy and gave instead a living, Personal Christ, who could speak to the heart of every man and who would transform the lives of all who would let Him in. Instead of endless questions about the proper form of administering baptism and the supper, George Fox had but one main question: "Do you know Jesus Christ?" "Does He reign in your life?" He swept aside the intolerable mass of sham and empty logic and hair-splitting quibbles and brought every listener to look at his life in the light of Christ. "Are you Christlike?" "Do you make it the business of your life to be like Him?" "Do you live as though He were by your side?" "Look at yourself and look at Him?" "Well, this Christ who died for you sixteen hundred years ago in Palestine on a cross is here now by you asking to rule your life and make you like Himself, and you can find by experiment whether He is a Saviour of men or not by trying Him in your own life." This, in the briefest form, is the message of early Quakerism. It is the gospel of a new creation through Jesus Christ by the Spirit. It deals straight with the practical problem. It lets others wrangle over answerless questions of foreordination and total depravity and deals with the new and living way out of darkness into light. Two centuries and a half have passed and the first fathers of this branch of the church would not to-day be able to recognize some of the offspring who claim descent from the parent stock. Life and thought have been mightily affected in the course of these two and a half centuries. Whether we try or not, we cannot think altogether in the same terms as our remote ancestors. We face new issues, new questions confront us. The plummet has been dropped deeper and deeper down, and new depths have everywhere been sounded below all previously discovered bottoms. A man of our time, if suddenly carried back two centuries, would hardly know how to live at all. But he would find it fully as hard to adjust himself to the thought as to the life of an earlier century. Here we are, then, in the closing years of the nineteenth century. In this age we must do our work, live our lives and think our thoughts. We must not ignore the thoughts and impulses and strivings of our own generation, for otherwise we cannot interpret God and His revelation to our contemporaries. It is the marvel of Paul's work that he always got the point of view of those he tried to help.

* Part of an address delivered at the Earlham Summer School, Richmond Ind., summer of 1898.

He never in his life spoke an incomprehensible message to any people. It was always something that met the mental difficulties of his hearers, and took them by slow curves up to the dizzy heights of divine revelation, where he continually lived. He never shot his message from a pistol; it always unfolded, like a flower from a bud, out of the condition which confronted him.

Our "new Quakerism" must learn this lesson. It must have a vital relation to the life and thought of our age. It must speak to its condition and not blindly grind out its monotonous grist, like a piece of machinery, regardless whether it feeds or not. This attempt to reduce religion to a monotonous, cut-and-dried type, properly labeled, from which no deviation was allowed, has been once made in our history, and the result was in a high degree unsatisfactory. We produced some splendid characters, but the system had a mummifying tendency, and for every vitalized, spiritualized, wholesome, active, valiant Christian, with loins girt and lamp lighted, we had a hundred pale-blooded, timorous, dependent, traditional Friends who seemed decidedly machine-made.

Now, my understanding of Christianity is that it is not to manufacture machine-made church members, but to bring every man into a rich and abundant life. It is not to destroy individuality, but to consecrate and complete each life and put it at its best. The way to do that is to bring men to God and teach them to live in God, just as they live in the atmosphere, and by breathing turn atmosphere into blood and muscle and nerve and brain. When the breathing is impeded or the air fails, the whole body shrinks and weakens and ceases to be normal. In a more real sense is this true of the inner life, when one is, for any reason, out of communion or correspondence with God. Nothing takes the place of this, church-going, Sabbath-keeping performance of ritual, philanthropy—what Isaiah calls "trampling the Temple"—good deeds, good professions, moral effort; no one of these things nor all of them together can make a man a living, joyous, victorious Christian, for the whole end and purpose of Christianity is to bring the individual soul into immediate relationship with God. Christ spoke of Himself as a Door, and this expression seems to me to give the clearest idea of the Incarnation. Through Christ God entered into humanity. In no other way could He have come to us. We could understand His nature only when it expressed itself in human terms. Holiness and love and mercy and justice and sacrifice and sympathy are no longer abstract terms. The Divine qualities and attributes are woven, like rainbow colors, in the daily life of this Son of God, who was also the Son of Man. He is such a complete revelation of God that He can say with truth, "He that has seen me has seen the Father." We can never again think of God as unknown and unknowable. He is no absentee God, making a world as a watch-maker makes a watch, and then leaving it to run by blind, mechanical laws. He cares for it all, He upholdeth it all; in Him we all "live and move and have our being." He wills that truth and righteousness and holiness prevail throughout the earth. Once in a definite spot of earth, at a definite time in history, He came to reveal Himself and to draw all men into Himself, and Christ was the Door through which He came. But in another sense He is a Door, for through Him we go to God. As He was the Door for Divinity to reach humanity, so also He is the Door for humanity to reach Divinity. Isn't this about the best message for our age, perplexed with metaphysical doubts and scientific problems? Can we do better than to plant ourselves on this great central fact that there is a Door by which men can come to God? What will transform the individual and society more truly than the persistent proclamation that God is within reach of every life, and that those who enter the Door and go to Him realize the most abundant and victorious life?

To me, the remaking of man,—putting him into complete possession of his powers and expanding his range by bringing him into correspondence with God—is the alpha and omega of the Gospel of Christ. Everything bears directly to that end. Christ doesn't come to destroy the law; He doesn't come to institute new sacraments or ordinances; He doesn't come to teach a new philosophical conception of God or of the universe. He comes to bring men to God. Whether at Jacob's Well, or on the Mount of Transfiguration; whether in Gethsemane or on Calvary, He is a Door, which stands open for men to come to God. In fact, this is the late fulfilment of the original purpose; it explains the fiat, "Let us make man in our own image." Christianity is neither more nor less than the method of bringing men into the Divine image, and thus the great Apostle always regarded it.

Now, then, we may see what the new Quakerism should imply and what should be its mission. Let us briefly sketch its program in barest outline: It refuses to be stranded in bottomless gulfs of metaphysical speculation, and it considers that the immediate presence and power of the Spirit makes all external rites and ceremonies unnecessary, as they are not able of themselves to work any change in the nature and character of the soul and were adapted to the church only while it was in its Jewish swaddling clothes.

It announces a method of salvation which may be tested and proved as accurately as the laws of nature are, and it makes religion not an irrational and blind scheme, but the true response of the soul to a self-revealed God. Christ is the self-revelation of God. He is the Mind of God made plain to men. He demonstrates the supreme truth that God is Love. He declares that God is always like a shepherd seeking lost sheep, like a Father yearning for the wandered child to come back. God was in Christ reconciling the world to Himself, showing His patience, His long-suffering, His love, His self-sacrifice, His power over life and death. He promises to make all who come to Him not simply sure of heaven ultimately, but free in the truth now, conscious of His forgiveness and immediate presence now, able to withstand temptation now, victorious over sin now, possessed of peace and secure from fears now, filled with the fruits of the Spirit and in present possession of an earnest of eternal life. This Gospel of transformation is as readily open to test as the power of electricity is, and it is its own evidence. It is not a question of logic, but of first-hand conviction. The Quaker method is to present, not a plan of salvation so much as a power of salvation. It says that the law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus is known by practical experiment as much as is the law of physical attraction, and it can never be known truly in any other way. Furthermore, it sets no limits to what God can do for and with a person who is strictly obedient to Him. We have had a whole generation of holiness preaching, but I doubt if we have yet seen or heard all God can do for one who throws himself unperplexed and in absolute faith upon Him. Those used to be called saints who had some wonderful miraculous power which proved that they had the Divine favor, but our up-to-date Quaker saints are to prove their saintship by a harder test. They must show, as a living example, how, through the power of the Spirit, they can live in the midst of temptation and sin and yet be more than overcomers, and at the same time they must be dynamic centres of spiritual force, which shall convince the most ungodly that the Divine life current flows through them. We are to set forth a Christianity which has in its membership monumental proofs that men who have been sinners can become possessors of a Christlike nature, and who can demonstrate that "creation in the image of God" is no figure of speech nor a mere possibility which was lost when the gates of Eden closed on our far-off ancestors. Our program is to produce such Christians, and, as we said before, to present a practical proof of the truth of our Gospel of salvation. But our new Quakerism, like the good old original kind, must not only stand for a perfected individual—"like Adam before he fell," to use George Fox's expression—but it must also stand for a perfected society. I know many Friends to-day look on society as hopeless, just as most Christians look on the perfectability of man as an absolute impossibility. But we are at present engaged in describing not what man can do for himself, but what God can do. It is our belief that the religious denomination which will take the future is one which believes profoundly in the transformation of man and of society by the power of the Spirit. It is said sceptically that Christianity has been tried for nineteen hundred years and it has made very few saints, and these few couldn't stand a modern magnifying glass, while it has hardly begun to transform society. The answer is, that in the first place Christ's Christianity has hardly been tried at all in all these centuries. Where it has been tried it has always worked mighty effect. But history shows only a milk-and-water, compromise type of Christianity. But even this low, imperfect form of Christianity has so transformed society that we modern people have not the faintest imagination of the life of the world without Christianity. If you want to know some-

Our Quakerism must believe in and proclaim a Christ who can completely save individuals and who can establish his kingdom—not by sweeping away the inhabitants of the earth, but by changing their natures and by ruling and governing their lives; and because I believe that, I feel the tremendous obligation upon every Christian to become a centre of force for the transformation of our now imperfect society. The ideal Quaker of the seventeenth century was a man who could shake the earth ten miles about. That was a large radius for those times, but we now carry the power of Niagara Falls to Buffalo, we telegraph around the world, we speak between New York and Chicago, and our ideal Quaker in the power of God must expect to extend his radius. While scientists all over the world are drawing upon the unseen forces of the universe, we Christians, many of us, hardly suspect that there are infinite spiritual forces only waiting for obedient men and women to empower, to show what God can do for and with a man.

The ordinary theory of salvation is that a person "gets religion," and then he spends the rest of his life praying for grace and help to keep it! Like Bunyan's poor Christian with his roll, he is never quite sure he won't lose it before he gets across the river. There is Apollyon to meet, lions in the path, Giant Despair, Doubting Castle, Hill Difficulty on the way. It requires all the help of Hopeful and Faithful, Great Heart and Valiant for the Truth to keep him up to the end. That dear old pilgrim has too long been our typical Christian, though we must admit that he is drawn very true to life as it is shown in the church. But that conception must not be encouraged in our up-to-date Quakerism. We have been describing as our typical Christian a re-made man, who doesn't have to carry a roll to show that he is saved, who doesn't have his sins magically fall off his back, but has them washed out of his heart, who is Faithful and Hopeful, and Interpreter and Great Heart and Valiant for the Truth all in one, and who is not bent on just barely saving his soul and keeping his religion, but whose sole and single task is to manifest the glory and power of God in a Christian life. We are describing a Christian who believes in and illustrates a better knighthood than that of Arthur's Round Table—a knight of God, who looks on life as an opportunity to be a literal member, an instrument of Christ. He will not look on anything as foreign to him. With a sure citizenship in heaven he will be all the better citizen of earth. It will be his business to apply his principles of righteousness and peace to the conditions of life about him. He will strive to fashion all things according to the pattern he has seen in the mount. He will be no less a practical man because he cherishes in his heart a beauteous ideal. It was Milton who suggested that our true state is to come by working out in reality the Christian ideal. The true state, he says, is to be as "one huge Christian personage, one mighty growth and stature of an honest man." Every evil of society, as of politics, is to be overcome not by fighting it with its own weapons, not alone by denouncing it hysterically, not by pitting church against non-church as hostile camps, not simply by voting for reforms, but by filling the world full of this new type of Christians, call them Quakers or anything else, who will set everywhere new standards of life.

Look at Spain dying out with decrepitude and incapacity largely because of its stagnant and unvital Christianity. It stands there like a fossil of an earlier age. It cannot progress. Such a Christianity, though it call itself a thousand times orthodox, as this form does, is the diametrical opposite of our true modern Quaker type. We plead for a Christianity which affects the whole of a man and vitalizes him through and through, which animates and vivifies every strata of society, which has a limitless power of expansion to meet the growing needs of the world. Instead of standing off and feeling suspicious of the triumphs of modern progress and discovery, instead of helplessly bemoaning the tendencies of the times, we must present a type of Christianity which sees God as clearly in our modern history as the Hebrew saw Him making and guiding and saving his nation. We must possess and present a kind of religion which modern thought cannot undermine, a kind of Christianity that will stand the light of investigation and scrutiny, a kind that will endure the deepest tests of things present and things to come. Modern Christianity is too much on stilts and doesn't get on the solid rock bottom. Our up-to-date Quakerism must cast away fear. It must see clearly that God is the God of both kingdoms, and that His revelations of spiritual laws and the discoveries of truth in the realm of nature will never clash. Let us fearlessly await the issue, confident that the Great Admiral is on the bridge, and all's well.

While our main message must, then, be the proclamation of the power of the living Spirit of God to save—to transform and spiritualize man—to make all things new, and while we present a Christ who speaks to all the condition and needs of our modern life, even as He met all the needs of the ancient world in which He lived and taught and suffered, we must expect and welcome a variety of expression and application of the fundamental truth. We have learned, I think, not to put the truth into Chinese shoes. We have outgrown the idea that religion attaches to a peculiar cut of coat, a special style of architecture for meeting-houses, a peculiar name for the days of the week, we shall also find that our Quakerism can express itself in forms and methods suited to the times, as old orders change yielding place to new. The presence and power of the Spirit is the main thing. We shall not all see alike perhaps as to the methods which are most desirable, but we shall strike all together even as in the picture of Isaiah: "So the carpenter encouraged the goldsmith, and he that smoothed with the hammer him that smote the anvil." What we want is unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace. We need to be lifted onward by that one Power which works in us all, as all the divers particles of water, each in its own place, feel the irresistible tug of a mighty force which makes the whole ocean obedient to the far-off moon. It was their faith in the greatness of their cause which made Cromwell's Ironsides invincible, and the vis viva of our church must come from a faith which is grounded on the deepest conviction of the heart—a faith which grows out of and lives upon the consciousness of Christ as a personal Saviour. Then around this central, cardinal faith there may be place for our individual phases of thought. Since Luther's time the idea of individual responsibility and of individual interpretation has been jealously guarded. The result is that the teachers in no one denomination are consistent with each other, but we have, and probably must have, diversity of thought and diversity of interpretation. No two men see a sunset alike, no two observers can describe any event in the same way, and no two men can find precisely the same meaning in a discourse which they hear. We must therefore expect that many things in the Bible, especially in the more poetic and figurative parts, will receive different treatment and exposition from different students of it, and we must also expect that different minds will favor different methods of Christian work. This state of things implies health rather than disease. We simply need to be extremely careful not to lose sight of the fundamental truths which should pulse like red blood through every part of our religious system, and we should guard against any attempt to force our peculiar views or methods upon those who are not ready for them. The truth must spread by the power of its own light, not by log-rolling or underhand methods—not by denunciation or by riding a hobby rough shod over those whose minds are not yet convinced. The whole, completed truth is very often like a mosaic picture. It is made by putting together in proper relation minute bits, no one of which tells its story by itself. Not seldom our own peculiar fragment of truth needs to be put in place by the side of some fragment which our neighbor holds before it can break a message to others. Most of us who are here have lived through a period which has seen the new birth of Quakerism. It was being slowly and gently wrapped in its mummy robes, and the world had already begun to talk of the passing of Quakerism. Some people talk that way yet. There came over the body a new breath of the Spirit. A new sense of the purpose and meaning of the Incarnation awoke. Hearts that had morbidly looked within, and whose whole gospel was introspection, began to beat with concern for other souls, and longed to share in the apostolic service which is never finished so long as there are those who have no God or an unknown God. Our old Quakerism was too self-centered; our new Quakerism is out-reaching. The old was timid, the new is bold; the old was custom-bound, the new is foot loose and free; the old was exclusive and clung to its peculiarity, the new is broad and cares only for essentials. We have already become a new power with still greater potentiality and possibilities, if we can escape the innumerable dangers which are testing us on every hand.

Our future depends wholly upon the degree in which we prove true to the leading of the same Spirit who gave us birth and who reanointed us for service. Already there are those who are timid, and who see no opening through the Red Sea which stands before us. It would have been better to have been a mummy in Egypt than to be stranded here before the difficulties which confront us, they say. The message of the Lord is, "Go forward." There is no promised land except for those who can win it in the face of Jebusites and Hittites and Hivites, Perrisites. Unless we can meet the difficulties of this century, and can speak a convicting message to those who are adrift and perplexed, unless we can hold our truth in the face of new light and profound search, unless we have something that fits the condition of life and thought now, we have waked up to no purpose. The types of Christianity which prevail are always those which express in the truest way the primitive life and message, and which can expound it most convincingly to the age, and if we desire to possess a place of influence we must deserve it. Many branches of the church to-day claim that they possess the right of primogeniture. How shall we prove which is the true heir of promise? There is an old, familiar story of a king who had a precious ring which went as a legacy to the son whom he loved best. The son found in possession of the ring on the death of the king was to be his legitimate successor and the ruler of his people. There came, in course of time, a king who had three sons, all equally beloved. The father had a silversmith make two rings exactly like the legacy ring, and each son received a ring, and supposed himself the chosen ruler. When the father died each son claimed the throne and showed the precious ring. The difficult case went for decision before a wise old judge of the realm. His conclusion was that as each bore the insignia of authority they should rule jointly until one of them should prove by his love for his people, by his success in winning their love, by his natural qualifications for ruling them that the kingdom by right belonged to him. Is Quakerism a child of promise; will it have a great place of power in the onward progress of the church? That depends on us. If, in our love for others, in our ability to help others, in our interpretation of the Gospel, in our constructive message, and our Spirit-filled lives we prove our heirship to service, we are as sure of a future as the sun is to give light.

He keepeth the paths of judgment, and preserveth the way of his saints.—Prov. 2: 8.

The solemnity of religion attaches to character, not to death. States of souls are solemn things. The question, What principles rule you? is a solemn question. But death, the disrobing of the flesh, is not peculiarly so,—not any more so than all life is, not any more than any crisis-season of life is which shows you what you are, and makes you taste the quality and sediment of your disposition and love.—Starr King.

FOR THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

WOULD YOU BE A CHRISTIAN?

BY THEODORE L. CUYLER, D.D.

I wish to say a few plain and affectionate words to those who are agitating the vital questions: "Ought I to become a Christian? And if so, how shall I become one?"

Yes, you ought to be a follower of Jesus Christ, and for three good reasons.

It is your duty; for God both commands and invites you. It is for your interest; if you choose Jesus

THEODORE L. CUYLER.

Christ as your Saviour and guide, you will be better, stronger, happier, and more useful in this world. You would secure the salvation of your immortal soul.

Whether you become a Christian or not depends upon your own choice; no one else can decide for you.

A loving God says to you in his Word, "I set before you life and death; choose life." When Joshua submitted the alternative, "Choose ye this day whom ye will serve," he addressed his hearers as free moral agents, and such are you. When Christ said to James and John, "Follow Me," He talked to them as rational beings; for if they could not follow Him, why did He ask them?

You have the power of choice; choose life! By that expressive word, in the Bible, is meant—the favor of God, the pardon of your sins, the sustaining strength to do right; it is the union of your heart with Jesus in this world and an unending Heaven beyond the grave. "Death" is the absence of all these; it means the dominion of sin in this world, and the punishment of sin in the world to come.

But you may say, "I am not choosing death; it is inconceivable that any sane person should deliberately decide to be eternally wretched when he or she might be eternally happy." I admit that people do not usually set success and happiness on the one hand, and ruin on the other hand, and then deliberately choose to be ruined. Yet it is equally true that multitudes are selecting and pursuing courses that inevitably lead to ruin.

Here is a young man setting out in life. Of course his preference would be to become rich and prosperous. But he chooses to lead a career of indolence and thriftlessness, which inevitably brings him to poverty and keeps him there.

Again, no man voluntarily chooses the disease, disgrace and horrors of drunkenness. Yet tens of thousands do choose to tamper with the seductive intoxicating glass, and their own free choice brings them to the drunkard's self-damnation. Did that foolish girl who gave her heart and hand to the showy rake who stole her affections choose to become a wretched wife? Yet she did choose to marry him; and dearly does she pay the consequences of her choice.

In like manner, my friend, when you decide to refuse that loving Saviour who is even now knocking at the door of your heart, you choose to risk the consequences. When you choose to continue on in sin, to follow the devices and desires of an unconverted heart, to refuse to be all that Christ would make you, and to grieve away the Holy Spirit of love, you are deliberately choosing eternal death; for you choose the path that leads to death.

You are not, and you cannot be in a position of neutrality. Not to accept Jesus Christ is to reject Jesus Christ, and thus throw away all the infinite advantages and blessings which He offers you. Instead of asking yourself the question, "Ought I to become a Christian?" you had better face the other question, "Have I refused to be a Christian?"

It is no unkindness to say to you that the only effectual hindrance to your becoming a Christian and securing eternal life, is your own sins. Until you break off from them, you cannot lay hold on Christ by faith, and come into heart-union with Him, and obedience to His commandments. No man can serve two masters; you cannot go in two opposite directions at the same time. Every day you spend away from Christ is a lost day. The longer you live as you are, the harder will it be to become a strong, happy and useful follower of Jesus. Your habits of thought and action will become the more deeply rooted. You will have just so many more weeds to pull up; sin is terribly self-propagating.

Some persons may tell you that it is a very easy thing to become a Christian—as easy as lifting your hand. Yes; it is an infinitely easy thing for the omnipotent Spirit of God to renew your heart in answer to honest prayer; and it will be a very simple and possible thing for you to become a Christian if you are willing to cut loose from your old sinful self and to fasten your heart-hold on the Divine Saviour.

Do not ask for any easier salvation than that; it will not be worth the having if it does not bring you a new character and a new style of daily conduct. Thorough weed-pulling and thorough ploughing are essential to a good crop. "Some people," said quaint Scotch Rutherford, "want to have Christ for about nothing and never have had a sick night over their own sins. This maketh loose work." It is just such loose work that produces the half-converted Christians; and it takes a great many half-Christians to make a single whole one. The gate into the path of purity and peace and power is too narrow for you to smuggle in a whole back-load of sins, even if conscience would let you attempt it.

Repentance and cutting loose from the dominion of sin must be attended with a cleaving to Jesus Christ. A single contact of the soul with Christ has made many an one a Christian. The first honest approach to Him—the first sincere prayer for pardon—the first act to obey and please Him—these have been like the touch of that woman who had the long malady; they have brought the blessing.

A man who had shamefully wronged a neighbor was brought under conviction of sin and could find no peace. Attending a religious service where he espied his neighbor, he called him out into the vestibule and begged his pardon for the wrong committed. That was the beginning with him of a Christian life.

Conversion is the act of turning to Jesus as the only Saviour—the Saviour who died to redeem you. As soon as you begin to trust Him and to obey Him the healing comes. You must understand that faith is vastly more than an opinion or a right feeling. It is a transaction—it is the contact of a person with a Divine Person, of a weak sinful penitent soul with an all-sufficient Redeemer. You need to be shut up to this one tremendous truth—either Jesus Christ must save me, or I am lost!

Attendance upon church service, Bible reading, or the best of sermons, or an "inquirer's meeting," or prayer, or any other good thing will be useless if you attempt to put them in the place of a personal grasp on Jesus Christ. Faith is indispensable just as the bucket is indispensable if you wish to draw up water from a deep well; but it is the water that you are after.

True faith puts your soul into living contact with the loving Son of God. A touch is enough to begin with; it must be followed by a strong and constant cleaving. The graft that is inserted in the cleft bough of an apple-tree must become united to the tree before it yields fruit. Abiding in Christ, and only through that abiding, will you be a vigorous, fruitful, and joyful Christian.

And if you become such a Christian, your wonder and your sorrow will be that you never became one before. Men have lived to regret almost every conceivable step; but I never heard of a person who repented of loving, obeying and serving the Lord Jesus Christ.

THE LANDING OF THE DOUKHOBORTSI.

Halifax, N. S., First month 21st, 1899.

There was enacted in Halifax harbor yesterday afternoon a scene which will live long in the memory of those who witnessed it as one of the most impressive in the history of any country. Amid the beauty of a perfect winter day, the steamer Lake Huron dropped anchor at quarantine, while over the motionless waters were wafted the notes of a sacred psalm chanted with tremulous lips by the 2,000 and more Russian Doukhobortsi, who crowded the decks of the vessel.

The dropping of that anchor signalized the beginning of a new life for these quaint people, who for more than a century have been persecuted and driven from pillar to post on the shores of the Black Sea. Storm-tossed and buffeted by wind and wave, they have at length reached a haven in a land where liberty of conscience and religion is every man's birthright. From the persecution of despots, through the perils of the tempests, they came to Canada, receiving at the hands of its accredited representatives a cordial reception and a guarantee that for the future they shall enjoy that liberty so long denied them at home.

As the steam tug bearing the Canadian immigration and railway officials neared the Lake Huron at 4 o'clock in the afternoon, the notes of a hymn were borne on the breeze. Prince Hilkoﬀ translated the words of the pathetic melody as "God is with us; he has helped us, and he will carry us through."

From stem to stern, the motley crowd, garbed fantastically, lined the decks of the steamer. They are a clean, healthy, strong-limbed and intelligent-looking people.

As the tug drew alongside the Lake Huron, Job S. Gidley, of Dartmouth, raising his wide-brimmed hat, shouted: "Welcome, Doukhobortsi, welcome," and thus from the lips of an American citizen did the Russian peasants receive their first greeting in the new world. Quickly they responded, bowing their heads twice almost to the deck.

The quarantine officials reported all well on board, and Prince Hilkoﬀ, of Russia, who has been in Canada for nearly a year; a Doukhobortsi interpreter, Quakers Joseph Elkinton and Job Gidley and the Canadian officials boarded the ship. The immigrants crowded around them with ejaculations and gestures, which were interpreted as those of gratitude and delight. Prince Hilkoﬀ and his Doukhobortsi mingled freely with the people, and ere long had heard all the story of their trip.

Amidships a solemn ceremony was soon in progress. The venerable Quaker, Joseph S. Elkinton, of Philadelphia, raised his voice in prayer, invoking Providence to guide and protect these strangers in the new world. Around him stood hundreds of the serious-faced people from the eastern world, with bared and bowed heads, listening reverently to the words as they were interpreted to them.

The voyage from Batoum to this port occupied 29 days, 16 of which were passed after Gibraltar was reached. Gale followed gale, but the immigrants bore the hardships of stormy weather well, coming into port strong and well.

Among the 1,804 adults and 492 children there was but one case of illness on arrival, and that a mild case of measles. Ten persons died on the voyage from ordinary diseases, and there was one birth. Five marriages also were celebrated since the vessel left Constantinople, according to the simple custom of their native land, which merely requires the assent of the contracting parties to consummate the union.

All were apparently happy and hopeful. Ever and anon during the voyage they chanted songs and prayers, and when Prince Hilkoﬀ and his associates left the vessel they lined the railings and waved farewells.

This party of Doukhobortsi is in charge of Leopold Sulerjitzky, a friend of Count Tolstoi, who is the only one who can speak a word of English. Associated with him are two doctors, a lady and gentleman, also friends of Tolstoi, who looked after the comforts of their countrymen on the voyage.

The immigrants comprise people of all ages, and all wear the characteristic dress of the Russian peasant. The men wear sheepskin coats, fur leggings and fur caps, and the women bright red skirts and thick woolen head coverings.

Conspicuous among them was an old Crimean veteran, Machortoff, who fought for his country at Inkerman. He was not then a Doukhobortsi, being a member of the Greek church. In 1855 he renounced militarism and joined the Doukhobortsi sect. Some years later he incurred the displeasure of the state officials and was banished to Siberia. For eight years he labored in exile, and was only allowed to leave that prison land a year ago, when the first movement for the migration of his people began.

Even then he was released from exile only to be sent from Russia, and was not permitted to return to his home to bid farewell to his relatives. Now he has arrived in Canada a gray-haired old man, bent with the weight of 85 years, to carve out a new fortune. This is but a sample of the sad and pathetic stories which cluster around the movement of this persecuted sect.

Although no sickness developed on the voyage, Dr. Montizambert ordered that all the Doukhobortsi be landed at Lawlor's island, to guard against any possible admission of disease into the country. They will debark to-day and undergo rigid inspection while the ship is fumigated.

From Halifax the steamer will proceed up the Bay of Fundy to St. John, the terminus of the Canadian Pacific railway, by which they will go forward to Ottawa in 40 colonist and tourist coaches, accompanied by five provision and commissariat cars. A special train for heavy baggage will follow.

At the Canadian capital the Doukhobortsi will be transferred to the care of the immigration officers of the government of Manitoba.

The immigrants will be accompanied by 10 practical interpreters from Montreal and Ottawa.

Deputy Minister of the Interior Smart is well pleased with the appearance of the immigrants. "They are splendid looking people," he said to-night, "strong and healthy, and I am confident will make good settlers."

Prince Hilkoﬀ, too, expressed his delight at the safe arrival of the people, saying: "I am to-day heartily glad that my poor, oppressed people have received such a hearty welcome, and especially that they have come to a country under the protection of the British flag."

Job S. Gidley said: "I am sure the American Society of Friends will rejoice to learn that the first company of Doukhobortsi which they have been the means of bringing to Canada have crossed the Atlantic safely and reached the shores of their new home strong and hearty. The impressive scene I have witnessed this afternoon will live in my mind as long as memory lasts. We have been well repaid for our journey hither and our efforts on behalf of these people."

Prince Hilkoﬀ said the French government had offered free transportation to the Doukhobortsi to settle in a French colony. The offer was declined, as the people prefer to settle in Anglo-Saxon dominions, where they would not be subject to conscription.—"New Bedford Evening Standard."

The bravest are the tenderest.—Bayard Taylor.

MURRAY SHIPLEY.

Our dear Friend, Murray Shipley, died suddenly at his home in Cincinnati, Ohio, Sixth-day, the 20th of First month. We give the following resume of his life and work as presented by Dr. William H. Taylor, of the same city:

He for whom we testify our esteem on this occasion assuredly would deprecate all flattery or undue praise, but an intimate association with him from early boyhood, well-nigh fifty years, qualifies me, and the memory of these years of friendship impels me, to offer a tribute at this time of his departure.

Murray Shipley often expressed gratitude for having had pious parents, to whose training he felt indebted for his character, but it was not till full manhood that the parental solicitude had its reward in witnessing his conversion.

The power of the Holy Spirit acting on a strong mind led to most marked results, a transformation of the man with the earnest desire and determined effort to acknowledge God in all his ways. He entered at once, with the energy and zeal which so characterized his life, into religious and benevolent work.

Seeking out a needy neighborhood, he, with others, established a Sabbath School in the southwest part of the city. From this grew the Penn Mission Sunday School, which for many years was a recognized power for good.

In the same vicinity he and others opened the workmen's coffee room, where the comforts of a resort and reading room were afforded without the evils of the saloon. Both of these enterprises were very successful until the extension of railroad yards so changed the locality that it was no longer available for their uses. Many years ago, a number of gentlemen organized the Children's Aid Society, the purpose of which was the physical and moral protection of dependent and neglected children. After a successful career it grew into the now well-known Children's Home. To provide suitable accommodations for this and the Sunday School, Mr. Shipley, at a personal expense of $12,000, erected a building on Park Street. Here the Children's Home had origin and grew for many years.

Business success enabled him to act upon a strange resolution made in early manhood viz., to retire from business at 35 years of age. This he did, and spent a long time in Europe traveling extensively, carefully studying the methods of caring for dependent children, so that he was able to say he had visited all important institutions of that character in Europe, among others the Rauh Haus of Hamburg, founded by that man of faith, Emanuel Wichern, and the orphan houses of George Muller, the modern exemplar of a "Life of Trust." His friendship with Mr. Muller grew to be such that when the latter visited this country he made his home in this city with Mr. Shipley.

With this extended observation, and above all a heart filled with love to God and little children, he came home to enter upon that special work which has been his burden and his joy ever since, and to the last day of his life, when in the city, certain hours of the day were spent with his friend and coadjutor, Mr. John Stettinius, at the home, studying the needs and ministering to the wants of every inmate.

Great as was this work, it was not all that he did. In the early history of the Y. M. C. A. he was a director and was active in its reorganization after the Civil War. For some time he was a director of the House of Refuge.

In the branch of the church to which he belonged, and in which he so sincerely believed, he was a strong power.

He, in company with Mr. Coffin, who ministers to us to-day, and others, organized the first foreign mission work of the denomination, selecting Mexico as the field of labor. Mr. Shipley visited that country, enduring much discomfort and privation, in traveling in the interest of the work.

When President Grant inaugurated his humane policy with the Indians, Mr. Shipley was one of the members of his church selected to carry out the policy, and he devoted much time and labor to the work.

In association with other philanthropists, he organized the Prison Reform Association, which has done so much for the improvement of the condition and management of prisons. The first session was held in this city, nearly thirty years ago, under the Presidency of then Governor R. B. Hayes and Governor Baker, of Indiana.

Multifarious and beneficial as were all these works of charity, never for a moment did Murray Shipley regard them as the foundation of his claim for God's mercy. Fully and clearly did he always recognize the atonement of Jesus Christ as his only means of acceptance.

Neither did he feel otherwise than that he was fallible and often did he refer to his proneness to err, but to him a source of great comfort was the thought that God was a loving father, dealing with his children with more than the love of an earthly parent, and to those who knew his inner life it was manifest that he had been walking with the Father, and so, when the summons came so suddenly, there was no terror, but, both literally and figuratively, may we say, "He wrapped the drapery of his couch around him and laid down to pleasant dreams." He bade us not "Good night," but in a brighter clime will say "Good morning."

To move among people on the common street; to meet them in the market on equal terms; to live among them not as saint or monk, but as brother-man with brother-man; to serve God not with form or ritual, but in the free impulse of a soul; to bear the burden of society and relieve its needs; to carry on the multitudinous activities of the city—social, commercial, political, philanthropic—in Christ's spirit, and for his ends—this is the religion of the Son of Man, and the only meetness for heaven which has much reality in it. —Henry Drummond.

Lesson VII.

FIRST QUARTER.

Second month 12, 1899.

CHRIST'S DIVINE AUTHORITY.

John 5; 17-27.

GOLDEN TEXT.—This is indeed the Christ, the Saviour of the world.—Jno. 4: 42.

HOME READINGS.

Second month 6.—John 5: 1-9. Healing at Bethesda.
 Second month 7.—John 5: 10-16. Enmity and Persecution.
 Second month 8.—John 5: 17-27. Christ's Divine Authority.
 Second month 9.—John 5: 28-35. John's Testimony.
 Second month 10.—John 5: 36-47. Testimony of the Scriptures.
 Second month 11.—2 Peter 1: 10-18. The Father's Testimony.
 Second month 12.—Hebrews 1: 1-9. Glory of Christ.

The miracle and the conversation described in John 5: 1-38 took place early in the second year of our Lord's ministry. The scene was at Jerusalem at the pool of Bethesda. It was probably at the time of the Passover, for Christ was accustomed to go up to that feast. The whole chapter should be carefully read. The many questions raised must be passed over except such as relate to the lesson.

Christ had roused the enmity of the Pharisees by his miracles and deeds of mercy on the Sabbath, for verse 16 implies that there were other deeds than the healing of the man at Bethesda. Christ answers them in the discourse which follows, and makes a statement of his "character, mission, authority and credentials." It has been well said that the discourse must be considered as a whole.

17. "Answered them." Their persecutions and charges. "My Father worketh even until now." Revised Version. From the time of the creation even up to the time he is speaking his Father has been ceaselessly working for man's good, for his salvation. He has not rested on the Sabbaths as they have come round. "And I work." If the coming of the Sabbaths has not hindered the Father's works of love, neither must it hinder the Son's works. These words imply that "the Son and the Father are together carrying out one work, and that in this miracle He has merely acted as the Father's agent." The charge which the Jews made in the next verse was a correct one. He did make the claim which the Jews refused to allow. Note that God's creative works are said to have ended with the sixth day, but it is not said that his sustaining, protective, reproductive activity rested.

18. "Said that God was his own Father." Revised Version. It would seem that the Jews understood that he claimed a peculiar relationship with God, closer than the one implied in the expression, "Our Father;" that is, he claimed equality with God.

19. "The Son can do nothing of himself." There have been many interpretations of these words—they have been twisted to support doctrines wholly out of harmony with the rest of Christ's teachings. They do not mean inability from lack of power, but inability in a moral and filial sense. It is as if a good man when asked to commit a crime would say, "I cannot;" or, as the early believer said, "I am a Christian, and therefore I cannot fight." So close was the union, so complete the harmony of will and spirit, that the Son could not act or think contrary to the Father's will. On the other hand in the different sense of the words, had He not had the power to yield to temptation, He would not have been "tempted in all points like as we are," nor could He be the perfect Saviour that He is. "Seeth." Not necessarily, nor probably, with the outward eye, but with the spiritual perception. "Likewise." "In like manner." Revised Version. Not "also," but after the same manner, with like power, authority. Father and Son are really one.

20. "For the Father loveth." A reason for the statements just made—the love of the Father. "Greater." Greater than the healing of the impotent man.

21. "For." In explanation of what has just been said. "Quickeneth." Maketh alive. The majority of commentators take verses 21 to 27 in a moral or spiritual sense, and this seems to be in accord with the spirit of the whole passage.

22. This verse has been variously interpreted. The obvious meaning is that judgment is committed to the Son. There is no limit to the life-giving power of Christ; but He cannot give life to those who will not receive it. By the very offer of life men are judged—if they accept they are judged worthy of eternal life; if they reject, they are likewise judged to be unworthy of it.

23. This verse is absolutely clear. Whatever may be the views of the ex-relationship between the Father and the Son, whatever theological distinctions may be drawn, the statement here is positive as to the position which the Son should hold in the mind of the believer. Rev. 5: 12.

24. "Heareth my word." "Heareth" suggests, as often, not only physical hearing, but moral as well—hears and understands. "Believeth him." Revised Version. "Hath eternal life." Not will, but already has it now in its present physical existence—he has entered into the "eternal now." "Shall not come into judgment." Revised Version. The judgment is over. See on verse 21.

25. Note the repetition of "verily, verily," in this lesson. Those words give the strongest emphasis. "Dead." Spiritually dead. "Live." See verse 24. The words "now is" seem to exclude the possibility of anything but a spiritual resurrection being meant.

26. This has been paraphrased thus: "For as the Father is the fountain of life, so hath he given to the Son to be the fountain of life." Compare John 6: 57.

27. "And he gave him authority to execute judgment because he is the Son of Man;" marginal reading, "a son of man." The latter is to be preferred, as there is no article in the original. The meaning seems to be, to Christ has judgment been given because having partaken of human nature he knows our frame. See Hebrews 5: 15.

PRACTICAL THOUGHTS.

1. Eternal life may, if we will, be a present possession.
2. To the believer there is "always more to follow."
3. There is judgment here, and hereafter."

LETTER FROM THE HOLY LAND.

RAMALLAH, Palestine, Twelfth mo. 13th, 1899.—The boxes came from Jerusalem on camels and were delivered at the Mission Twelfth month 2d. You can imagine the rejoicing over the many lovely gifts which they contained, and how delighted we all were with the very valuable, bountiful and very acceptable supply of nice sheets and pillow slips so neatly made and ready for use. They represented to us in a very touching way the loving interest and liberality of our dear home workers and we are very grateful for them. Della counted the dolls, forty-four of them. They will be great treasures to the "babies," as we call our younger girls, and those not needed now will be kept for future exigencies.

Lovely work-bags, little needle-books and needles, pin-cushions, scrap-books, balls, games, Christmas cards and booklets, brushes, combs, etc., lovely unbleached cotton, which dear Katie prizes so much, material for girls' dresses, a nice stock of made-up aprons,—in fact, all the boxes contained is very welcome and will be used to excellent advantage in the home. The lovely bureau covers and towels are very acceptable.

We regret that only a few names of donors could be found with the gifts. We would gladly write to them all personally and thank them for their presents.

There is so little done for the amusement and enjoyment of the children compared with the more favored boys and girls of our own land, that we are very thankful to be able to make the holidays a bright and happy time for the dear young girls under our care.

We can only say, on behalf of our Mission, we do thank our dear friends most warmly for their bountiful contributions to the Christmas boxes, and assure them that all their gifts are appreciated and will be useful to the Mission. May our loving Heavenly Father reward you for thus giving for His dear cause and for His sake.

Twelfth month 27th.

We had a quiet Christmas entertainment—just among ourselves. The school room was adorned with fresh green, and the windows filled with potted plants. A short program of Bible verses and songs was very prettily given, and then came the distribution of the presents. Instead of a tree we had a large box, draped with the stars and stripes, which served as a receptacle for many wonderful things. This was lightly covered over, and each child was permitted to come forward and slip her hand underneath and secure something from within. It was much fun for the little folk, and, as everything was wrapped and tied securely, it was interesting to watch their faces light up with smiles of delight at the little surprises that came to them on opening. How happy we all were!

Later there were games and a treat of cake, and finally bedtime came. Good-nights were said, and pleasant must have been the dreams of the children, especially those who for the first time had a doll of their very own. The girls never get so old but they wish they had a doll. A day or so before Christmas a doll was found in one of the girls' desks, which she had made for herself. It was only a few rags rolled together and tied so as to form a lump at one end. How delighted the owner must have been to exchange it for one of the daintily-dressed American dollies.

The next day the girls went home for a short vacation, and Helwe, Aisa's wife, has spoken of the great change already in Naomi and Zampi, though they have only been in the Training Home a few months. They are more thoughtful and helpful for her and around the house. How we do earnestly long that our dear girls may have the foundation of a Christian character firmly laid while they are here at school, that they may the better uplift their own people.

Two new girls have been admitted into the Training Home—one, Nustas Abd-el-nom, the daughter of a widow, whose husband was killed by an accidental shot in 1889, when Nustas was six months old. She is a good girl and makes good progress in her studies. Julia Frame is an American, about seventeen years old. During the fearful massacres in Armenia the American Mission School, where she attended, was burned down and everything destroyed; her grandfather was cruelly murdered, and she, with her parents, amid great danger, escaped from their home and finally reached Jerusalem. She is now doing her best at her studies, and we are glad that one who has such commendable ambition can receive the help and encouragement she finds in the Training Home.

Anna Hussey has taken upon herself the task of cleaning up and keeping the stones out of the Jerusalem road from our gate to the top of the hill. She hired five men and boys to clear it the first time and they worked most faithfully. Every one who passed by would say "taib," "taib" ("good," "good"), but never think they could pick up a stone.

Wilfred and Della and all the teachers went into Jerusalem to see the Emperor and Empress and had a fine view of the procession from the top of the United States Consulate, as the whole party left their carriages to walk down David Street to the new church, through the new street opened for the occasion.

About last Seventh month a petition was sent to the Turkish Government for a "license" to exempt the Mission from taxation, customs duties and the fear of having our work interrupted. During month after month the petition has been followed up, the Courts have been attended, every requisition has been answered, and hundreds of miles traveled on horseback, going in and out to Jerusalem. As the papers were drawn in the name of T. B. Hussey as Trustee, he could not leave the work, even when a cablegram told him of a very serious accident which had befallen his eldest son. What this must have been to him and his dear wife may be in some measure imagined by us. But during the wearisome wait for the letters A. M. Hussey writes: "We commit our dear boy most fervently anew to our Covenant God, and we trust His faithfulness, believing that even in this affliction some blessing must be folded, though our blinded eyes may not be able to see it now."

And her trustful faith has been rewarded. After long, wearisome delay, the "license" has been given, and they are set free to return, while their son has made rapid recovery from what might well have been a fatal accident.

Wilfred and Della Rountree write: "We are both in excellent health—a blessing for which we do indeed feel thankful." They think the climate suits them and they are both well acclimated to it.

MURRAY SHIPLEY AND THE CHILDREN.

Our esteemed friend, Murray Shipley, whose sudden death will shock his many friends, was superintendent of the Penn Mission which was opened in a Mill Street cellar, in 1860. In a block of thirty squares of tenements and shanties densely populated there was, previous to this, no Bible school and no Protestant church. From this seed grew the present finely-appointed "Home," which was entered Seventh month 23, 1877. More than 20,000 homeless or needy children have been provided for since the organization was effected. I was elected as visitor for this Home by the Board of Trustees in Twelfth month, and received many delightful letters from Murray Shipley, the president, speaking of the pleasure he anticipated in having me associate with him in this blessed work. I arrived here the evening of the 18th inst., and the next morning attended the mid-week meeting of Friends. Murray Shipley came in late. A friend read the first chapter of Hebrews, and Murray Shipley soon after knelt in fervent prayer, beginning, "As many sat at thy feet to learn of thee, blessed Master, so we come to be taught thy will concerning us," etc.,—a beautiful trustful prayer, simple yet eloquent, full of praise, and the thought of peculiarly burdened ones could rise above besetments and physical disabilities in quiet rest and faith. Later he spoke most cheerfully of Christ being "the anointed Jesus," and of our privilege to be anointed with the oil of gladness, citing many instances of those who had shown gladness even under most trying circumstances. After meeting he accompanied me to the "Home." He spoke of a sermon he preached the preceding Sabbath on "Christ our Passover," and about emphasizing the "therefore." Then told how he was formerly austere and exceedingly exacting in his religious life, but how the daily visits to the "Home," contact with suffering humanity, and needy children had softened and modified his thought, more like the gentleness of the Saviour, as he was moved with compassion. At the door he took me back down the steps to read the words cut in the stone over the entrance, "In Christ's Stead." This he emphasized. "Think of it, dear brother, thou and I to stand, to teach, to shelter, to train these little ones, in Christ's stead." After transacting some business he took me through the house. "I'm sixty-eight," he said, "one-half of my life has been engaged in this work, and they have been the sweetest and best of all." He chatted with the children as they sat at their well-spread table; then took me upstairs to the nursery, where were a dozen or more babies. One who had just been brought in for the first day was crying. He caught up a doll and frolicked about, then crouched down and reached it to the child, which seized it with a hearty laugh. So his last act to a child in this Home he founded and loved was to bring a smile through tears, as he had done to thousands of troubled faces before. I helped him on with his overcoat, and at the door he invited me to dine with him at 6.30. "Then we will talk over details of thy work," he said; then turning back again he caught my hand in a warm grasp, "May the Lord bless thy coming among us," as he was gone. A few hours later he was stricken down, and died with neuralgia of the heart. I write this fully as one who was peculiarly privileged to see the spiritual side of this honored business man, minister and philanthropist during his last day on earth. May all who read this be as faithful, persistent and trustful even unto the end.

FOR THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

A PRAYER.

Lord make me patient like thyself,
To bear what thou dost send;
Knowing well that thou canst see
What's best, e'en to the end.

Help me to know that when I ask
For things that cannot be,
That thou in thy great wisdom hast
Some better gift for me.

For I in weakness cannot see
As far as thou canst see,
I cannot know the ills that thou
Hast kept away from me.

Lord, for the things thou hast withheld
I thank thee, for thy care;
Help me to feel it more and more
And spread it everywhere.

The nature which is all wood and straw is of no use; if we are to do well, we must have some iron in us.—Canon Farrar.

There never has been such women as our white-ribboners, so large-minded, so generous, such patriots, such Christians.

A correspondent of the London "Daily News" notes the growth of the use of English on the Continent. Wherever he went he was able to converse with statesmen and diplomats in his native tongue. He found that as a rule the governing classes in Europe could understand and speak English. In the Russian royal family, especially, English is the familiar language of conversation. The Czar, for instance, invariably speaks English to the Czarina and his little daughters.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC FOR SECOND MONTH TWELFTH, 1899.

THE JOY IN FINDING THE LOST.

Luke 15: 1-10.

Second-day, Second month 6. The joy of the shepherd. Matt. 18: 12-14.

Third-day, Second month 7. The joy of the seventy. Luke 10: 1-17.

Fourth-day, Second month 8. The joy of sower and reaper. John 4: 35-38.

Fifth-day, Second month 9. Joy amid persecution. Acts 5: 34-42.

Sixth-day, Second month 10th. Returning with joy. Ps. 126: 1-6.

Seventh-day, Second month 11th. Lasting joy. Dan. 12: 1-3.

The joy of finding the lost depends very much upon our sense of relationship to them. A father will rejoice more over the finding of a lost child than a stranger will. The Pharisees had no appreciation of life outside of their own false, narrow measurements. They were so small themselves that they could not measure the greatness of life. A man is great in proportion to that which he has in common with other lives. Jesus Christ had infinitely more in common with life than any Pharisee, and therefore He cared infinitely more for the finding of the lost. When we are not joying over the saving of the lost we may be sure it is because of the littleness of our own lives.

The point of this parable is not in a somewhat ambiguous reference to the ninety and nine who need no repentance. It is in the joy of the shepherd and his friends over the one that is saved. The shepherd rejoiced because it was his sheep, because he was responsible for it, because arduous effort in its behalf had been crowned with success, because it had been rescued from great danger, because its salvation meant its welfare in the future. All these reasons are infinitely increased in meaning when it is a lost soul that is sought and found.

It was only one sheep that prompted all this effort, and caused all this joy. It is popular now to talk about reaching the masses, but after all it is personal contact with men one by one that saves them. The power of Henry Drummond over men lay largely in his willingness to reach them one by one. From the time when at twenty-three years of age he engaged in evangelistic work with D. L. Moody until his death, he was always after the individual. Tens of thousands of young men in England, America, Australia, and on the continent of Europe felt the power of personal contact with him, and upon them all with tactful, sympathetic earnestness he ever urged the importance of decision for Christ. In our church and Christian Endeavor work we are active on committee work, in teaching, entertaining, and various forms of necessary activity, but how few really devote themselves to the individual. The simplest and yet profoundest art and science of Christian life is that of reaching the individual, and bringing him to Christ. It is in the Gospel of John, the deepest of all Gospels, that we see most of this service.

What are the equipments for this service? First of all, a fullness of the love of Christ, the nature of Christ in our own lives. The joy of a personal fellowship with him must be our greatest attractive power. Men are not won so much by a doctrine, a dogma, as by a life. It is the man who inspires us with confidence that he has found in Christ the solution of his doubts, the strength for victory over his temptations, that can lead us to Christ. It is the man whose life is at once purely natural and yet deeply spiritual who can speak to thoughtful men to-day and win their confidence.

He is the skillful winner of souls who can bring to bear the right truth upon a human soul. Some men need one truth, some another. The Divine word has a message for all, and we need to know it thoroughly in order to find the right truth for each case.

A man must also study human nature. There is a certain charlatan style of dealing with men that some evangelists fall into that only deceives the shallow and catches only the shallow in its net. The depth and breadth of a man in his knowledge of human life will be largely the measure of his power to lead other men to Christ if that knowledge be used to this end.

FRIENDS' CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR OF AMERICA.

Dear Fellow-Workers:

Accept by this my hearty New Year's greeting. The outlook is most cheering. While everything seems most portentous of great events close at hand, whether first for good or ill, for weal or woe, is only known to Him who presides over the destiny of nations. But one risks nothing who prophesies great results of blessing from the mighty host of young people now arming for the fight. The result must be a great spread of evangelistic truth, a great power of evangelism, which is the world's great need.

May the Lord bless each and all. The Friends' preachers of the coming days ought to be, as a result of Christian Endeavor work, more scriptural, more intelligent, more logical, more forceful than some of us older ones who never had such training.

I find the young Friends here only commencing the work in some places rather timidly. But I conceive it to be the great need of English Quakerism.

We find in so many places a lack of apprehension of evangelical and orthodox truth, so little of the spirit of evangelism. We attended last night the annual convention of South Durham County Christian Endeavor Union; fully two thousand people, full of enthusiasm, as all Christian Endeavor conventions are.

Especial stress was laid on loyalty to our own denomination. A paragraph has recently been added to the pledge enforcing this. One remark seems well worthy of thought: "That one who is broad enough to have equal love for all churches is likely to be shallow."

The church should mean to every Endeavorer, not some undefined nebula, but something locally their own to love and serve second only to Christ.

Yours, in His service,

Darlington, England.

CHARLES W. GODDARD.

SPECIAL OBJECT GIVING IN MISSIONARY WORK.

Any notice of the report of the committee on this topic was omitted for want of space in the report of the annual conference of mission boards given last week, but the matter is of too much importance to be passed without notice. Of late years it is being strongly urged that in order to bring churches in closer connection with mission fields it is necessary to assign to them special objects for their support, or special fields that they may feel are in some sense their own. In order to secure a consensus of opinion on this matter a committee was appointed last year to collect opinions from various boards. Seventeen questions were addressed to these boards, and answers from forty-five were received, including all the larger boards in the United States and Canada. From these reports it is seen that twenty-five per cent. of giving is now for special objects, and that the custom is increasing. Where missionary boards can discriminate as to choice of objects most of them place missionaries salaries first; fourteen place native helpers next, and eleven place schools third. Others are governed by the wishes of the donors. Most societies endeavor to discourage personal communication between the donors and native helpers supported by them. It is not best, in general, to keep native workers in touch with other than the regular boards. In answer to the question, Do you regard special object giving as on the whole advantageous, and therefore to be encouraged, or as a necessary evil to be restricted as far as practicable? twenty-three boards agree that the advantages are more than counterbalanced by the disadvantages, and that such giving should be discouraged and restricted as far as possible. Twelve boards favor special object giving with proper restrictions. Twenty boards avoid special appeals. The general opinion seems to be that it is better to assign shares in special departments rather than individual workers. Many boards think it best to urge people to give for Christ's sake, and to put confidence in and leave to the boards, who are supposed to understand the needs of the field, the work of appropriation.

The whole question is fraught with difficulties. Givers are prone to choose the more attractive forms of work, and leave others just as needful to care for themselves. They do not understand the hurtful influence on native workers who know they are supported by special churches, especially in connection with native workers who are not so supported. They do not know the embarrassment of boards in rightly distributing funds to the needs of the work. Such special giving generally interferes with regular giving sooner or later. Where donors choose the field, and contribute to new work, it throws responsibilities upon boards to continue that work when the special giving ceases. When special giving is for a native worker or a pupil in the school who does not prove satisfactory, the givers are disheartened. But with all this it remains true that for the present thousands of people can be interested in special objects who are not interested in the work as a whole. The boards cannot resist this judgment of the churches, for they are only the servants of the churches. The remedy does not lie in any radical measures. Boards can only hope by laboring to educate the churches as to the importance of the work as a whole, and its success as a whole to restrict this movement in the direction of special giving. Meanwhile, it appears that we must use it in view of the great necessities of the field until giving shall be established upon a broader basis.

News from the Field.

A cablegram dated Jaffa, First month 23rd, from Timothy B. Hussey, announces that they are to ship for home at once, so that they may soon be expected on our shores.

William Marshall, of Iowa, sailed from Liverpool, England, for South America on the 12th of First month.

MINISTERING FRIENDS WHO HAVE DIED ABROAD.

A communication in THE FRIEND of 25th Eleventh month, 1898, mentions the removal by death of several Friends in both England and America, who had crossed the ocean with certificate for service.

In addition to American Friends of this character who died upon your side of the Atlantic, there can be mentioned the names of William Hunt, of North Carolina, and Job Scott, of Providence, R. I. William Hunt died in Ireland in 1772, the year in which John Woolman deceased at York, England, of the same disorder—small-pox. It may be added that he was a cousin of John Woolman, and the great-grandfather of Dougan Clark, of this country, who has recently deceased. Job Scott died in Ireland in 1790, or about that date.

Among public Friends from England who departed this life in America may be mentioned Sarah Stephenson, from the Monthly Meeting of Wiltshire, who died in Philadelphia in the Fourth-month, 1802, a minister of some note in London Yearly Meeting, and who arrived in this country, in feeble health, a few months previous to her death.

In the very early days of the Society several Gospel messengers from the Old World laid down their lives in America. Roger Gill, from London, who was an associate with Thomas Storey in religious service, died of the yellow fever in Philadelphia, in 1699. Among this number may be included Marmaduke Stephenson and William Robinson, who suffered as martyrs in Boston in 1660. There are doubtless others, whose names have been overlooked as the years have passed away.—Edward T. Tucker in "London Friend."

New Bedford, Mass., 13th 12th mo., 1898.

INDIANA YEARLY MEETING.

Greensboro, Ind.—Daisie Barr, of Marion, Ind., commenced a series of meetings at Greensboro, on the night of the Twelfth month 13th, and continued for twenty-three days, holding two sessions a day, making forty-seven sessions in all. Under the plain preaching, in which the Lord led her, the church and vicinity have been greatly stirred and wonderfully blessed; twenty-three have professed conversion, forty backsliders reclaimed, and a large number have protested a deeper work of grace. Many middle-aged men and fathers have been converted, or reclaimed. Twenty-one have requested to become members with Friends. We feel that our church has put on new strength and is in a good working condition—for all of which we praise the Lord. Our young friend goes from this place to Sycamore, Ind., followed by the prayers of her many friends that the Master will make her the same blessing to others that He has to us.

MARY A. SAINT.

Amo, Ind. Nerius Hodgin is pastor of Amo Meeting. He has, with the help of John Hadley, held a two weeks' meeting. Their teaching was plain and practical. Those who were privileged to attend the meeting have taken a step in spiritual things.

ANN B. THOMPSON.

Marion, Ind.—C. D. W. Hiatt, of Fairmount, commenced a series of meetings at South Marion, Ind., First month 1st, and closed the 22d. All the results of this meeting cannot be known now, we believe eternity alone can but tell the work that has been done,—sinners were converted, backsliders reclaimed, and children of God baptized with the Spirit, voices were heard in prayer and praise which had long been silent. Maud Millener, Ruth Barrett and Josie McCamble were helpers in most of these meetings. The influence of these young women was greatly felt among the young people, and much good was done through them.

ELMA S. THOMAS.

A Friend from Hanover, Mich., wishes to correct the statement made recently that Ida Ryan was to attend Penn Meeting every two weeks. The Friend says such arrangements have not been made.

Fairmount, Ind.—A series of meetings has recently closed at East Branch, conducted by Esther J. Morris, of Fairmount, Ind., the result of which was the renewal and conversion of almost a score of souls. It was the greatest visitation of the presence and power of God that has come to our community for years. Some gave up their tobacco for Jesus' sake; many others were shown their condition before God. Sister Morris was ably assisted in the meeting by Cerena W. Jay, Anna Swafford, and M. L. Swafford, of Back Creek.

Deer Creek, Ind., First month 24th, 1899.—Our dear friend Benjamin F. Morris conducted a series of meetings at this place, beginning Twelfth month 12th and closing on the 29th. Thirty meetings in all.

Although not largely attended those who were at the meetings were amply repaid. A blessing attended the instructive preaching of our brother, and as a result five were converted, eight reclaimed, and the church greatly strengthened.

We had the acceptable company of his wife at a few of the closing sessions.

ELMINA B. HARRIS.

NEW YORK YEARLY MEETING.

Luke Woodard's company and service were acceptable and instructive at Farmington Quarterly Meeting, held at Collins. He remained to conduct some extra meetings. Naomi Purinton, from Vermont, and Dr. Grene and wife, from Buffalo, were in attendance. Ann M. Haines was also able to be present. The meeting of ministers and elders was held as usual at the home of David Little, and his sister, Isabella Waring; luncheon and meals for Friends were also kindly served at their home. The Quarterly Meeting, though not largely attended, owing to prevailing gripe, was a time of spiritual fervor and uplift. Several important matters of business were left over until next Quarterly Meeting. It was decided to send petitions to Congress in favor of the Hepburn, Alaska, and other reform bills. Also a protest against the admission of Brigham H. Roberts to our National Congress. David Little is still faithfully laboring at Collins, Edwin P. Wood at Farmington, John H. Aldrich at Hartland, and although John D. Piper is laid aside, by sickness, from his ministerial work at Elba, yet we trust the Lord will soon restore him to health and his accustomed labors in that place.

Anna S. Leggett has not been able to accept calls to engage in revival work since last summer, but we trust she will soon be well, and able to resume the work so dear to her heart.

In many places the ranks have been thinned by removals and death, but we are praying the Lord of the harvest to revive the work, and that souls be saved and added to the church.

H. H. LEGGETT.

The address of J. Lindley Spicer, formerly of New York City, will be Cincinnati Children's Home, 319 West Ninth Street. His new work will be securing homes for children, supervising, and replacing them, when necessary, throughout the farming communities of Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois. Any person willing to "receive one of these little ones," may address as above.

WESTERN YEARLY MEETING.

A series of meetings, continuing nearly three weeks, was held at North Branch meeting-house, one of the meetings of White Lick Quarterly, conducted by Wm. Card and Ruth E. Guyre. There was one conversion, some renewals, two accessions to the church. The membership was strengthened and built up and more closely united in spirit and purpose.

R. H.

Phlox, Ind.—New Hope Monthly Meeting has been wonderfully blessed in two series of meetings held within its limits. The first, of three weeks' duration, was held by William H. Hunnicutt, at Antioch, three miles southeast of Phlox. All our members who attended that meeting were wonderfully blessed in many ways, some of whom received the baptism of the Holy Ghost.

Besides this, there were two conversions, four renewals, and six requests for membership. Following this was a two weeks' meeting in New Hope, at Phlox, Ind., held by Thomas J. Holding and John Butler, in which at least twenty persons claimed the baptism of the Holy Ghost. Some of these received pardon for their backsliden state before receiving the definite blessing above referred to. Several others were received into covenant favor with God. There were two requests for membership. The "Leadings of the Spirit" were wonderfully manifested in the preaching and other services of these meetings, and never has Satan and his followers been so opposed to the Lord's work as now. We praise the Lord for His application of the "refiner's fire and fuller's soap" upon the hearts of this people in this community.

A. LEONIDAS ELLIS.

Azalia, Ind.—Sand Creek and Azalia Meetings united in a series of meetings of eight days, which proved to be a time of great strength to all who attended. David Hadley was with us and was much blessed in preaching the Gospel. Many deepened in the spiritual life and a few were added to the church. Our Quarterly Meeting was also a time of great showers of blessing. Stephen Scott, from Fairmount, Ind., was acceptably with us. Our work is progressing nicely under the care of the pastor, Lewis E. Stout, whose work is strongly supplemented by our three resident ministers. Our ministers are in good unity one with another, and the the Lord is blessing us.

Chicago.—John L. Kittrell conducted a series of meetings at Friends' Meeting House in this city, commencing Twelfth month 11th and continuing about ten days. The meetings were well attended by Friends and others, and were a season of blessing to many. A number of young people, some of them already members, made public confession of Christ and continue to be a source of rejoicing to us. Two have been received into membership and there may be others soon. During several days we had the most acceptable company and assistance of David Hadley, Yearly Meeting Superintendent.

RICHARD SIMMS.

Gray, Ind.—A series of meetings has been held at East Branch, Hamilton Co., Ind., of about twenty days' duration, conducted by Mary J. Mills, of Hopewood Monthly Meeting, Dublin Quarterly Meeting, assisted by our pastor, Nathan D. Knight, and also by Ellis A. Wells, of Carmel. We are clearly within the truth in stating that, in spiritual power, deep heart searching and victory over the powers of darkness, we have never known such meetings here before. Mountains of opposition have been removed and strongholds of sin and Satan brought down. Some incidents of the triumphs of God's saving power during these meetings were marvelous in our eyes, and beyond the utmost reach of our faith at the outset.

So far as known, the professions of definite blessings received amount to over one hundred. Among these near forty have claimed the blessing of sanctification. A number have already given their names for membership, and several more are expected to follow. But, praise the name of the Lord, figures cannot set forth all the good done in an effort of this kind.

MILTON HANSON.

IOWA YEARLY MEETING.

Minneapolis.—Minneapolis Quarterly Meeting was held at Minneapolis on the 21st and 22d inst., and was an occasion of blessing from our Father. Minneapolis Meeting is receiving some additions to its membership and there is an increase of spiritual life. The Sabbath School is increasing in numbers and interest, Wm. P. Angell who has been doing pastoral and evangelistic work in the city for nearly seven years, will move to Muncie, Ind., Third month 1st.

A. J. Hanson is laboring successfully at Bangor, Iowa, and the spiritual interest there is very good. His ministry and his pastoral work in the homes of Friends are edifying the church. Samuel Jay, who was at Bangor last year, is now residing near Albion. His health is much improved, which will be welcome news to his many friends in Bangor.

Amy Clendenon, of Oskaloosa, is spending the winter at Bangor, and is very helpful in the church.

The children met last Sabbath with the pastor and his wife, and organized a Junior Endeavor Society, which we believe will be a help to themselves and others.

The evangelist, Brother Charles Wright, of Indiana, has just closed a very successful series of meetings. Many have been strengthened in their Christian warfare, and about forty souls—some of them renewals—have claimed the promises and have started on their "Zion-bound" journey. Brother Wright was with us eighteen days, held meetings both morning and evening, except a few meetings that were carried on without him when he was overtaken with the grippe; but he was soon all right again and carrying on the work as before, only a little easier fatigued bodily.

We feel that the meetings were greatly blessed. The interest taken in our day meetings has been very gratifying. A feeling of love seemed to pervade during the whole of the meetings, and each one has shown a willingness to do his part, which we believe, has helped our brother greatly in bringing about that which the Lord sent him to accomplish. Brother Wright is now in the work at Hartland, but we want to say that the work here is going right on and souls are being saved. Brother Hanson preached an excellent sermon Sabbath evening. In conclusion we want to thank our Heavenly Father for the feast of good things that he set before us, and let us promise, with His help, to work faithfully to build up his cause in our neighborhood; and let us in the future do more and better work than ever before, thus showing our appreciation of what the Master has done for us in this place.

MINA JACKSON.

Allen, Neb.—Our Pastor, Benj. B. Hiatt, just closed a special effort at Spring Bank, on the evening of 18th inst.; thirty-one sessions were held, in which thirty-nine souls gave testimony to definite blessings either in renewal or conversion, while some seemed to get higher thoughts in relation to the purposes of gospel work, and to take on new strength. The church was much built up, notwithstanding many were hindered from attending regularly on account of a severe scourge of grippe that seemed to be quite general at the time the meetings were in progress. The Lord gave strength to fearlessly proclaim a full gospel. The Holy Spirit attended the word, which was universally backed up by the Scriptures. We were warned to believe in God intelligently along the lines of his word, with the assurance that none can fail who thus come. The love side of the gospel was put in much tenderness; the justice side with much firmness and the sinner encouraged to avert it by coming to the fountain of healing. Sin was uncovered in its many tendencies, in its effects on our race in religious, in social, in political, in business, as well as in home life. With the remedy all the time kept prominent before us, so that while we were made conscious of our affliction, we should not sink down in despair, but might see the way of escape, which many seeing, entered in and found place.

ELIJAH ROBERTS.

Revival meetings were held at the Friends' Mission Chapel, West Oskaloosa, Iowa, commencing Twelfth month 3d, and continuing until Twelfth month 22d. The meetings were conducted by evangelists Edwin Loft and family. The power of the Lord was present throughout all the meetings; there have been eight conversions, ten renewals, eight sanctified, making twenty-six in all, for which we praise the Lord. Brother Loft and his wife are now at Motor, in Ackworth Quarterly Meeting, where the Lord is wonderfully blessing their labors for him, in giving them souls for their hire in that place. Twenty-four have professed a desire for a new life and five united with the church thus far. They will remain one week longer at Motor, and then go to Friends' Meeting, Spring Valley, near Marshalltown.

OHIO YEARLY MEETING.

Augusta Meeting.—We have just closed a successful series of meetings at this place, conducted by the evangelist, Levi R. Lupton, of Lupton, Mich., and our pastor, Geo. B. Malmsberry, of Garfield, Ohio. With the exception of a few evenings when the weather was very inclement, the house was well filled, and often to its full capacity, by very attentive and deeply interested audiences—some coming five and six miles. The clear, pointed preaching of the Gospel was made quick and powerful, and very early in the meeting conviction fell on the people, and as a result of the work already apparent there have been some conversions, quite a number of backsliders reclaimed, a few believers sanctified, reconciliations effected, and our little church greatly revived and strengthened. A sister who has been in poor health for months, was healed, and others who were worn and ill from excessive work and want of rest received a special touch from God and had victory in their bodies in the name of the Lord. Many from other denominations attended regularly; a number of whom took an active and helpful interest in the work and testified to definite blessings received. There will be some accessions to the church. God has indeed been gracious unto us and made his face to shine upon us. To him be all the praise.

ASA PIM.

KANSAS YEARLY MEETING.

Northbranch, Kan.—At the last Quarterly Meeting of Walnut Creek in the Eleventh month, we had the company of Josiah Dillon, from Iowa; Adolphus Folger, late from Oregon; Achsa Kenyon, of Lowell, Kansas; Eliza Cary, Yearly Meeting Superintendent of Evangelistic Work, and M. Z. Kirk, agent for THE AMERICAN FRIEND. The labors of all our visiting friends were received as messages from the Lord, and duly appreciated by us. After Quarterly Meeting the friends remained for a time visiting the meetings composing the Quarterly Meeting. Josiah Dillon and Eliza Cary came to Northbranch and held a few sessions, and then went to another field of labor. At Northbranch Monthly Meeting in Twelfth month, Joseph Coleman, from Iowa, was present, and the next day was joined by M. Lemmon, Superintendent of Evangelistic Work of Oskaloosa Quarterly Meeting, who commenced a series of meetings which continued for three weeks, J. Coleman leaving after nearly two weeks, going to another field of labor. A. Folger and Achsa Kenyon having closed a series of meetings at Oak Creek, joined by M. Lemmon, and labored to the close of the meetings. We can truly say that in all the labors of our dear friends, we have the evidence that the Lord is still leading his church and people. As a result of the meeting, nineteen have been converted, fifteen sanctified, and thirty renewed. The Academy here has received a great spiritual blessing in the conversion of several of the students.

ASA M. TOWNSEND.

Pond Creek, Oklahoma Territory.—We commenced a meeting at Coldwater, First month 5th, holding meeting at night and visiting families through the day. Annie J. Winslow was with us until Sabbath evening the 8th. Her gospel messages were well received. She went to Ringwood Second-day, and Josiah Dillon came Third-day and remained over Sabbath. His messages were very strong and convincing, and just what we need in this new work. He goes from here to Friends' Valley; his mission is to teach the way of the Lord more perfectly, especially our phase of the Gospel, that has been much neglected here—and that is the physical side of the Gospel. Praise God for the good that is being accomplished; he is inciting most of the meetings of Stella Quarter.

A. C.

Cherokee, Oklahoma Territory.—Lodi and Annie Bonser began meetings at the McRachy school-house, thirteen miles southwest of Stella Academy, Twelfth month 27th, and held thirty-eight sessions. The power of God was manifested, prejudices were forgotten, and salvation through Christ was the theme. One brother said he was so glad he had been enabled to see beyond water-baptism and see Jesus as he never had before. There were near thirty renewals and conversions, mostly conversions. Good work was done in singing the gospel, led by S. W. Martain.

Josiah Dillon has visited the monthly meetings of Stella Quarter, holding a few meetings in each place. His work has been owned and blessed of God, to the awakening of the church as to her responsibilities to the financial support of the work, and we hope to be able to support a missionary in the near future.

Alvin Coppock and James Welsh have just closed meetings at Friends' Valley and Coldwater. Conversions, renewals and strengthening the church are the visible results.

Meetings are in session at Stella. Susie Allen is to take charge First month 25th.

LAURA A. COPPOCK.

GENERAL CHURCH NOTES.

Among the many projects on foot to celebrate the advent of a new century, none, perhaps, is more noteworthy than the effort which is being made by the Methodist Episcopal Church to raise the immense sum of $20,000,000 as a thank-offering for the blessings of twenty centuries of Christianity. The amount is to be secured by First month 1st, 1901. Of this, $10,000,000 is to be applied to Methodist universities, theological seminaries, colleges, and other schools, and $10,000,000 for philanthropic purposes in the Methodist Church and for the payment of debts of church properties. The scheme may seem as visionary as it is stupendous, but the Methodist Church is a large institution and it has thousands of consecrated members, so that the realization of the amount is not impossible.

If public opinion has any effect upon the Mormon mind, then Congressman-elect Roberts, of Utah, is not resting upon a bed of roses. Roberts, who is a Mormon, and who has been chosen as a Representative for Utah, is an avowed polygamist, having three wives. It has been claimed that as such he has no legal right to sit in Congress, and hence numerous petitions have been circulated, protesting against the recognition in Congress of such immorality as is openly practiced by Roberts. Ministerial and W. C. T. U. conventions, mothers' meetings, and many other bodies have passed resolutions denouncing Roberts as unworthy of citizenship and calling upon Congress to refuse to receive him. We have, however, the authority of such an eminent jurist as ex-Senator Edmunds that Congress has no alternative but to accept Roberts' credentials. The State makes its own laws and it is responsible to itself alone for the existence of polygamy. It may send to Congress whom it wishes. The fact should not be ignored that Utah is no longer a territory under the direct control of the United States, and the assurances of her people that polygamy is no longer practiced count for nothing. It is at least tolerated in its worst form. Congress, however, after receiving Roberts, may expel him by a two-thirds vote. Eminently desirable as this step would be, it seems improbable that it will be taken.

Considerable agitation is now making against kissing the Bible when taking an oath. The custom, in fact, is fast becoming obsolete, and it will before long, in all probability, be abolished. One magistrate in New York has given up the practice altogether. In his court he has witnesses swear by holding up their right hand. It is interesting to note that Major-General Miles, when testifying some weeks since before the War Investigating Commission, declined to give his testimony on oath.

Dr. Lyman Abbott, of Plymouth Church, Brooklyn, is to be succeeded by Dr. Newell Dwight Hillis, of Chicago. Dr. Hillis, it is said, has been doing an excellent work in the latter city, and exceptional inducements have been held out by his parishioners to retain his services. He has now formally accepted the call to Plymouth Church. There are on the roll of this church 1,835 members. The receipts and expenditures amount to about $38,000 a year.

A conference of Anglican Bishops was recently held at which some very optimistic and conservative views were expressed regarding the present trend towards "Romanism." The Book of Common Prayer was frequently cited as authority against the use of candles in a way suggestive of worship, against compulsory secret confessions, against the sprinkling of water, and against the observance of days not authorized as holy. Yet one may discern, perhaps, with all the warnings expressed, a growing tolerance of ritualism in its highest forms.

DILWORTH—BROWNE.—At the home of the bride's grandfather, Noble C. Browne, Mt. Pleasant, Ohio, Charles M. Dilworth to Edna Garnett Browne, Twelfth month 25th, 1898.

ELMORE—COFFIN.—At the home of the bride's parents, near Pleasant Plain, Iowa, First month 25th. Luther Elmore and Minnie Coffin were united in marriage.

HUDSON—FARLEY.—At Greenfield, Ind., Harry M. Hudson to Mary F. Farley, the former from Carthage, Ind., the latter of Greenfield.

HUCHENS—DAVIS.—Twelfth month 25th, 1898, at the residence of the bride's parents, Pennville, Ind., William Huchens to Laura Davis. They are both members of Little Blue River Meeting.

THOMASSON—CHAMBERS.—At the home of the bride's father, R. W. Chambers, Mt. Pleasant, Ohio, William W. Thomasson, son of Samuel J. and Mary Thomasson, to Olive Chambers, Twelfth month 28th, 1898.

Died.

CHASE.—Hepsibah L. Chase, daughter of Nathaniel and Ruth Sisson, and wife of Alanson Chase, on First month 5th, 1899, peacefully entered into the rest of the spiritual world in her 72d year. She was born in Collins, N. Y., of parents who devoutly practiced the plain, simple virtues of the Society of Friends. Her life was characterized by virtues which may well be emulated. Her charity knew no other bounds than her ability. Whenever it was known to her that others were in distress or want, her eyes could not close in slumber until she had done what she could for their relief. Her interest and zeal for religious instruction were stimulating to all about her. For twenty years or more did she act as Superintendent of the Friends' Bible School at East Hamburg, N. Y., giving it its life largely from her own consecrated personality. She was one of the noble saints that all recognize as "the salt of the earth."

COLYAR.—Rebecca Colyar, daughter of Jesse and Mary Ozbun, a member of New Hope Meeting, Indiana, departed this life First month 12th, 1899, aged 47 years. She was a firm believer in the leadings of the Spirit, and she helped many into the light. Rebecca Colyar's life has not been lived in vain. Those lessons of patient suffering, trustfulness in God's doing all things well, and obedience to God's will, will ever be remembered by those who mourn her loss, but in Heaven there is one more added to the many ties which draw us to live for Him who is King of Kings and Lord of Lords.

COX.—James Cox died at his home near Elizabethtown, Ind., First month 15th, 1899, aged 70 years, 1 month and 2 days. He was born near Goldsboro, N. C., where he spent his boyhood years, and emigrated in the early fifties to Bartholomew Co., Ind., where he resided the remainder of his life. He was married in 1855 to Sarah Hall, who survives him, together with five children. He was a birthright member with Friends, very faithful in attendance at all the meetings, a Bible school teacher for thirty years, and an elder at the time of his death. The sickness of this dear Friend was quite lingering, but he manifested great patience, often repeating precious promises from God's word. A large company gathered at Sand Creek Meeting House on the funeral occasion, where the deceased had worshiped for forty-eight years.

HUNT.—Elizabeth Hunt died at her home, near Walnut Ridge, Rush Co., Ind., the 25th of Twelfth month, 1898, aged 75 years and 10 months. She was a daughter of Nathan and Elizabeth Hill, who were among the early settlers at Walnut Ridge. She was married to Alfred Hunt in 1841, with whom she lived in happy union for nearly fifty-eight years. He, at the age of 81 years, survives her. She was a member of Walnut Ridge Monthly Meeting all her life and for many years a useful elder in the church. She was of a quiet, unassuming disposition and her kind words of cheer and generous deeds endeared her to all who knew her.

During her last illness she was confined to her room for more than six months. Much of this time her suffering was very great but through it all she was patient, always manifesting a resignation to the will of her Heavenly Father. She died as she had lived, fully trusting Him who had so wonderfully blessed her and cared for her through life.

News and Events.

The Senate agreed last week to take a vote on the Peace Treaty on the 6th inst. Active opposition to the ratification of the treaty appears to be waning, and it is possible that a vote will be reached before the date agreed upon. In the meanwhile Agoncillo, Aguinaldo's representative in Washington, is pressing his suit and vainly seeking official recognition from this government. It is said that the despatches which Agoncillo has forwarded his chief on the divided state of opinion in America have encouraged the Filipinos, and they are more than ever inclined to resist the sovereignty of the United States. Alarming reports regarding the Filipinos' hostile attitude are repeatedly issued by the press, but thus far Major-General Otis and Admiral Dewey have prevented an open rupture. The insurgents continue to hold Iloilo. Their treatment of the Spanish civil prisoners, priests and others is said to be fully as cruel as any of the atrocities committed by Spain. If this is so, then Spain's people have learned their lesson all too well.

The war and its aftermath have made strange bedfellows. There was nothing but general rejoicing over the re-established fraternity of North and South. The position in which certain political leaders find themselves seems merely the cruel irony of fate. William Jennings Bryan may yet find an inharmonious party in 1900. He is firmly opposed to imperialism or expansion, and he would still make the money question the paramount issue. But Richard Croker as firmly believes in expansion, and does not incline to push the money question to the front. As Croker controls Tammany, and Tammany controls the New York democracy, the situation looks ominous. Senator Hoar finds himself out of unity with his party, and with all his vigor, urged on by a deep-seated conviction, he is fighting the new expansionist policy of the Republicans. Ex-President Cleveland can endorse in one particular the views of Bryan: he has expressed in no uncertain tone his hostility to the addition of new territory, and deplores our acquisition of the Philippines. Such instances of personal opinions of our leading men might be indefinitely multiplied. Many strong men are arrayed on both sides; the majority of the people appear to favor expansion.

Since the Czar issued his first peace manifesto, in Eighth month, he has been loudly commended, and as severely condemned, by Christendom. His second call, outlining the subjects for a peace conference, issued on the 15th ultimo, will elicit a renewed expression of opinion. It is apparent that the nations are indifferent to the value of such a conference, and but little interest has thus far been manifested by those who are to participate. Certain it is that preparations for war continue unabated. Germany is about to increase her already burdensome army by 25,000 men. England is making an enormous addition to her powerful navy. She now has 119 war vessels in process of construction. Russia herself is not idle. Her outposts are being strengthened and her army increased. The estimated number of conscripts which she will call for this year is 350,000, or 100,000 more than ten years ago. Our own peace-loving country now has a bill before its Congress which is designed to increase its standing army of 25,000 to 100,000. We believe, however, that the Czar deserves credit for more sincerity than has been accorded him, and we may yet see a partial consummation of his dreams.

The memory of Keely, of Keely motor fame, is likely to be tarnished with the proof of fraud committed in carrying out the wonderful experiments which beguiled so many and made the magician rich. A complete exposure has been made of the tricks employed by Keely, and it has been pretty definitely established that the forces employed to accomplish the experiments were not made by any newly-discovered force in nature, but plain compressed air and electricity. In his workshop in Philadelphia have been found tubing for carrying the air, generators for making it, and appliances for transmitting the power to the machines. There need be no further mystery about the Keely motor.

"KINE TO EVRYBUDDIE."

In "the short and simple annals of the poor," there is sometimes a world of tender meaning, far more sincere and truthful than many a stately biography or formal epitaph.

"I saw a rude, roughly hewn stone above a grave on an eastern Kentucky hill-side a few weeks since," said a gentleman to a reporter for the Louisville "Evening Post," "that was placed there before monument makers flourished in that part of Kentucky. There were but two graves in the little, unfenced spot, and they were in the center of a sassafras thicket. This old stone, over which the ivy had crept, well nigh blotting out the inscription, bore these words, which seemed to have been chiseled by a trembling-fingered novice :

" 'Jane Laler, ded Agus, 1849,'

" 'She wuz allus kine to evrybuddie.' "

"I thought, as I stood there by the weed crested mound, of what a world of meaning there was in those few simple words: 'She wuz allus kine to evrybuddie.' When I shall have composed my weary limbs for the last sleep, I would ask no greater boon than that such a compliment might truthfully be placed on the tomb above my silent form. It was so different from any of the chiseled platitudes one sees in large cemeteries. I wondered what loving heart could have inspired it, and stopped to ask about the woman whose gentle life could merit so tender a tribute. Nobody on either side of the mountains knew much of the Lawler family, but one old mountaineer said he had been told the woman was the wife of an old woodsman who lived and hunted on Mount Elkhorn in the first half of the present century. The palsied hand of the loving husband doubtless traced the last testimonial of reverence."

TROUBLED BY LITTLE THINGS.

The Quaker spirit, at its best, is the spirit of truth, righteousness, and all-embracing charity; but sometimes Quakers, like other people, make too much of little things, thereby becoming, what they loathe, formalists. The "Church Standard" tells two anecdotes illustrating this tendency.

In the days when Friends were accustomed to wear cocked hats turned up at the sides, one good Friend bought a hat of this description, without noticing that it was looped up with a button. He sat one day in meeting, when he noticed some looks of curious displeasure. Taking off his hat, he saw the reason for the looks, and then rose and said, "Friends, if religion consists in a button, I wouldn't give a button for it." His sermon was at least understood.

A somewhat similar story is told of an influential Friend who, on his way to meeting, was caught in a drenching rain, and borrowed a neighbor's coat.

He seated himself opposite to Jacob Lindley, who was so much disturbed by the glittering buttons that "his meeting did him no good." When the congregation rose to depart, he felt constrained to go up to the Friend who had so much troubled him and inquire why he had so grievously departed from the simplicity enjoined upon members of their society.

The good man looked down upon his garment, and quietly replied, "I borrowed the coat because my own was wet; and indeed, Jacob, I did not notice what buttons were on it." Jacob shook his hand warmly, and said, "Thou art a better Christian than I am, and I will learn of thee."

Jacob was right. He had been paying too much attention to the "mint, anise and cummin" of Quaker tradition.

GRATUITOUS INFORMATION.

Ordinarily it is not best to correct a stranger's grammar or pronunciation in a public place, or to volunteer information. Your motives may be beyond question, but zeal may sometimes outstrip good judgment.

The man in the rear seat felt that the crisis had come, and that, try as hard as he might, he could stand it no longer. So he leaned forward and in a low voice spoke to the plain-looking citizen who had been reading the war news to his seatmate for the last forty-three miles.

"Excuse me," said the rearward sufferer, "but I hope you won't mind if I tell you the way to pronounce that word. It isn't corpse, but corps—just as though it were spelled c-o-r-p-e, you know."

The reader looked up. "O, I guess not," he said. "It's corpse all right. There it is in black and white—c-o-r-p-s. I guess you don't know all you're talkin' about."

"The 'p' and 's' are silent," the other rejoined. "Really, it's nothing to me, but then—"

"Silent, are they? Well, then, by gracious, you want to be silent, too. Interruptin' a man with your dude notions of spellin' and pronouncin'. I know you and your kind. I'll bet you write your name with an initial in front of it, and that you encourage your wife to spell hers M-a-y-m-e or M-a-e, and that you say eyether and lawf. These are war times, when solid American words is the only ones that goes. Let's see, Charley, where was I?" returning to his paper. "O, yes. 'The Fifth Army Corps will be given the duty of—'"

And then the rearward man went into another car.—"Christian Advocate."

A STORY OF THE OLD BRIDGE.

A gentleman in a distant State sends the "Journal" the following story of a cat-astrophe on the Augusta bridge about a century ago.

It was related to the writer about half a century ago by the very man who was the hero himself of what seems to be a sort of tragedy. The first bridge (it may have been) had a small room over it where the tollman slept during those scanty hours of the night in which no weary traveler stormed the gate below.

This room was reached by stairs outside the bridge, over the river. There was a landing at the head of the stairs, and a window to the room beside the door which opened into it. The man who received the toll at this time was Augustine T. Jones, who died at Dirigo, China, Me., 1850.

LAURA W. WILSON, 1456 Coreoran St., Wash., D. C.

He kept at night the money on hand in a small trunk under his bed, sleeping with one eye open always with prudent care lest burglars or "bogies catch him unawares."

"That night, a child might understand,
The de'il had business on his hand."

That eventful night, and "that hour of night's black arch the key-stane," he noticed the curtain at the window to be drawn aside by an invisible being, for the sash was a little raised.

He sat erect like an egg on end, instantly glowering at the moving shade between him and certain death. He sprang with one bound of desperation to a corner of the room, and seizing a bridge bolt about four feet in length hurled it, as the one chance for life, through window, curtain, glass, sash and all. It went as true to its mark as a bolt of Jove himself, and took a living cat with it far below into the depths of the old Kennebec. A piercing, heart-rending "yow" split the air and startled every living thing which had ears to hear along the shores and far back into the town; but suddenly the cry of mortal agony was hushed forever. Doubtless the cruel bolt lies there yet fathoms below the surface of the madly rushing river.

Mr. Hawthorne tells us in Tanglewood Tales, in his account of "The Minotaur," that "Talus, the brazen giant" (which guarded the coast of Crete) "when he attempted to strike a blow at the vessel (of Prince Theseus) (with a club) overreaching himself, tumbled at full length into the sea, which splashed high over his gigantic shape, as when an iceberg turns a somerset. There he lies yet; and whoever desires to enrich himself by means of brass had better go thither with a diving bell and fish up Talus." Whoever needs bridge bolts, and the things that go with them, would do well to search far down on the very bottom of the Kennebec among the pebbles and the rocks for this long-lost rod!—"Kennebec Journal."

A WOMAN'S LIFE WORK.

Including Thirty Year's Service on the Underground Railroad and in the War.

BY LAURA HAVILAND.

This is a story of a wonderful life. The author was an active Anti-Slavery agitator and through her underground railroad work assisted hundreds of slaves to escape from bondage. During the war she spent about two years taking care of the sick and wounded. Through her efforts more than 2,000 Union Soldiers were liberated. She accomplished a great work in providing for the Freedmen of Kansas after the close of the war. She was the founder of the State Public School, at Coldwater, Mich., an institution which was the first of its kind in the world. The Industrial School for Girls at Adrian Mich., almost utterly owes its first existence, and especially its name to her efforts. Haviland Academy at Haviland, Kansas, was named in her honor, as also the town in which it is located. At the World's Fair she was introduced by President Palmer as "The Mother of Philanthropy," and well she deserves the title. Her experience as told in this book will be read with thrilling interest.

This book is printed on good paper and contains 625 pages. It is bound in cloth with red edges. The retail price of the book is $1.50. We will send it postpaid, for $1.00. Address,

HULDA: The Pentecostal Prophetess.

BY BYRON J. REES.

152 Pages. Bound in Cloth. Price, 50c., postpaid.

A short life story and seventeen of the sermons of Hulda A. Rees, together with her portrait and picture of her early church. This book needs no other introduction than for the reader to know that seventeen of her sermons, which Sister Rees preached with such accompaniments of power and blessing, are for the most part to compose it. The life-story is short yet comprehensive, the writer of it avoiding anything of a eulogistic nature and making the facts of the life serve as an appropriate introduction to the character back of the sermons.

Mrs. E. E. Williams, in a beautiful poem, which is also a part of the book, gives some refreshing glimpses into the character of Sister Rees.

Esther T. Pritchard also contributes a "Tribute," glowing with fervor and truth.

THEY WERE FARMER BOYS.

There are some people foolish enough to laugh at the homely virtues of farm life. They are fortunately few, and they are fortunately growing fewer; but it is well sometimes to look at the list of great men who came up from the farm—not all of them, for that would fill volumes, but some of the most notable ones that flash into the mind in a moment.

Nearly three-fourths of the men who have been chosen by the people for the great offices of the nation are men who were familiar with the wooded hills and cultivated fields. For example: Washington, Lincoln, Grant, Garfield, Hamlin, Greeley, Tilden, Hayes, Blaine, Harrison, and many others equally conspicuous. Henry Watterson spent his early life in rural Kentucky. Murat Halstead was born and lived in Ohio. Jay Gould spent his early years on his father's farm in New York. Whittier spent his youth in a village, dividing his time between farm employment and his studies. Whitelaw Reid was a boy on an Ohio farm. The reader can add names by the score of successful professional and business men of his own acquaintance whose foundation for success was laid on the farm.—"Christian Work."

"Humph!" growled the multi-millionaire, "so you want my girl's hand, do you? Have you lots of enterprise?" "Well," retorted the hardy swain, "I'm after the only daughter of just about the richest and meanest man in these parts."

NEW ILLUMINATED TEACHER'S BIBLE

We have selected the NEW ILLUMINATED TEACHER'S BIBLE for premium purposes this year, because it is the most complete and handsomest Teachers' Bible in the world.

OUR WONDERFUL PREMIUM OFFER.

The growing demand for a wisely and faithfully illustrated Teacher's Bible has been fully satisfied at last by the AMERICAN BIBLE HOUSE, of New York and Philadelphia. This well-known concern has just completed a new edition of the Holy Scriptures, which combines every valuable feature of the usual Teacher's Bible with a wealth of descriptive and historical illustrations so superb as to distinctly separate this Bible from all others and place it in a class all by itself. In this magnificent new edition, there are

which not only beautify the volume but must inevitably prove a source of endless instruction alike to Bible students and Bible teachers. This Bible is not merely embellished; it is truly and accurately illustrated. Other Bibles there are containing pictures; none other in which the individual texts are actually illuminated, as though by the touch of inspiration. Comparison with other Bibles is impossible, for the new Bible stands alone—there is no other in its class. Praise of this new book is no disparagement of the many other worthy editions heretofore published.

OPEN—Showing Style of Illustration.—Popular 12mo. size. 5 3/4 inches wide by 8 inches long when closed. Divinity Circuit Binding.—Can be rolled up and carried anywhere.

Wonderful New "Helps" by Famous Bible Teachers.

The "Helps" in the new Teachers' Bible were specially prepared under the direction of A. F. SCHAUFFLER, D.D., Editor-in-Chief, assisted by most famous theologians and Bible scholars of America and Europe—men who are known throughout Christendom as the most learned in their several departments of Biblical study. These "Helps" are unique in conception, absolutely original, and confined to the actual essentials of Bible teaching and research. Every necessary point and topic is fully covered, and in the smallest possible space. There is not a superfluous word or line, yet every actual need of Bible student or Sabbath School worker is amply met and by a master-mind.

The Illuminated Teacher's Bible is substantially bound in excellent leather by the most improved process, which guarantees the greatest degree of strength and long wearing qualities. The plates are absolutely new and made from a peculiarly clear, readable type. In addition to the superb illustrations and the wonderful "Helps," the new Bible presents the following indispensable features:

SELF-PRONOUNCING TEXT.

Every minister may draw fresh inspiration from its pages, and be enabled to light up a thought or a text to the better fulfillment of his sacred mission.

ETERNAL LIFE.

But souls that of his own good life partake,
He loves as his own self; dear as his eye
They are to Him: He'll never them forsake:
When they shall die, then God himself shall die:
They live, they live in blest eternity.

—HENRY MORE.

WROUGHT FOR THIS SELF-SAME THING.

WHAT does God mean and what can His purpose be, or is it some enemy who has done this? Thus we stand and question in the presence of the inscrutable mystery which settles down over our lives and shuts out from our sight all that is dearest and best to us. It is the old, old question, rising occasionally into Abraham's complaint, "Dost thou well, Lord?" But no one who really believes in God can long blindly question or sit complaining in cold sackcloth and ashes. There must be an answer, if God is God, and He cannot mock us or leave us with no voice of Hope.

The real answer is one which goes down into the very heart of the mystery of life, and grasps its purpose, for we cannot fathom death until we fathom life. Paul puts his finger on the nerve of it when he says that mortality shall be swallowed up of life and God hath wrought us for this self-same thing. With God, mortality is only an incident in the life-process. It is a brief stopping-place, a hostelry, on the way to a less unencumbered life. It is just our chance at the prize of learning love; it is a stage in the Divine training school; it is our opportunity for becoming distinct, individual selves and of being shaped into the image of God. Mortality is not an end in itself, it is not an absolute good. It is only a tent to be used while the house is being made; it is only a means to an end which is beyond; it is not the height, but the ladder by which the height is reached. At length life swallows up mortality, as the growing, winged creature within bursts the chrysalis and mounts up to its new sphere. It is only as we bend over the empty chrysalis that we cry out, "An enemy hath done this," or, "hast thou done well, Lord?" When we lift our eyes and vision returns, we see that there is no break in the infinite, loving purpose, and we hear Him say again, "It was wrought for this self-same thing; to be clothed upon that mortality might be swallowed up of life." Life is not dependent upon any one particular expression of itself; it is rich in means and in forms. What seem to us breaks and chasms are only invisible links in an unbroken chain, hidden arcs in an ever-renewed and vital process and movement which is fed continually by the one source and fountain of all life. When we look down and think of our side, it is all loss and mystery; when we look up and think of the Divine purpose, it is all light and victory. If God is Love, then so sure He hath wrought us to be clothed upon, and mortality is swallowed up of life.

HOW SHALL WE MULTIPLY?

HERE is a difficult question which every religious body has to meet, for to live is to multiply. Mohammedanism won its converts by the sword, and in a few instances Christianity has adopted this unholy method, though it conquered the Roman Empire during the first three centuries with no weapon but a cross, and its true conquests have always been bloodless and without carnal weapons. The church of the middle ages had a complete monopoly of spiritual things and it compelled people to come in, generally by fear. It was the only gate to heaven it taught. Out of membership meant cast out from God's favor and mercy. Hell yawned beneath the feet of every one who did not walk with the church and accept grace through this only channel. No human being could be born, or married, or buried, and escape God's wrath without receiving the consecrating hand of the church. It made itself indispensable and hence it multiplied. The Reformation broke this universal power and established the truth that grace comes directly from God to the individual through Christ. The function of the church at once changed. It was not as the single channel of grace that men now regarded it, but as a light in the world and as the salt of the earth. Its mission became that of a messenger and teacher to men, an instrument for Christ to use, a body for Him to animate and vitalize and shed His light through. It can no longer compel men to come in by the use of fear and terror as the medieval church did; it must draw them by the vitality of its message and convince them by the power of its expression of a living Christ. The moment it ceases to do that, death begins to creep over it and it ceases to have a function. But we come back to the question, How shall a religious body multiply?—i. e., how shall it extend its membership? There is but one way to multiply and that is by imparting life. It is impossible to multiply the fruit of an orchard by tying new branches on the old trees. The life of the trees must incorporate the new branches before they will bear fruit. No church can truly multiply unless it expresses Christ and in some sense embodies Him, so that He lives again in that church. As soon as this becomes a fact the multiplication begins of itself. The church will have a message for sin, for suffering, for poverty, for riches, for everything that concerns man. It will begin to transform the neighborhood. One neighbor will wonder at the change which has come over the family in the next house and will learn that there has been a new creation there and a new life has begun. The news will spread and faith will grow, and the back seats of the meeting-house will fill up without any concerts or popular lectures. Once prove to the neighborhood that those who compose the body of the church are Christlike in life and thought and power, and the multiplication will take care of itself, and there will soon be a demand for new hitching sheds for horses. It is only a question of vitality and power, and no sleight-of-hand is required. At present revivals seem necessary periodically and sensational methods are sought. But everybody admits that they are but a poor substitute for the "more perfect way." You do not need to touch a live wire twice to be convinced of its power—the evidence is unmistakable. Let us have a church whose members obey the laws of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus, and that community will ask no other evidence of the power of the gospel.

THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC.

It is seriously to be doubted if there is any intelligent person now living on the earth who believes that the sale of intoxicating liquors is a good thing for the human race. The saloon, as we know it in America, is an unmixed evil and an outrageous public fraud. There is hardly a known moral evil which does not breed in these vicious places, hardly a crime which does not rise at this poisoned fountain, hardly a domestic woe which does not have its roots in this rank soil, hardly a civic danger which is not nourished and fed fat in this trough. It has been called "the poor man's club" and it has been declared to be a necessity to society. This club feature of the saloon is one of its most dangerous aspects. It makes the saloon a rallying place for all classes of those who cannot find "good fellowship" elsewhere; it draws in the young fellows who here mix and mingle with the most debauched and vicious characters in the world, and it becomes the headquarters of the forces of political corruption. Bishop Potter is probably right in the opinion that one way to lessen its power is to open coffee-houses, coffee-wagons, etc.—i. e., places of inexpensive recreation and refreshment. "Something better," he says, "something wholesome, harmless, undefiled and undefiling must take its place, and so expel by substitution." This plan and method is good as far as it goes, but it will not break the power of the saloon. In fact, it seems that so far civilization has proved unable to grapple with this problem. Here is the evil as plain and as manifest as the sun in the sky, and everybody acknowledges that it is an evil. But all present methods of license, tax and regulation are as harmless to the traffic and its evils as the gnat that attacks the tiger. Local option has cleansed a few spots of the earth, but it scores no success in large cities, and the amount of education which seems necessary before prohibitory laws can be passed and absolutely enforced, at times, makes the most earnest and enthusiastic of us turn pale with discouragement.

There is one encouraging feature, however. Nearly all trades and business houses and corporations are refusing to employ drinking men, and this great economic principle will slowly weed out the saloon. It lives and prospers on the workingman's pocket and it cannot exist without him. If the economic principle is ever strictly applied it must in the end destroy the saloon. The New York "Sun" shows pretty conclusively that the political power of the saloon in that city is waning. Meantime every step should be taken to brand the business as unholy and vicious. Every saloon should be treated as a pest hole. In the courts, as "Harper's Weekly" says, the presumption should always be against the rumseller, and, as far as possible, he should be held responsible for the evils and the crimes which arise out of his trade. But at the same time we who believe in the annihilation of the traffic should relax none of our efforts toward that end.

FOR THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

THE REALITY OF SPIRITUAL LIFE.

BY BISHOP H. W. WARREN.

How poor, how rich, how abject, how august,
How complicate, how wonderful is man.
A worm. A God.

Man is a being of vast variety and complexity. He seems to be at first thought a simple unity. But a very little study shows him to be made up of many faculties. He is like a nation that stretches from ocean to ocean, and reaches through all zones. It may be a union of mountains and plains, climes, products of every possible value, races, interests, welfares and miseries. True it may be a union. But there may also be secessions, rebellions, fraternal strife, anarchy and ruin.

Among all the capacities of man it is clearly evident that he begins with physical aptitudes and appetites. Apparently he has no other. He soon develops a power of will that is amazing; afterwards an ability to love his mother. Intellectual ability slowly unfolds for half a century or more. Sometimes an ability for and appreciation of art or music appears. One man has a genius for business, another for diplomacy or war.

It often seems as if one or more of these faculties had been lying dead until the right master's voice had spoken above its tomb the omnific "Come forth." Then the ear heard entrancing music, the eye saw beauty, and the heart was raptured with love.

Now we wish to teach this, that man has spiritual faculties, to which spiritual forces can appeal, harp strings over which, when properly attuned, God can breathe with more rapture than has ever been waked by glories of earth and sky, or the entrancing beauty of a woman beloved. As really as we have bodily sense for substance, so really have we spirit perception for spirit.

It is evident that one or more faculties may predominate, that the rest may be dwarfed or extirpated. Appetites for pleasure may make one forget honor; and love of drink may destroy love of wife and children. Notwithstanding this deficiency, one still claims to be a man. By what is called color blindness, one in fifteen persons fails to distinguish all colors; one in fifty-five cannot distinguish red from green. Bartholomew, a sculptor, of excellent perception of form, once amazed a lady sitting for her portrait by spreading a green pigment on the cheeks, supposing he was making them blush like the morning. Still such men regard themselves as men. So one may be deficient in faculties for perceiving the things of the spirit and still regard himself a man. So he is, but only a natural man, which is, one defective in the highest and best part of him.

Teachers of things concerning the immaterial part of man have no difficulty in dividing faculties into intellect, affections and will, with various subordinate divisions. There is no more difficulty in conceiving of distinctly spiritual faculties for the perception of spiritual things. We have the eye for the light, ear for undulations of air, sense of smell for odors, etc. Every kind of knowledge appeals to appropriate faculties. We do not see sweetness, nor hear "the sweet influence of the Pleiades." We do not appreciate a beautiful picture with our feeling finger-tips, nor smell the notes of Handel's Hallelujah Chorus. No: draw the stops of the great organ; bid the winds of heaven break into celestial music for the soul through the ear. So each department appeals to its own appropriate faculties.

Now there is a spirit realm. Without it there would have been no material realm. Out of its forces have come all world-forces—gravitation, electricity, etc. All these material things are upheld by the word of power by the spiritual. It is enough to state the existence of God and a spirit realm to anyone who will be likely to read this article; what we are concerned about is this: Is there on the part of man, perception and enjoyment of this great reality.

This is most distinctly the teaching of the sacred scriptures. God came to Adam, Abraham, Moses, the prophets, the apostles, and said: "If any man love Me, My Father will love him, and We will come unto him and make Our abode with him." "He that hath My Commandments and keepeth them, I will love him and manifest Myself to him." When God undertakes the work of manifestation, surely He has resources enough to do it. When we are filled with all the fulness of God we shall perceive spiritual things.

The reality of a spiritual life has been as distinctly a matter of human experience in all ages. Paul said: "When it pleaseth God to reveal His Son in me."

The love of God has been, and continues to be, poured out like a river throughout our hearts by the Holy Ghost.

Who can thirst while such a river
Ever flows our thirst to assuage;
Grace, which like the Lord the giver,
Never fails from age to age.

Justin Martyr said: "That which comes from God makes the voluptuous man chaste, the avaricious man liberal, the man of cursing a man of prayer, the implacable enemy the forgiving friend, converts wrath into gentleness, debauchery into temperance, and vice in manifold form into manifold virtue." We have heard in our times testimonies by the hundred thousand as clear, definite and reliable as those of Paul and the early church. The Lord's people have not lost the word of their testimony which, with the blood of the Lamb, enables them to overcome the world. Hundreds of hymns make the air of the globe jubilant with this pæan :

My God is reconciled,
His pardoning voice I hear.
He owns me for His child,
I can no longer fear,
With confidence I now draw nigh,
And Father, Abba, Father, cry.

Here then is a great reality, none more real. The certainty of this reality is carried up by Christ into a certainty equal to that of the Divine knowledge. "I know My sheep and am known of Mine." It deals with the high things; none more high. It is the crown and glory of man's being. All lower orders of being share in man's physical senses. He is surpassed in every such faculty by some. One might almost say that all animals partake of man's intellectual, volitional, and affectional faculties. But only man touches the supreme height of knowing God.

He who has not this power is one of the defective classes. He does not rise to the perfect stature of manhood, but is dwarfed, crippled and malformed. He is only a natural man and "receiveth not the things of the spirit of God: for they are foolish unto him, neither can he know them, because they are spiritually, not intellectually, discerned." But he that is spiritual examines with such a view to right judgment all things. There is fit ground for the scriptures saying, "Know the Lord." Know the love of Christ that passeth all knowledge of the intellect.

Those who have this knowledge cannot only go forth to do the great works; greater than those of Christ; but when the earth is removed, and the mountains are carried into the midst of the sea, they do not fear, for they still have in God a refuge and strength, a very present help in trouble.

University Park, Col.

When I remember something which I had,
But which is gone, and I must do without,
I sometimes wonder how I can be glad,
Even in cowslip time, when hedges sprout;
It makes me sigh to think on it—but yet
My days will not be better days, should I forget.

—JEAN INGELow.

THE QUESTION OF URBAN MEETINGS.

BY H. ORVILLE JONES.

As a church and society we have not been exempt from the serious problems which are affecting our commonwealth at large. The Israelitish nation of the time of Moses, was not the Israelitish nation which clamored for a king, or which became the compact people of Solomon the Magnificent. So the Friends are not the religious society of the seventeenth century under the great leadership of a Fox, but recently led out from the wilderness of superstition and formality; they are, whether we are ready and willing to admit it or not, a fully organized and developed church of the twentieth century.

In the limits of this paper, let us confine ourselves to the cities and villages whose population ranges between three and twelve thousand. This, as one may readily see, would include many of our larger villages in the east, and many of the smaller cities of both east and west. Business and retirement are calling into these places a very large number of Friends, of whom, unless there is flexibility enough in our church organization, many will affiliate with other churches. Here the difficulty meets us. In many of the county seats of the middle west, and also in many villages of the east, one may find one or two families of Friends. If they are Methodists a class meeting would soon be organized; if Presbyterian, the minister would try to keep in touch with them, and so we might go through the whole catalogue; but the question is, "What shall we do with them?" Are the limits of our denomination important enough to bring before the people? Did we read, in his autobiography, of Fox establishing mission churches in these places for fear people would not be sufficiently grounded in "Friends' principles" to take them into the body proper?

We will suppose with these two or three families the case is different, and they see fit to organize a Friends' meeting. Now from the very nature of the case with all the grown male members fully occupied in business, and with the female members engrossed in home cares, the church will not be progressive, and the church which is not progressive is dead. They find it convenient then, for a minister to locate among them, and if they be conservative they will simply give a minister a business opportunity, or, if it be in the section of country where this is written, they will hold out some financial inducement for him to come. Perhaps for the children a Bible school is organized. The young people become interested in the Christian Endeavor, and a branch of that society is organized. The minister, if he be a descendant of George Fox, in spirit becomes eloquent enough to attract outsiders into the little meeting thus organized. Men are reached, souls are saved; many are "convinced," and not a few request membership.

The next step comes the erecting of a house. It may be profitable to seek some retired spot, but it is not desirable. Strict plainness may demand an ugly and unsightly edifice, but city people want display. Here is a question which must be settled by local conditions. The house should be located within easy reach of all,—sinner as well as saint,—should be nice enough to attract the higher classes, but not so rich as to repel the poor man. With all these requirements conscientiously and carefully fulfilled, there is nothing which would lead us to suppose we have not established a Friends' meeting in that place.

In regard to the conduct of the meeting, history shows us that the first Friends' meetings were conducted with the spirit and in the same manner as other meetings of the times, without the formality. Is it not possible for us in this present time to find the same happy combination. Our minister will be, whether simply located or a "hireling," a pastor by any definition of our dictionaries, or general acceptance of the term. Why not allow him to be called such? Our young people love singing as well as any young people. What hinders them making a joyful noise, even in our meetings? If they sing, why should they not sing the best songs?

There are many persons who are willing to accept the vital principles of Friends, if they are presented in the proper way. In order to reach the masses, it has become an evident fact that we must devote the energies of a Sabbath evening meeting to that end. The morning meeting serves best for the building up of the membership, but the evening meeting suits best for reaching the sinner. In order to mass the forces, the evening meeting must have all the force of the young people. The writer having been invited to speak to an evening assembly, was somewhat chagrined to see more than one-half of the young people troop out after the Christian Endeavor meeting. This was not a massing of forces. All working together might accomplish great good.

The conduct of the minister in charge is the next important item. Many persons having been called to such positions seem to find an abundance of leisure, and in order that they may become well acquainted with all, they seem to find time to pause upon the street corners—loafing we call it when men do so. Now a word: doctors, lawyers, dentists, etc., have abundance of leisure, but the doctor is at the bedside of his patient, the lawyer with his client, the dentist at his office, all men ready or doing their work. These seek not their customers among the loafers; why should a minister seek his members and hearers there?

It must be conceded, then, that we can present to the world the principles we hold dear. Time has proven that a judicious use of modern methods is very satisfactory to us in our church work, and the only question rests with us, whether we can use them. The people of the world must be reached, but whatever methods drive out the respectable classes and bring in only rowdies and ranters must certainly be cast aside. Upon the other hand, that which breeds exclusiveness, and caters only to the rich, with the entire neglect of the poor, must be once and forever cast aside, if we expect progress in our work. This brings us face to face with the question of winning the cities to Christ. When we popularize let us see to it that we also spiritualize, lest in grasping after the shadow we lose the real substance. In closing, let us again remember the apostle who "became all things to all men, that he might by all means save some."

ANNALS OF OUR BIBLE CLASS—IX.

As we advance in our course the general topic falls naturally into distinct divisions, ranging themselves under separate heads. The general title is the Priest-King, and then follow as sub-heads, His deity, His example, His ministry and methods, The laws of His kingdom, The citizen of the kingdom and That to which the kingdom is likened. We may have to add others, but so far as we can see at present these will include the life of Christ sufficiently to give us, in the end, a strong grasp upon the whole. The class are expected to write these headings on separate pages of their note books and to make entries of all the points as they occur in the lessons.

We were greatly interested, at our last meeting, in an analysis of the Sermon on the Mount, with a view to getting clearly before us

THE CITIZEN OF THE KINGDOM.

It worked out beautifully, but of course I can only give jottings of all that was brought to light on so broad a theme. When God puts His estimate upon a man and calls him "Blessed" one may well stop and consider. In this instance a beatitude is the first stroke of the brush, and it lingers to tint and illumine the entire portrait. It is the blessedness of character, of privilege and of destiny. It is realized in that paradox of feeling and circumstances that passes understanding, but is experimentally known by him who is persecuted but rejoicing, mourning but comforted. It belongs to one who is, by grace, both an heir of the earth and an heir of the kingdom, who has entered in by a gate too narrow to admit more than a penitent heart, and who is walking upon a way as narrow as the gate is straight; one who takes the attitude of a poverty of spirit that has nothing of his own and depends wholly and ever upon the resources of Another.

In his inward state this blessed man is pure and perfect in love. The law of righteousness has been fulfilled in him, and as a logical sequence it is fulfilled by him. Where legality says, "Do, and be saved," the Gospel has said, "Be saved, and do." Made a partaker of the divine nature and sin eliminated from the heart, the outward life is laden with the fruits of the Spirit. He is not only peaceable, but a peacemaker; his goodness is not negative, but positive and active. He is meek, but his meekness is like that of the King, unreisting to personal injuries, but resolute in grappling with error and wrong. In our study of the life of Christ, it has been one of the most interesting of our exercises to study the quality of His meekness and see how He was consistent with Himself in bidding men learn of Him who was meek and lowly in heart, and in the fiery indignation that scourged the traffickers from the temple and looked around in "anger" upon the hard-hearted Pharisees who "watched" Him to see if He would heal the withered hand. The dis-tion between the meekness that turns the other cheek, and yet is sternly brave for the cause that needs an advocate, and the passive indifference that never draws a sword in the battles of the Lord, cannot be too clearly drawn. George Matheson throws light upon the holy heat of the Master's spirit when he says: "There is an anger which is human, and there is an anger which is divine. Human anger resents the hurt; Divine anger resents the wrong. Human anger is wounded in its pride; Divine anger is wounded in its heart. . . . 'When thy fire shall baptize my soul I shall know what it is to be angry and sin not.'"

This typical citizen of the kingdom is as tender in his sympathies as he is robust in his strength. Benevolent and merciful, the suffering and the needy feel his presence like a benediction in the community where he lives. And then he is not a croaker or a fault-finder, and has none of the leaven of "sour godliness." If he uses the microscope to find a mote in anybody's eyes, it is to search his own. He is a marvelous judge of fruits, and quick of discernment as to the quality of the tree; but he leaves the judgment of motives to God. He is absolutely genuine, and hence as truthful as he is true. His "yea" and "nay" are more dependable than the testimony of an unsaved man who witnesses under oath, in view of the "pains and penalties of perjury." He is discreet in his handling of the pearls of truth, and without ostentation in his religious life. He does nothing for effect, but all things as unto the Lord; like the fir tree whose leader determines its symmetry, his life develops into a consistent whole through its singleness of aim. He goes to God with everything. He believes his Father is as ready to give good things to them that ask Him as earthly parents are to give good things to their children. What we call the Lord's prayer is his prayer, and the ability to utter it from the heart implies absolute loyalty to the King.

In his relations with men, the Golden Rule is the working principle of his life. He seeks first the kingdom of God and His righteousness,—first, not merely in point of time, but continually in point of prominence. Its interests are his interests, and are never lost sight of. He is ready to plant the standards of Christ's righteousness in the midst of the world's sharp practice and extortion, and to trust the consequences with God. There are many to say they cannot make a living for their families on New Testament lines, so long as they have to compete with the business shrewdness of ungodly men; but this man will conform to the righteousness of the kingdom or quit business. It takes faith to do it, but faith has standing ground in the promise of the Master, "All these things shall be added unto you." Very likely the "all things" may not often mean wealth, but they surely mean a competency to the all-round and consistent believer. Faith will be put to the test, but as George Muller used to say, "Trials are what faith feeds upon," and he who endures the tests will learn the blessed life of daily dealing with God, of living in fellowship with Him, and having the aid of the "wonderful Counsellor," in all the pursuits and departments of life. In habitual dependence upon the divine Caretaker, he takes no anxious thought for the future. God is his Father and he trusts Him for all that is involved in that relation; walking with Him he exhibits the reality of a living God in the face of an orphaned world.

Much interest was shown by the class in the questions suggested by this part of the lesson and it led to discussion and personal testimony. Florence thought it verged upon presumption to take temporal matters to the Lord, and to lift a prayer to be shown where to find something one has lost, or to ask for guidance as to where we shall spend the summer. Our pastor's wife said she used to feel the same way about it, but that now she knows that God hears and answers in all things. Our teacher reminded us that the sharp line drawn between the secular and the religious has been introduced by man and not God; that it does not appear in God's ancient covenant with Israel, nor is it to be found in the New Covenant of His grace. To quote again from our gifted Scotch author: "Thy triumph is the conquest of my lesser moments, the moments which I call secular. I consecrate to Thee the walls of my temple, but I have never consecrated to Thee the walls of my dwelling. . . . The exchange is unconsecrated, the counting-house is unconsecrated, the workshop is unconsecrated. The scenes of my pleasure are outside of Thee; the trifles of my life are apart from Thee; I have not yet suffered Thee to fill all things."

And now this ideal character stands before us individualized, and we try to imagine its influence upon the church and the world. It is in miniature a copy of the holy life of the Son of Man, a transcript of the example we are called to follow. It is luminous as the light and yet unconscious of its brightness. Its light was not self-evolved, but caught by contact with Him who is the "Light of the world." This man is not trying to make his life shine, but, as one of Christ's candles, he lets the Lord put him where He will. As Frances Havergal believed, so does he, that the Lord will make the most of that which is unreservedly committed to Him. But he is not only like light—he is like salt, that exerts a purifying and saving efficacy upon the masses about it. Men like him are, humanly speaking, the salvation of the neighborhoods in which they live; but alas, that these are so few!

Frances Willard said she had sought to react upon the world about her to the utmost ounce of her power, and she gave to the Christian world such a moral impulse that when she died all Christendom felt the poorer.

The end crowns all, and blessed is the man who meets in triumph the last hour of awful testing. To him who merely hears the sayings of his Lord and doeth them not, the end is fearful; but he who has come to Christ and heard His sayings and done them, finds a salvation that holds in life and in death, and at the judgment. His has been no antinomian assent to the truth with a practical disobedience in the life.

He is rock-founded. The storms may beat, the winds may blow and the surges rise, but he cannot be shaken. Like Bunyan's pilgrim, when he crossed the river—he "feels the bottom and it is good."

FOR THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

"CAREFUL FOR NOTHING."

"Be careful for nothing," O message most sweet,
That brings my tired soul to my dear Master's feet;
There is nothing so great, there is nothing so small,
But I bring to my Master, who knoweth it all.

"But in everything,"—listen,—"by thanks and by prayer,"—
Don't omit the "thanksgiving," for that must be there;
For blessings unnumbered and joys unexpressed,
Come straight to the Master, and make thy "request,"

And the sweet peace of God all thy bosom shall fill,
"Passing all understanding;"—and rest in His will Keep thy "mind and thy heart," through Christ Jesus our Lord;
'Tis a wonderful message, but found in His word.

Why, then, Should His children be sore burdened down,
Since Jesus our Saviour, our joy and our Crown,
Who bore all our burden of sin on the tree,
Says He'll bear lesser burdens for thee and for me?

Let us come to Him, then, and ourselves let us lay
On His dear heart of love; let us do it to-day—
This hour, this moment—and know the sweet rest
Of the loving disciple who leans on His breast.

And our every burden and every care
Let us take to our Master, and leave them all there;
He invites us to do it,—why should we not come
And find in His heart of love "Home, sweet, sweet home."

MY LEATHER GRIP.

BY M. Z. KIRK.

As the Royal Blue train rolled into Philadelphia a short time ago, I looked at my old leather grip, which occupied the other end of the seat, and it suddenly occurred to me that it had probably been in more Quaker homes in the last five years than any other grip in America. Therefore I thought it would perhaps be of interest to our readers to know something of its wanderings, especially during the past year.

In 1886 the writer left his old country home at Bangor, Iowa, where he was born and raised, and spent two years in the Le Grand Academy, one in Penn College, and one in teaching a country school, and Hartland Academy. In the spring of 1890 this grip became a traveling companion, and we started out in the stereoscopic view business in Northwestern Iowa. The following summer it occupied a corner in one of the tents at the Lake Geneva Y. M. C. A. Summer School. In 1892 it did good service in South-eastern Missouri, while the writer was engaged in state geological work, and in 1893 it performed a similar duty on the Kansas State Geological Survey. After a trip to Canada, and a year in Haverford College, helping take care of the Post-Graduate Scholarship given to Penn College, and a summer in the mining region of Pennsylvania, it returned to Kansas. Early in 1895 it started on its first long trip among Friends. The writer was superintendent of Christian Endeavor work in Kansas Yearly Meeting, and visited almost every meeting within its limits. That fall and the following spring it was frequently filled with various geological specimens in central Kansas and northern Oklahoma. From Fifth month, 1896, to Twelfth month, 1897, it carefully guarded the notes, subscription books, and educational literature for Penn College, while making numerous tours through Iowa and Kansas with its owner, who was Financial Agent of Penn College. During the summer of 1897 it was filled with Christian Endeavor literature from the National San Francisco Convention; carried our guide books on an extensive trip through Oregon, California, etc.

In First month, 1898, it began a new service for its owner. On leaving Philadelphia it was well filled with AMERICAN FRIENDS, subscription blanks, receipt books, etc. During the year of 1898 it has been in hundreds of homes in Wilmington, Ohio, Indiana, Western, Iowa, Kansas, California and Oregon Yearly Meetings. It has kept untiring watch over spare beds in winter, spring, summer and fall. During the year it has traveled more than 20,000 miles, and has visited scores of meetings, monthly meetings and quarterly meetings, and eight yearly meetings. It has ridden in palace cars, day coaches, carriages, spring wagons, lumber wagons, road carts, on bicycles, and even the festive broncho.

It has faithfully guarded all books, papers, letters, as well as the names of one thousand new subscribers. After this outline of the year's trip, I wish to thank all of the kind Friends from the Alleghany Mountains to the Pacific Ocean who have so kindly opened their meetings and their homes to my old leather grip and myself, and who have made it possible for us to visit so many meetings, to travel so many thousand miles, and to place the denominational paper in so many new homes. THE AMERICAN FRIEND is indeed very grateful for the kind words and the assistance of the officers of these various meetings, as well as the various members. To me it has been the greatest tour of my life, and I look back upon the work with great satisfaction, when I see that one year ago we were sending out 5,300 papers and to-day we are sending out 7,000. This means that to-day the best thought of the best Friends from Maine to California is reaching seventeen hundred more homes each week than it was a year ago. Of all the thousands of people whom I have spoken to publicly, and of all those who have spoken publicly regarding the paper, it is indeed very gratifying to note that only five individuals have spoken discouragingly of THE AMERICAN FRIEND and its work, while scores and even hundreds have said the most complimentary things in regard to THE AMERICAN FRIEND, and have encouraged other Friends in every way possible to subscribe for it. The following are a few expressions which the writer has heard dozens of times:

"We take THE AMERICAN FRIEND, and enjoy it very much."

"I don't see how any family of Friends could get along without it."

"We take a great many papers at our house, but I would rather give up all the others than THE AMERICAN FRIEND."

"We take several religious papers at our house, but I consider THE AMERICAN FRIEND one of the very best in America."

"We subscribed for the Friends' paper when we were first married, and it has been in our home ever since."

"If you want to know what the church is doing, you can't get along without your church paper."

"We used to take the 'Friend,' then the 'Friends' Review,' and when Daniel Hill started the 'Christian Worker' we took that, and now we have THE AMERICAN FRIEND, and I consider it the best paper the Friends ever had."

While in Kansas Yearly Meeting Josiah Dillon urged the Friends to take THE AMERICAN FRIEND because it contained all of the good qualities of both the "Christian Worker" and the "Friends' Review" without the objectionable ones. In fact, he says it is all pure cream without any skimmed milk.

In view of the above facts, it is certainly a time for great rejoicing, not only on the part of the managers, but also on the part of everyone who is interested in disseminating Friends' doctrines and literature.

For the sake of the man who is always looking for something to complain about, and is always wanting something cheaper, no difference how cheap he is already getting it, I want to repeat what I have said in almost every meeting in the West, "If any Friend is complaining because his church paper costs too much money, it is a pity he wasn't born a Methodist, a Congregationalist, a Baptist, or a Presbyterian; then he could have had his church paper for $2.00 or $2.50 a year; but as we are so unfortunate (?) as to be Quakers, we have to pay $1.50 a year—or fifty cents or a dollar less than the best papers of other denominations." To the man who still looks wise, and finds something else to complain about, I simply ask him to get a collection of all the denominational papers he can and compare them, and then if he isn't satisfied with the price and quality of his own, to please report to me and I will give him another page of facts.

As we are one of the smallest denominations in America, I never hope to see the day when the Friends will be able to make their paper more than fifty cents or a dollar cheaper than those of the large denominations with hundreds of thousands of members. I never expect the day to come when the subscription price of THE AMERICAN FRIEND will be less than $1.50, but I do expect to see the paper continue to grow in value from year to year as our subscription increases. When some of our general religious papers with 200,000 subscribers get a dollar a year for their paper, what price should we expect for the paper of a small denomination like the Friends?

Again I want most heartily to thank all of our subscribers, and all who have sent kindly words of encouragement during the past year, and all who have aided in one way and another in helping to carry the Gospel in this way to so many new homes.

The International Lesson.

FIRST QUARTER.

Lesson VIII.

Second month 19, 1899

CHRIST FEEDING THE FIVE THOUSAND.

John 6: 1-14.

GOLDEN TEXT.—I am the bread of life. John 6: 35.

DAILY READINGS.

Second-day, Second month 13.—John 6: 1-14. Feeding the five thousand.
Third-day, Second month 14.—Mark 8: 1-9. The four thousand fed.
Fourth-day, Second month 15.—Mark 8: 14-21. The miracle remembered.
Fifth-day, Second month 16.—Deut. 8: 1-6. Not by bread only.
Sixth-day, Second month 17.—Matt. 6: 25-33. The first things.
Seventh-day, Second month 18.—John 6: 22-34. The true bread.
First-day, Second month 19.—John 6: 36-51.—The bread of life.

It is very evident that John did not intend that his book should be a full account of our Lord's ministry or that the incidents should be in close chronological order. Exactly what principle guided him in his selection we do not know, though he tells his main object (John 20: 31).

The miracle described in the lesson is remarkable in that it is the only one related by all four of the evangelists. There are striking differences, apparently, and yet there can be no doubt that all refer to the same incident. John's purpose in selecting this miracle is shown by the discourse which follows. Indeed, John's choice of miracles seems to be determined not simply by a desire to illustrate Christ's power, but to illustrate the various relations which Christ bears to the believer. There are only eight miracles recorded in the fourth gospel.

The time of the present lesson would seem to be in the third and last year of our Lord's ministry.

It will be helpful to read the accounts in the other gospels: Matt. 14: 13-21; Mark 6: 31-44; Luke 9: 10-17.

There has been some difference of opinion as to the exact place where the miracle took place, but the general consensus now inclines to a plain near Bethsaida Julias, on the east side of the Jordan and just north-east of the Sea of Galilee.

1. "After these things." How long after is not stated; the words indicate an indefinite period. "Tiberias." This is the name given to the Sea of Galilee by classical writers, and the use of this name indicates that John was writing for non-Jewish readers. Tiberias was a town built by Herod Antipas and named in honor of the Emperor Tiberius.

2. It has been pointed out that the verbs in this verse are imperfects—"were following," "were beholding," "was doing." He kept performing miracles for the cure of the diseased. Probably those recorded in Matt. chaps 8-13.

3. "A mountain." Better, "the mountain." Possibly "the hill country." So also in verse 15. "Sat." To teach His disciples, also to rest.

4. This verse fixes the season—a time of year (late March or early April) which is one of the pleasantest in that climate, and when it would not be hurtful or disagreeable to be out all night.

5. "Saw a great company." Mark says, "He had compassion on them." He was not annoyed at their following Him. The other gospels tell the time of day—"when the day was far spent" (Mark). "Great company." Matthew and Mark state the number as 5,000. When the density of population is considered, this number does not seem so extraordinary. Josephus says that there were six cities of considerable size within thirteen miles along the northern coasts of the Sea of Galilee. "Saith unto Philip." Why should he have been addressed? Some say he was the most familiar with the locality (John 1: 44); others, because he was nearest; others, because his character was one which particularly needed to be shown its own helplessness (John 14: 8). Perhaps all of these had something to do with it. Someone has said Philip "was a shrewd business man, quick to calculate ways and means, and rather apt to scorn the expectations of faith."

6. "To prove." To test him.

7. "Philip said," etc. This answer shows his character. He was not yet able to look beyond the tangible. He did not yet know enough of Christ to say, "All power is given unto Thee." "Two hundred penny worth." About equivalent to $35 at the present day. The sum was evidently beyond the limits of their purse.

8, 9. "Lad." Literally, "a little lad." "Barley loaves." The commonest food. The loaves were round, flat biscuit, more like our large crackers in shape. "Small fishes." "Fishes" is better (Revised Version). Andrew's words also express the hopelessness of doing anything (see the account in the other gospels). John only gives part of the conversation. Jesus had said to them (Matt. 14: 16), "Give ye them to eat." Perhaps He let them think over it awhile.

10. "Make the men sit down." Literally, "recline." "He knew what He would do." He was now to teach His disciples a great lesson. There was no hesitation in His words. "He spoke the word and it was done." Mark gives the most graphic account. He commanded that they should sit down upon the green grass; and they sat down in ranks, by hundreds and by fifties. This arrangement preserved order, and enabled all to see the Master as He gave thanks and distributed.

11. "Jesus therefore took the loaves; and having given thanks, he distributed to them that were set down." Revised Version. "Given thanks." He here took the place of the head of the household and doubtless, used the regular form of thanksgiving. Compare Luke 22: 17-19; 24: 30; Acts 27: 35. Note the omission in Revised Version of the words, "to the disciples, and the disciples." They do not occur in the best manuscripts, though there is no doubt that the bread and fishes were distributed by the disciples—agents are often omitted, as we say, "Dewey took Manila." "As much as they would." There was no limit in supplying the need. His compassion was actively exercised towards the present need.

12. "When they were filled." He stopped when the want was supplied. "That nothing be lost."

Abundance should not beget wastefulness. The fragments may have been preserved for the disciples' use. The word translated "basket" probably means, rather, "wallet." It was the wallet in which every good Jew carried food with him, when on a journey, to avoid eating Gentile food. Jesus provided the food, but He left it to the disciples to gather the fragments. God means that man should be a co-worker with Him. He provides food, but man must eat in order to reap the benefit.

12. "Miracle." "Sign," Revised Version. "The prophet," Revised Version. Possibly referring to Deut. 18: 18.

PRACTICAL THOUGHTS.

1. "'Twas seedtime when He blessed the bread,
'Twas harvest when He brake."
2. Even a child may be used in furthering a great work.
3. "Men said, 'Send the multitudes away'; Jesus said, 'They need not depart.'"—Matt. 14: 15, 16.
4. "Give ye them to eat."—Mark 6: 37.

FOR THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

THE WORK IN ALASKA.

Having had a very enjoyable sojourn of five months, with Friends throughout the middle states and Kansas, we are again at our post on Douglas Island. We arrived here on the 16th of last Eleventh month, and have been quite busy preparing for the winter. We found the meetings and Sabbath school in a very good condition, under the management of Jennie Lawrence, Edward and Orra Churchill and other helpers. Our Sabbath school has been well attended since our return. During favorable weather there being as many as 124 in attendance. This crowds our little school house (which measures 24 by 28 outside) to its utmost capacity. In this house we have six classes, varying from seven to forty in a class, six teachers and an interpreter. We have both whites and natives, and one class of whites are taught in the mission house.

But the natives are like whites, they do not appreciate being crowded. So long as there is room they will continue to come, but as soon as they are crowded, they stay away. For this reason our attendance is not at times as large as it would be if there was sufficient room. It reminds us at times of a box of sardines, for on many occasions we must of necessity fit the people to the space. We have begun the erection of a new meeting house much nearer the native village, and the centre of the town of Douglas. The lot was donated by a miner, and we have collected funds and bought lumber to the amount of about $400.00. We cannot now proceed with the erection of the building before spring, as the winters are too severe in this country to work much at buildings. Since we left Douglas last Sixth month, the town has improved very rapidly, and still continues to improve. The Congregationalists have completed a new church for the miners, and we hope to complete a meeting house which will be sufficient for both the whites and natives who may desire to come. The gold mines are continually increasing their plant until about 1,000 men are needed to do the required work. There are now five large quartz mills on the island and another in prospect. This means an increase of population for Douglas. There have been many guesses as to the number of natives the Mission could reach, so we concluded to take a census of the people. The result was that we counted 600 Indians on the beach, and it was estimated by those who know something of the habits of the people that there were very few natives here at that time, some stating that fully 300 were away. All of these have had an opportunity to hear the Gospel. But this does not include the number which are reached by this work. For many of the white people are in attendance at all our meetings, and some who have been converted here have been taken into membership with us. And this being the gateway to the native work of Southeastern Alaska, the natives are continually coming and going from various places of this part of the Territory, as they come to seek work in the gold mines. By this means we are enabled to reach many souls, who stay but a short time at this place. Thus we are afforded the grand opportunity through them, of having the Gospel spread among their people. It seems that the natives who have not come in contact with the civilization of our time, are much more ready to receive the Gospel; and many who have come here, have heard the good news and have gone home to tell their people. We have information showing that many of them continue to tell the story of Jesus and his love to their people. For this we do praise God, who is no respecter of persons. "But in every nation, he that feareth Him and worketh righteousness is accepted with Him."—Acts 10: 34, 35. Our meetings have increased greatly and we are very anxious to obtain a suitable place for worship. There is now available for building the meeting house $650.00, if we can secure $250.00 more. Many of the whites have expressed a desire to help when we begin building again, and many of the natives are more than willing to help, but their limited circumstances prevent their doing much. If any Friends feel disposed to aid us and contribute of their substance for this object, they can send to my address or to J. G. Kirby, treasurer, Lawrence, Kansas, stating it is for the building fund. Any amount will be greatly appreciated and duly acknowledged.

May the Lord bless His servants everywhere.

CHARLES N. REPLOGLE.

What is yesterday?

Yesterday is to-day grown tired and still

With feet at rest and heart made mute and chill;

Tearless, unsmiling, unremembering,

And unregretting; . . . Gone far away

As the first night and morn. . . A waif and stray

Lost in eternity, is yesterday.

Our scripture lesson marks a new departure in the Book of Acts. Where the Holy Spirit has right of way there are always new departures. It is only the dead church that observes unchanging uniformity.

Acts 1: 8 is the key to the whole book. There are two thoughts in the verse: the endowment of power and the witnessing church. They always go together. There was never a church that bore witness to Jesus Christ until the Holy Spirit fell upon it. A church is a body of men speaking for God. The Hebrews were God's chosen people because they were people He could speak to, and who would speak for Him. The Greeks loved beauty, art, eloquence, poetry, perfection of human grace; but they were not people who set God supremely above all else. The same Hebrew and Greek spirits are in our churches to-day. There are a great many Greek churches in all our denominations who show the same characteristics alluded to above. Thank God, there are also some churches of Hebrew spirit to whom God can give the revelation of His great purpose to save the world by the preaching of the gospel, and they will not prove disloyal to it. Are you a member of that kind of a church, or are you a Greek, simply loving art, eloquence, human gracefulness, and the poetry of a comfortable religion?

But you will say that this church at Antioch was not Hebrew, but rather Greek or Roman in blood. True enough, but it is a case where the spirit of the true Hebrew passed over into a Gentile church, and while the Jerusalem church was trimming its sails to catch the favor of the Pharisees, the church at Antioch spread its canvas to heaven's inspiration and sailed out of the narrow confines of Judaism to conquer a world.

This church at Antioch got its message while it was praying. Individual and church enlargements come to those who pray. It is a life-power that bursts the single cells, to use a scientific phrase, and forms other cells and centres of life forces. There was, doubtless, a great temptation to this new church in the great and wicked city to plead excuses. They were so young and so weak, and there was so much to do all around them, that they sorely needed Paul and Barnabas. Then Paul was such a strong preacher, and Barnabas such a comforter with his exhortations, that, doubtless, they were unwilling to surrender them to the heathen beyond. But the church learned to mind God. Their self-preservation lay in their doing so, though they did not know that. But it is true to-day of churches as of individuals that those who save their own lives lose them, while those who lose them for the gospel's sake save them.

There is a double sending in this account of the first official missionaries. The Holy Spirit sent them out, and the church sent them out. A church mighty in prayer ought to be behind all our missionaries. We ought also to fast enough to deny ourselves of luxuries, and even of many comforts, in order to send out missionaries. It is an insult to Almighty God for a man to spend five dollars on a swell banquet and then only fifty cents on missions; or to pay ten dollars a year for missions and a hundred dollars a year for the theatre or the club. The rotten self-deception of much of our modern Christianity is a stench in the nostrils of God. We play at His work but chase our own pleasures and follies with feverish lust.

How shall we have a missionary church? Let somebody get on fire for God. That is the absolutely all-important first step. The next follows as a sequence. You must then begin to ask, What is God's will? The great cause of missions is the supreme enterprise of the church, her only calling. All else exists or has a right to exist only for that. This mission plan must be as large in our hearts as it is in the purpose of God. The practical method to secure this result in the church is, get yourself filled up with missionary fuel. Facts about missions are the fuel for the fire to shine by. One man who gets full of these facts can enthuse any church where there are true Christians, provided he has the fire as well as the fuel.

MISSIONARY READING COURSE.

"A Missionary Leaflet" may be obtained by sending the address to Gilbert Bowles, Oskaloosa, Iowa. The leaflet gives plans for organizing and conducting mission study classes and some general suggestions for missionary work. The new book for the reading course—"Social Evils of the Non-Christian World"—is proving very interesting and satisfactory. Send 30 cents to the Student Volunteer Movement, Bancroft Building, 3 W. 29th Street, New York city, and get this helpful book.

The Missionary Superintendent wishes to know of the progress of the different classes.

Bear the brunt, in a minute pay glad life's arrears
Of pain, darkness, and cold.
For sudden the worst turns the best to the brave,
The black minute's at end,
And the elements rage, the fiend-voices that rave,
Shall dwindle, shall blend,
Shall change, shall become first a peace out of pain,
Then a light, then thy breast,
O thou soul of my soul! I shall clasp thee again
And with—God—be the rest.

FOREIGN MISSION WORK OF ENGLISH FRIENDS.

MADAGASCAR.

The remarkable awakening and consequent pressure of work that followed the return of the London missionaries to Madagascar, in 1862, after the twenty-five years of persecution, led them, through William Ellis, to appeal to Friends for help, in the belief, since pleasantly conjoined, that with strong common hold on the fundamental doctrines of Christianity minor denominational differences would prove little hindrance in their combined attack on heathenism. The call was heard, and in 1867 Joseph S. Sewell, who is a nephew of William Ellis by marriage, accompanied by J. S. Sewell and Louis and Sarah T. Street, from Indiana, went to Madagascar. Trained through former Ackworth experience, as soon as possible he took up the great work of education. At that time the schools were of a very elementary character. A little later he formed a class of more advanced boys, some of whom he hoped to train as teachers. In 1870 he was able to build the large schoolroom and classrooms, since so well known as the Ambohitovo Boys' School. But even then, when the school was reopened, the number of men and boys who applied for admission was so great that it was impossible to find room for nearly all. It was evident that a high-class school, such as this was designed to be, was a very real and deeply felt need. The school has been singularly happy in its teachers. For ten years the late William Johnson, who went out with Henry E. and Rachel M. Clark, in 1871, was its efficient head. Then it passed to the able leadership of Herbert F. Standing, under whom it now numbers 500 scholars. During the last two or three years the work of the six upper classes has been entirely reorganized on the French system, and the greater part of the teaching of the higher classes is now given in French. "At the end of last term," we read in the recent report, "exactly one hundred boys received copies of the French New Testament as prizes for unbroken attendance throughout the term," and one of them carried off the prize offered by the Alliance Française for the best French scholar in the Protestant schools of the capital.

Meanwhile the Friends' Faravohitra Girls' School, started by Sarah Street and Helen Gilpin, in 1869, has done equally important service. It was for a while the only girls' school in the country, and at one time the ex-Queen, Ranavalona III, was among its pupils. Since 1881 it has been mainly under the care of Clara Herbert, with help from Henry E. Clark's two eldest daughters, Edith M. and Ethel M. Clark, who have both for some years been missionaries of the Friends' Foreign Missionary Association. A French Friend, Emilie Woelflin, a former helper of Justine Dalencourt in Friends' work in France, is also giving valuable help in connection with this school. For many years the attendance has been above 300.

A district to the southwest of the capital, about seventy miles in length by thirty-five in its greatest breadth, was early put under the care of Friends. Scattered over this district there are over 140 schools, with native teachers, mostly trained at Ambohitato, and still under Friends' oversight. These are periodically visited by different missionaries, who examine the schools, and hold what may be spoken of as Normal School Extension Classes for a week or more at a time with the teachers and pastors within a given radius. On the French occupation care was promptly and successfully taken by Herbert F. Standing to give these country teachers the requisite knowledge of French; and as it was impossible to raise their attainments very speedily to a further much-desired standard, competent teachers have lately been stationed in central places to hold frequent classes with the masters and pupils of the neighboring schools. The French government is wisely desirous of advancing industrial education both in town and country, so that agricultural and other industrial teaching is now beginning to form a part of Friends' work. A course of lectures in French on Pedagogie in the new Government Normal School has lately added considerably to H. F. Standing's work.

Friends' evangelistic work has all along kept pace with their educational. "When I came to Madagascar," said J. S. Sewell, in his parting address at Antananarivo, in 1876, "the great majority of the inhabitants of Imerina (the central province, which was the first to be evangelized) still trusted in their idols; but about two years afterwards they were all burnt, and now they are hardly even remembered. When I came, polygamy and divorce were thought to be quite right, but now they are regarded as something very disgraceful. When I came a great many markets were held every Sunday, but now in a great many of the towns in Imerina, and especially in Antananarivo, the Sabbath is as well observed as it is in England." Among the various churches of the capital of which the London missionaries had care when Friends arrived in Madagascar, that at Ambohitato was one more than with their small staff they could look after as they wished. This then somewhat unsatisfactory church was commended to J. S. Sewell's care. He undertook no pastorate, but he attended their services and frequently preached, held Bible classes, gave attention to the schools, and helped them in many other ways. The organization of Malagasy churches is so elastic that none who possess the gift of preaching and exhortation need feel themselves shut out from opportunities of exercising it. The churches of the capital are known as the "mother churches" of the country. From them the work radiated into the country round, and by degrees the whole province of Imerina was mapped out into districts, each assigned to its special church. That belonging to Ambohitato was the size of a large English county, and Friends, as soon as their number allowed, divided it into smaller portions, each under the care of its own missionary. At first he simply itinerated periodically among the churches of his district, but by degrees country stations were opened,—in Arivo-nimamo by John and Emily Sims, and in Mandridrano by William and Hannah Wilson, in 1888, and in Ambohimadana by Mary E. Hinchliffe in 1892. For some years Henrietta Deane also resided at Arivonimamo to carry on work among women and girls. These were gathered in large classes in different villages on different days, and involved much hard work for the missionary, with abounding difficulties and encouragements also. Furloughs necessitated changes in the residence of the missionaries, and in this way it happened that William and Lucy S. Johnson were living at Arivonimamo at the time of the second Franco-Malagasy war. William Johnson had been nearly stopped on his return from furlough at the time of the first war in 1884, and it was only on the understanding that he was a Friend, and therefore could not encourage the Malagasy to fight, that the French Admiral allowed him to proceed. When the second war broke out the question arose whether it might not be safer for the missionaries to leave the country. Without an exception Friends decided to remain. They felt that they could not desert their Malagasy friends when they were in trouble; that God was bidding them to stay, and that it was worse than death to run away from duty. Friends, therefore, remained quietly at their stations during the war, promoting those things that make for peace, and helping all whom they could help, of whatever nation. It was not till after the taking of Antananarivo by the French on Ninth month 30th, 1895, in that period of anarchy and rebellion between the overthrow of the old government and the establishment of the new, that the rebels attacked Arivonimamo, and William and Lucy S. Johnson and their little daughter were murdered there on Eleventh month 22d, 1895, and the mission premises sacked and burnt. Herbert F. and Lucy A. Standing, with their children, and Mary E. Hinchliffe, had also to fly from their stations, and it was some time before either of them could be re-occupied. Now, however, John and Emily Luiss and Ethel M. Clark are carrying on the work in Mandridrano, and Henrietta Deane has taken M. E. Hinchliffe's place at Ambohimadana while she is home on furlough.

For many years medical work formed a most important part of the mission. In 1880 the Friends' Foreign Missionary Association and Friends' Missionary Society conjointly reopened the Analakely Hospital, formerly under the care of a doctor of the Edinburgh Missionary Society. Dr. J. Tregelles Fox began dispensary work within a few weeks of his arrival. Almost as soon he commenced training some Malagasy youths as helpers. This developed rapidly, and in co-operation with other societies, afterwards became the Medical Missionary Academy of Antananarivo, from which many capable Malagasy doctors have gone out to all parts of the great island. The opening of the in-patient department was at first delayed for want of a nurse, but on Miss Graham's taking up the work, in 1881, not only were in-patients carefully nursed, but native women were trained as nurses. In course of time a second doctor became needed, and a more fully qualified nurse. Under Doctors Fenn and Moss, the sons of Spanish and Madagascar missionaries, and Miss Byam, the medical work made rapid progress. Analakely being unhealthy from its proximity to the cattle market, a fine new hospital was built just outside the town, at Isoavinandriana, by William Johnson, which was probably the best equipped of any in the foreign field. Dispensaries were opened in different parts of the capital and its suburbs, and daughter hospitals in Mandridrano, Finarantsoa, Ambatondrazaka, etc. Medical work naturally formed part of the work of every station, and cottage hospitals, begun in much simplicity, became centres of unexpected usefulness. The preparation of medical literature also formed a very important part of the doctors' work. On the taking of Antananarivo by the French, the hospital at Isoavinandriana was immediately opened to the French sick and wounded. It has since been requisitioned by the French government, and also the Farovohitra Girls' School, compensation, of course, being given. The latter found a new location on the premises of a Girls' Boarding School started by Helen Gilpin in 1892, and necessarily discontinued when she returned invalided, and the war broke out three years after.

No account of Friends' work in Madagascar, however short, would be complete without some reference to the printing press. As long ago as 1870 a printing press had been sent them by Friends in America. From 1872 a missionary printer has been steadily at work. Medical books and school books, Bible revision and Bible elucidation, magazines and other literature have added to labors already abundant, and kept our missionaries hard at work. Much more might also be written on Sunday School and temperance work, and on women's classes of all sorts, for the work of lady missionaries has been in no way behind that of the men.

Friends' Madagascar Mission has had its special difficulties, its special sorrows; but those who know it best will probably all agree with Herbert Standing where he says in his report: "What about the future of our Madagascar Mission? Is the work of Friends here at an end? Personally, even when the prospects of our work seemed least hopeful, I was never able for long to take a very gloomy view of the situation. Now, when the disturbances incidental to the war and the rebellion are over and the people are everywhere quietly acquiescing in the new order of things, when the misconceptions regarding our work and aims seem very largely removed, with wide open doors for service lying before us in every direction—evangelical, pastoral, medical, educational, industrial—surely the finger of Divine Providence points clearly to the fact that the work of our Mission is not yet at an end in this land. Rather, the magnitude of the work depending on us—with which, in our reduced numbers, we are often unable rightly to cope—should prove a powerful call to those to whom God has committed means or talents to come to our help, and carry on to yet greater issues the work on which His blessing has so evidently rested in the past, and for for which our fellow-laborers have suffered a martyr's death."

GENERAL CHURCH NOTES.

Ministers, as well as other public men, occasionally suffer from misrepresentations in the press. Not long since Bishop Potter, of the Protestant Episcopal Church of New York, was quoted as championing the cause of the saloon. He was reported to have said that the saloon is the poor man's clubhouse; that it exists as a necessity. The report spread like fire in a stubble, and it was not long before the religious papers were severely condemning the good Bishop. It now appears that what Bishop Potter really said, as he himself in a letter to a personal friend reiterates, was as follows:

"I stated that something answering to the saloon—that is, places of inexpensive recreation and refreshment—would always be a necessity. I may add that until it is provided the mischiefs of the saloon, which nobody recognizes more clearly than I, will continue. Something better, something wholesome, harmless, undefiled and undefiling, must take its place, and so expel by substitution."

This is sound wisdom, and it has been so proved by practical experiments. We understand that Bishop Potter is engaged in an effort to establish just such an institution as he refers to. This will be known as a "squirrel inn." It would be well oftentimes if the press, and individuals, too, would suspend judgment until the facts are established.

The synod of the Russian Orthodox Church is lashing itself into a frenzy over two decisions recently given by the Russian Senate. The first of these is designed to ameliorate the condition of that section of the Stundists which has attached itself to the German Baptists. The Baptists are recognized in Russia as a lawful religious body, while the Stundists, as a separate denomination, are not. The latter hope that toleration will eventually be extended to them. By the second decision of the Senate the famous sect of Old Believers are permitted to conduct religious services in their homes. These decisions, coming close upon the emigration of the Doukobhors, for conscience' sake, are especially significant. One cannot help thinking, in connection with the subject of religious toleration in Russia, of such Friends as Daniel Wheeler and William Allen, who were the honored friends of a past Czar.

Apropos of Russia, an interesting incident is related of the return of the present Czar Nicholas from Livadia to St. Petersburg. On the journey north a stop was made at Toola, in Central Russia, where Tolstoi resides. Upon the request of Nicholas, Tolstoi was ushered into the presence of the Czar. Though a Count, Tolstoi appeared at the station clad in his usual peasants' garb. A report of the interview follows:

"The Czar kissed him on the mouth and both cheeks, Tolstoi returning the salute. The Czar then asked him about the imperial proposal for the limitation of armaments. Count Tolstoi replied that he could only believe in it when the Czar should set the example to other nations. On the Czar mentioning the difficulties of the problem and the necessity for the united aid of the great Powers, the Count expressed the hope that the Czar would be able to attain some definite results. The Czar said he would be pleased if Tolstoi could be induced to lend his genius to the solution of the question, and the Count replied that the Czar might count upon his co-operation, for he was already engaged upon a work dealing with the question in point, which would soon see the light."

Pope Leo XIII. is almost ninety years of age. He is no longer the hearty old man he was a short time since. He is evidently failing, and naturally, the representatives of the church and state are busying themselves with the question of his possible successor. The subject of the temporal power of the Vatican is ever at the front, and the policy of the next Pope will be vitally important to the College of Cardinals. The Catholic Church could have no more ardent advocate of the temporal power of Rome than Leo XIII. It could have none less successful in re-establishing it, even though in the last Catholic Directory issued in Rome he calls himself "sovereign of the temporal dominions of the Holy Roman Church." Such language may be good policy, but it is sad irony for his cause.

Much has been said of late regarding the value of church revivals. Dr. Theodore L. Cuyler, to whom every one must listen with respect, seems to think that we have too much "periodical religion." He recently expressed himself very strongly on this subject. He believes that "every minister should sow his own seed and reap his own harvest." Too much dependence, he thinks, is placed upon the evangelist. He says: "Brethren, if you want power, seek the power from on high! Don't send for a man; go straight to God! The only true fire is what the Holy Spirit kindles; and just as sure as you co-operate with Him the fire will be kindled." That sounds like good Quaker teaching.

News from the Field.

Dr. Nitobe and family are staying for a short time at the Del Monte, in Monterey, California.

Our friend William Marshall sailed from Liverpool on the Steamship "Orissa," Pacific Steam Navigation Company, for Rosario, Argentine Republic, South America, First month 12th. Mail can be sent to him care of Alfred Cook, Locomotive Department, Rosario. It will take about six weeks to reach the destination. Four other missionaries are sailing on the same steamer.

Charles N. Replogle has been authorized by Friends' Missionary Board of Kansas Yearly Meeting to solicit funds for the proposed new meeting-house at Douglas Island, Alaska.

KANSAS YEARLY MEETING.

Pond Creek, Oklahoma Territory.—Stella Quarterly Meeting will be held the 3d, 4th and 5th of next month, at Enterprise School-house, which is fourteen miles east and seven miles south from Pond Creek, Oklahoma Territory, one south and nine east from Pana Post-office. This is one of our new meeting points, being the home of John Snively, our superintendent of the tabernacle work. As a result from his meeting, assisted by Brother Adkinson, of Wichita, Kansas, held about the last of Ninth month, of the many converts nineteen joined Friends. The Lord did wonderfully bless their efforts. One man, who was an infidel and had spent much of his life on the stage, was born again and made a new creature in Christ Jesus. Of these other converts we expect more will join Friends soon. We bless God for sending His servants and handmaidens this way. We feel that it is in answer to prayer. Anna J. Winslow, from Jefferson County, Kansas, assisted by Alvin Coppock and James Welch, from Stella Monthly Meeting, held a two-weeks' meeting at our Friends' Valley Church this winter, including the holidays. It was a wonderful time of seed-sowing, but only one soul was brought in. Anna Winslow has a very warm place in the hearts of many dear souls here, as was evidenced by the financial support they gave her. From here she went to Cold Water Meeting, ten miles west from Pond Creek. From there she went to Ring Wood Meeting, southwest from Enid. At this writing she is probably at Harmony Meeting. Two weeks ago Josiah Dillon, from Iowa, after visiting Liberty, Stella, Ring Wood and Cold Water in the love of the Gospel, came to us. His work here was in the line of establishing the church.

Oklahoma has had a wonderful time of lengthening her cords, and now comes the time for strengthening her stakes. We have extended our borders to the limit of our capacity to care for and feed, and so our prayer is, "Lord, locate more of thy servants among us." I am glad to note that Anna Winslow and Josiah Dillon are so favorably impressed with our meetings and this new country, and that Josiah Dillon is even anxious to locate here.

After four services held here Josiah Dillon passed on to Enterprise School-house, where the next Quarterly Meeting is to be held. Here he tarried three days, holding three services on Seventh-day, with lunch dinner. On Sabbath evening we had a new experience; about a dozen of the rough element of young men and women from an adjoining neighborhood, who had actually run out their Methodist Episcopal minister in their own vicinity, evidently intended to give Josiah Dillon a lesson on "frontier life," as they were among the first at the school-house, that they might have seats together, and so with a sack of peanuts they were ready to greet the "tenderfoot" from Iowa. Their courage held up well during song and prayer service, and peanuts were passed freely until Josiah commenced talking. He first pictured out in a very vivid way the life of a very bad man; his indulgences in early life, which led to such a bad end; spoke of law-breakers generally; of Sabbath-breakers, and of those who would disturb religious service, and incidentally referred to the silly and feeble-minded who were not accountable for their own acts, and how generous and kind our government was in providing for the safe-keeping of such beings; did not refer directly to any one in the house, but they took a hint, and we had the very best of order. The Lord gave Josiah great liberty and blessing in the next hour and a half in delivering His message. Some of the rowdies even leaned forward to catch all that was said. "The weapons of our warfare are not carnal, but mighty through God to the pulling down of strongholds." It was my privilege to conduct Josiah Dillon to Harmony Meeting, a drive of about sixty-four miles, where he will hold some meetings.

I believe I ought to record Josiah's sickness just prior to coming to Kansas. As I remember it he was confined to his bed for several months, and finally three physicians met in consultation and for the purpose of performing a surgical operation, but being warned in a dream that it would be sure death, he declined to have the operation, trusted in God, sent the physicians home, and got up out of bed and came to Kansas Yearly Meeting, and has been in active service ever since, often holding three services a day.

On my return from Harmony, having to cross the Otoe Indian Reservation, and getting to the Agency just at night, it was my pleasure to share the hospitality of D. A. Outland and his amiable wife, with two bright little girls. That being his evening with the Indian children, I was permitted to look into their bright faces while he was talking to them, and I cannot speak in too high praise of their conduct, their bright appearance, their singing and the interest they show to those who have an interest in them. I found that Sister Outland was something of an artist, and put a good deal of her work on the blackboard; in short, I thought that Amos and Rhoda Outland were the right persons in the right place.

If any Friends from a distance wish to attend our next Quarterly Meeting, if they will correspond with me at Pond Creek, they will be cared for, but they should get here not later than Fifth-day, the 2d of the month.

CHARLES W. JACKSON.

Wellington, Kansas.—On the 19th inst. Wm. G. Hubbard addressed the 300 students of the County High School at this place on "International Peace and Arbitration."

His comparison of brain against muscle, of the sword against reason, in the settlement of a boundary line, or in the determination of right and justice, was full of plain, practical illustrations, and unanswerable arguments in favor of peace and against war.

For nearly an hour he presented a strong array of facts upon this great theme, and in a very masterful and pleasing manner.

His address contained food for thought, flights of oratory, and fairly bristled with sharp points.

The students were delighted, and greeted him frequently with hearty applause. I am safe in saying that an address of such thrilling interest and power has seldom before been heard in that room, and will start many a mind in a new direction on this great subject. In the evening William G. Hubbard delivered an address to a full house at the Congregational Church on "Temperance."

He declared that no other agent on earth could make a man commit such terrible crimes as alcohol. He made a powerful plea for total abstinence and prohibition, and showed the utter delusion of high license.

The laws of Kansas are virtually prohibitive, even when only partially enforced.

In Kansas the average amount of intoxicants consumed annually per capita is less than one quart, while in Missouri it is twenty-two gallons, or eighty-eight quarts.

The laws of God are all prohibitory, and yet they are violated. The plea that the prohibitory law ought to be repealed because it is violated, comes from the enemies of the law, and not from its friends.

The liquor dealers have immense wealth, and are united. More to be feared than this is the indifference of professedly temperance people. We ought to stand together as one man for God and home and native land. The speaker paid a high compliment to the "White Ribboners" of the W. C. T. U.

His address was listened to by many of the best citizens, and the unanimous verdict was that it was grand in conception, dignified in expression, pure and elevating in thought, and full of spiritual power. The solution of these great questions is the problem of the ages.

EZRA SPENCER.

CALIFORNIA YEARLY MEETING.

Whittier, Cal.—The church is prospering under the very efficient labors of our pastor, Andrew F. Mitchell. The Sabbath services both morning and evening are well attended. At the Sabbath evening service often every available seat is filled, and that this continues after some months is ample evidence of the helpfulness of these occasions.

The Sabbath School has been reorganized, and through the energy of a Sabbath School Committee, who are in evidence, and a splendid corps of teachers, who realize the great privilege they have in presenting the truths of the Gospel, increased interest is being manifested.

A library crusade is being made; $5.32 was raised on the birthday plan during First month in the adult portion of the school alone.

The college has just closed the first half-year's work. Very satisfactory work has been done under the same faculty throughout the different departments. A steady increase in the course of study has been the plan for some years, and a decided growth is being made in the character of the work done. The school is an important factor in the work of the church.

Miss Murcutt, National W. C. T. U. Organizer of Australia, held a week's series of temperance meetings, beginning First month 29th. She is a good speaker, and presents the principles of temperance from the prohibition point of view very forcibly.

Pasadena, Cal.—There were no ministers from abroad with us at our recent Quarterly Meeting, but the home ministers, Luther B. Gordon, Irving Taber, and Rhoda M. Hare, were specially blessed in the ministration of the Word, and the meetings throughout were characterized by the presence and power of the Holy Spirit.

Levi Gregory, the General Superintendent, sent a message that he could not be present, as he was engaged in a very gracious revival at El Modena.

The Friends from Los Angeles are much encouraged in their work. They have just received a generous gift in the way of a $700 lot, well located, for the Friends' meeting-house, which they soon hope to see erected.

The Quarterly Meeting, though not large, was characterized with a deeply spiritual life throughout all its sessions.

J. R. TOWNSEND.

INDIANA YEARLY MEETING.

Walnut Ridge Quarterly Meeting.—Oliver Beeson and Oliver Gotschall, of Spiceland Quarterly Meeting, have just closed a very interesting meeting at Riverside Preparative Meeting.

These ministers were much favored to preach the truth, so that the church was edified and backsliders reclaimed.

S. Rufina White, who has recently located as pastor at Maxwell, has just closed a successful series of meetings at the same place, in which there were some renewals, conversions and accessions to the church.

The work is prospering at Greenfield under their new pastor,

Orville Jones. The blessing of the Lord is resting upon the work in the Quarterly Meeting. All our pastors, workers and evangelists are doing good work, but the fields are white unto the harvest and the laborers are few. May there be those whom the Lord shall send among us that will thrust in the cycle and reap the golden grain.

CHARLES S. WINSLOW.

Fountain City Ind.—Revival services were begun at his place Twelfth month 18th, by Esther Cook, and continued four weeks. She labored most faithfully and earnestly, preaching the Gospel with much power. The Lord graciously owned and blessed her efforts and those of his people. The spirit was poured out in large measure and resulted in ten conversions, fifteen renewals and the reviving of the church. Ella Applegate, from New Castle, greatly assisted in the meetings by her singing.

The sisters were compelled to leave for other fields of labor, but the work they so faithfully began is still being continued in the Methodist Church, and many souls are coming to Christ.

Revival work has been carried on in other places within the Monthly Meeting. The home ministers and people of New Garden Meeting held a series of meetings in that church that resulted in blessings to souls.

Gretta Retts and husband held meetings for two weeks at our new meeting at St. John that resulted in nine new members being received from there at our last Monthly Meeting.

Elwood Hinshaw, from Lynn, has just closed a meeting at Beech Grove that was owned and blessed of the Lord.

By request the Home Mission Committee of New Garden held meetings each night for two weeks in the Mount Vernon School-house. This is a place where the people are far from church and have fallen into the habit of not attending meetings anywhere. Fannie Elliott and Moses Bailey had charge of the services. The presence of the Lord was manifested in all the meetings. A few received definite blessings, and the people were aroused to their need of salvation and the importance of attending church services.

Thorntown, Ind.—Ira Newlin, of Bloomingdale, Park County, Ind., felt called of God to come to Walnut Grove and hold a series of meetings, which began on the 8th of First month, which was a time of great blessing to the church and all who attended. Twenty-eight meetings in all were held.

WILMINGTON YEARLY MEETING.

Highland, Ohio.—A series of meetings were begun at Highland, Twelfth month 4th and closed First month 2d, 1899. It was begun by our pastor, Lizzie Larkins, and ably conducted for a week and a half. There was a good feeling in the meeting, and the spirit of conviction seemed to settle over the people. At this juncture Brother Wm. Manley and three workers came into our midst, and greatly assisted in the work. Brother Manley is one of the clearest teachers we have ever had at our place, and his preaching was in the demonstration and power of the Holy Spirit.

There were fifty-two sessions in all; fifteen families visited; several young peoples' meetings held; thirty conversions and renewals, and five accessions to the church; also twelve persons have joined the Christian Endeavor. We have an excellent pastor, who is pushing the work forward with much earnestness.

Fairfield Quarterly Meeting was held at Fairfield, First month 27th, 28th and 29th. A feeling of unity and harmony prevailed. Our dear Brother Samuel Beck, of England, was present, and presented the Gospel in much clearness and simplicity. The Christian Endeavor rally on Sabbath afternoon was addressed by Emma S. Townsend, to the edification of all present.

FANNIE E. THORNBURG.

NEW YORK YEARLY MEETING.

Our brother, Luke Woodard, commenced meetings at Hartland, N. Y., on First-day, the 28th. We believe a blessing is attending his labors, and much prayer is being made for the salvation of souls. He will probably hold some meetings next at Macedon Centre, where our sister, Rebecca Fagler, and a few faithful co-laborers keep up the meeting. May they also be greatly encouraged, and their prayers answered in the salvation of dear souls.

H. H. LEGGETT.

NORTH CAROLINA YEARLY MEETING.

Fremont, N. C.—Contentnea Quarterly Meeting of Friends convened at Nahunta, First month 27th, 28th and 29th, 1899. The attendance was only eleven persons on the 28th, caused by the heavy snow that fell the night previous. Snow continued to fall all day to the depth of from twelve to eighteen inches, but both clerks were present, one of them residing about twenty miles distant. Only one representative was present,—Abbie Hollowell, a minister from Neuse Monthly Meeting. But little business was transacted. Amos Davis, of Iowa, was present, and gave us a very interesting talk on First-day to an audience of twenty-five persons. Our friends, John Holly and wife, from Sampson County, were also present. A revival at Nahunta closed a few days ago, conducted by Annie Armitage, of Ohio, Amos Davis and others. They have just closed a successful series of meetings at Woodland. Amos Davis leaves this week to conduct a meeting at Bethesda, Sampson County.

A Christian Endeavor Society has recently been organized at Nahunta with twenty-eight members. A. R. EDGERTON.

NEW ENGLAND YEARLY MEETING.

Hannah J. Bailey, of Winthrop, Maine, is spending the winter in California.

George L. Crosman, of Lynn, Mass., is also spending some months in California, in company with his sister, Clara Binford.

IOWA YEARLY MEETING.

Winneshiek Monthly Meeting was established in 1855 instead of 1865, as was said in a former issue.

Spencer, Iowa.—In the issue of THE AMERICAN FRIEND, published First month 25th, the revival meetings at Greenville, Iowa, belonging to Iowa Yearly Meeting, are said to have been conducted by Emma F. Coffin, Brother Witman and I. N. Rich. The fact is Brother Witman is the pastor of that meeting, and the revival meetings were held by him and I. N. Rich. I was only present at one meeting. EMMA F. COFFIN.

Oskaloosa, Iowa.—Penn College never enjoyed a period of greater prosperity, educationally and socially, than at the present. A laudable class spirit and great enthusiasm prevail. The societies are getting in fine work indeed. The moral condition is most excellent. A sort of subduing religious atmosphere pervades the whole surrounding. A college with no taint of suspicion resting upon the orthodoxy of its professors, where from the janitor to the president they pray with the faith of little children, certainly commends itself to the kindly, fostering care of the church.

Oh, for some one to do for Penn College the financial act that would loose its "bonds," liberating it for its broadest usefulness! Penn College Chapel Friends' Meeting is also enjoying a season of great spiritual good.

The Fifth-day morning meetings attended by the aged Friends "are times of refreshing" from the Lord's presence. The First-day morning meetings are largely attended, affording an almost unlimited opportunity for preaching the Gospel. Many students from many States and Yearly Meetings attending. Kind, social, loving, our people wear the badge of discipleship, with no tendency toward fanaticism or the coldness of ecclesiastical formality. To be the pastor of a church like this is under God a proud heritage. May His grace continue to be multiplied unto all our people through a knowledge of Jesus Christ, and may we all walk in all humility worthy of His calling.

All "shut-ins" are helpfully visited by members, and prayer meetings are being held in many of their homes.

LEVI REES.

WESTERN YEARLY MEETING.

Kempton, Ind.—A series of meetings,—twenty-seven sessions,—was held by our pastor, Mary Cook. As a result there were thirty-four conversions and renewals, and twenty requests for membership with Friends, and the church mightily strengthened and built up, for all of which the Lord be praised.

JOSEPH G. KEMP.

White Lick Quarterly Meeting.—Fairview Meeting-house was dedicated Twelfth month 4th, 1898, by Thomas C. Brown, of Carmel, Ind. Immediately following a series of fifteen meetings was held by Griffith Wright, a local worker, which resulted in fifteen conversions and fourteen accessions to the church. One man, seventy-four years old, with his wife, who is blind, were converted. The power of the Lord was manifest in the meetings from the beginning.

This is an Indulged Meeting, belonging to White Lick Monthly Meeting, and has been held in a school-house nearly thirty years. The Friends at that place feel especially thankful that they now have a house to meet in. The meeting is in the care of the Missionary Board. HARVEY ALLEN.

Birth.

COLLINS.—At Great Barrington, Mass., Eleventh month 28th, 1898, a son, Frederick Seth, to A. Chalkley and Sarah S. Collins.

Died.

BLAIR.—Mary Blair, wife of Samuel C. Blair, died First month 12th, 1899, after an illness of only one week, at the home of her daughter, in Carthage, Mo., where, with her husband, she had lived for the last thirteen years. She was born in North Carolina in 1827, and was married to Samuel Blair in 1849. She was a life-long member of the Society of Friends, and a true and devoted Christian.

HILL.—Nancy H. Hill, of Carthage, Ind., died in Pasadena, First month 10th. She was only sick four days with pneumonia complicated with heart trouble. After a short service, conducted by Chas. E. Tebbetts, in Pasadena, they took the body to Carthage, Ind.

JEPSON.—Died, very suddenly, at his home in Lynn, Mass., Eleventh month 29th, 1898, Herbert O. Jepson, aged 39. His kindness of heart, shown in a variety of ways, had endeared him to a large circle of friends.

News and Events.

The war-cloud in the Philippine Islands has burst at last. On First-day the 5th inst. the Filipinos attempted an attack upon Manila. The engagement was precipitated by three insurgents disregarding the pickets of an American outpost, and rushing past the lines. Twice they were challenged, but retired unmocked; the third time the sentry opened fire, killing one and wounding the other. This occurred on First-day, about 4.15 p.m. Almost immediately the Filipino line commenced a fusillade, which was ineffectual. The American lines replied vigorously. At about one o'clock the Filipinos opened a hot fire from three different places. The American troops were assisted in answering this attack by United States gunboats located in the harbor, with the result of silencing the enemy's guns. The attack, however, seems to have been several times renewed by the insurgents, but with great loss to their side. The number of casualties on the American side is reported at about 175, with very few fatalities.

The outcome of this conflict has been to renew interest in the Paris Treaty, which came up for ratification in the Senate on the 6th. The advocates of the treaty claim that the Filipinos have derived much moral support from the divided state of opinion in this country over their cause. With only one vote beyond the required two-thirds the treaty was passed by the Senate, and the Filipinos are thus made insurgents against our government. Hereafter General Otis will be untrammelled by the anomalous condition which has hitherto prevailed, by which he has technically been opposed to Spain when contending with the natives.

It seems now that the Cubans and the United States are to arrange amicably any differences that it may have been feared would arise. Robert P. Porter has just made a visit to General

Gomez and secured his consent to go to Havana, where he will confer with Gen. Brooke regarding the rehabilitation of the island. General Gomez has further shown a disinterested spirit in declining to act as the distributor of the $3,000,000 which is to be apportioned to the Cubans for the purpose of establishing them in the pursuit of peaceful occupations. In order that there might be no suspicion of his profiting from the handling of this large amount of money, he requested that it should be disbursed by General Brooke. Though the question of Cuban army arrears may yet give trouble, it is to be hoped that the Cuban soldiers will be satisfied to await its settlement by the coming Cuban Republic, under whose jurisdiction only it will properly belong. The Cuban Assembly recently demanded from this government $57,000,000 to settle these claims. The demand has been ignored.

The findings of the court-martial which week before last tried Commissary-General Eagan have not yet been made public, but it has been rumored that it will be suspension from service for two years and retirement at the end of that time. It can hardly be less severe than this, though it is said that the President is inclined to clemency by reason of the strong provocation which he considers Eagan suffered at the treatment of General Miles.

A storm now threatens to break over General Miles. The administration thinks that the commanding general has been entirely too free in his interviews with the press, and has very injudiciously given information in this way to the public which he should have reserved for communication to the Government only. A court-martial has been suggested, and this is not at all impossible. The truth, then, may have a chance to get a hearing which thus far it has greatly suffered for. It is reported that General Miles now has the testimony of thirty subordinate officers, which prove that the canned beef furnished the soldiers was not good. General Miles still insists that the beef was "embalmed." Beef dealers, however, have offered large sums of money for charity if this charge can be proved, and they are evidently anxious to have the charges thoroughly aired. It is important to keep in mind that General Miles has disowned many of the "interviews" which have been published by the newspapers, branding them as made out of the whole cloth.

Heavy snowstorms swept over the country last week, delaying travel by causing much damage and discomfort in many places. Colorado appears to have suffered most. A snow slide on the main line of the Denver and Rio Grande Railroad resulted in overwhelming a train and killing three men and injuring others. Blockades prevailed throughout the mountainous regions, so that it has been necessary to employ a force of over 1000 men to dig out the immense drifts. Thousands of cattle have perished from cold and starvation.

TRAINING CHILDREN.

The methods of training children have undergone a great change in the last fifty years in this country. A venerable lady recently told the following incident as a fact in her own childhood:

"I belonged," she said, "to a very strict family, in which gay clothing was considered a temptation of Satan. I saw one day in a shop window of the village a pretty print, the color of the heart of a conch shell. I asked my mother to buy it for me. I was ten years old and never had worn any but brown or gray stuff gowns.

"She looked amazed and horrified, but without a word went with me to inspect the pink muslin, and to ask the price of it.

"Coming out of the shop she said, 'The price is $5. I will not buy such a piece of vain folly; but if you choose to buy it for yourself, I will not hinder you.'

"I have no money!" I exclaimed.

"If you give up butter, sugar and molasses for six months you have earned the price of the dress," she said.

"I agreed eagerly, but our tables were not then loaded with dainties as now. My fare was poor and hard that winter. However, I persevered, and one bright day the money was placed in my hand. I bought the lovely rose-colored stuff, and carried it home with a high, beating heart.

"My father looked at it and at me with cold disapproval.

"You have earned this finery," he said, "and can wear it if you choose, but think how much more worthy in God's eyes you would appear if you gave it to poor, lame Peggy, the tailor's child."

"I gave it to poor, lame Peggy, but in doing it my heart was full of fury and rebellion."

There were errors in judgment, no doubt, in the hard parental discipline of the earlier days, but is the excessive indulgence of young people now more wise and just? Self-denial not learned in youth becomes a serious hardship, in middle life intolerable. —"Youth's Companion."

AN OBITUARY QUILT.

"Many queer gifts come to the minister of a New England country church at the annual donation visit of his parishioners, but the oddest and creepiest thing of the kind that I ever knew of I encountered once in Northern Maine," said E. A. Stetson, a member of a New York publishing firm. "I was a book canvasser then, selling religious works, and I stayed one night at the house of a Baptist preacher in the little back country town of Monson, since become somewhat prominent through the development of its slate quarries. The preacher was a man of deep erudition, known far and wide for his unworldliness and apostolic piety, and his wife was a notable housekeeper. There was a good supper, and at 9 o'clock in the evening prayers. These over, I went to bed in the best room, and, after the day's hustling, slept soundly," says the Sun.

"Walking in the bright morning sunlight, my attention was attracted by the odd pattern of the quilt which served as a counterpane on my bed. It was a patchwork quilt, made in large squares, and on every square was a lettering worked in black worsted. In the square immediately before my eyes spelled the words 'Sacred to the memory of Solomon Tubbs. Died October 8, 1867.' In the next square was inscribed: 'In memory of Martha Phillips. Born June 11, 1833. Died January 14, 1864.' On every square was an obituary notice couched in a style similar to the first one that I read, and they covered a time running from 1851 to 1867. The quilt which, I learned afterward, was presented to the pastor's wife by the women of her husband's congregation, combined the utilities of a counterpane with the record of deaths in the parish for a term of sixteen years. That it was spread in the best chamber showed that it was reserved for guests as a mark of high consideration.

"At first sight the memento mori character of the inscriptions was a trifle appalling to a man just awakened. But being a guest at the same house for some subsequent nights I got used to the obituary quilt, and even derived a certain enjoyment from studying out the inscriptions mornings before I got up from bed. So familiar did they become to me that I could have repeated them all in order by the time I quitted my canvassing field in Maine to take up my present business in the metropolis."

The poetry of all growing life consists in carrying an oldness into a newness, a past into a future, always. So only can our days possibly be "bound each to each by natural piety." I would not for the world think that twenty years hence I should have ceased to see the things which I see now, and love them still. It would make life wearisome beyond expression if I thought that twenty years hence I should see them just as I see them now, and love them with no deeper love because of other visions of their loveliness. And so there comes this deep and simple rule for any man as he crosses the line dividing one period of his life from another: Make it a time in which you shall realize your faith, and also in which you shall expect of your faith new and greater things. Take what you believe and are and hold it in your hand with new firmness as you go forward; but as you go, holding it, look on it with continual and confident expectation to see it open into something greater and truer.—Phillips Brooks.

A WOMAN'S LIFE WORK.

Including Thirty Year's Service on the Underground Railroad and in the War.

BY LAURA HAVILAND.

This is a story of a wonderful life. The author was an active Anti-Slavery agitator and through her underground railroad work assisted hundreds of slaves to escape from bondage. During the war she spent about two years taking care of the sick and wounded. Through her efforts more than 2,000 Union Soldiers were liberated. She accomplished a great work in providing for the Freedmen of Kansas after the close of the war. She was the founder of the State Public School, at Coldwater, Mich., an institution which was the first of its kind in the world. The Industrial School for Girls at Adrian Mich., almost utterly owes its first existence, and especially its name to her efforts. Haviland Academy at Haviland, Kansas, was named in her honor, as also the town in which it is located. At the World's Fair she was introduced by President Palmer as "The Mother of Philanthropy," and well she deserves the title. Her experience as told in this book will be read with thrilling interest.

This book is printed on good paper and contains 625 pages. It is bound in cloth with red edges. The retail price of the book is $1.50. We will send it postpaid, for $1.00. Address,

HULDA:

The Pentecostal Prophetess.

BY BYRON J. REES.

152 Pages. Bound in Cloth. Price, 50c., postpaid.

A short life story and seventeen of the sermons of Hulda A. Rees, together with her portrait and picture of her early church. This book needs no other introduction than for the reader to know that seventeen of her sermons, which Sister Rees preached with such accompaniments of power and blessing, are for the most part to compose it. The life-story is short yet comprehensive, the writer of it avoiding anything of a eulogistic nature and making the facts of the life serve as an appropriate introduction to the character back of the sermons.

Mrs. E. E. Williams, in a beautiful poem, which is also a part of the book, gives some refreshing glimpses into the character of Sister Rees.

Esther T. Pritchard also contributes a "Tribute," glowing with fervor and truth.

The long-continued life of this venerable and valuable eclectic is another instance of the survival of the fittest, in that it, the best of all, has absorbed or survived every one of its numerous rivals or imitators. Its present vitality is evidenced by the announcement that The Eclectic Magazine of New York, its oldest and most important competitor, will, with the issue of January, 1899, be consolidated with THE LIVING AGE, and be hereafter known as The Eclectic Magazine and Monthly Edition of The Living Age.

The magazine is well worthy the attention of every one who is making a selection of periodicals for the new year, and in no other way that we know of can a subscriber, for so small an outlay, only $6.00 a year, be put in possession of the best which the current literature of the world affords.

CHOOSING A MENNONITE MINISTER.

In the presence of a congregation of over a thousand people, gathered in the Mennonite meeting-house, at Millersville, Pa., (says a letter to the Philadelphia "Press"), Daniel N. Lehman, a farmer of Manor township, was chosen by lot to be minister of the congregation. There were twelve candidates for the position.

"The exercises were conducted by Bishop Isaac Eby, assisted by over a score of ministers, the candidates being first examined as to their faith. After a sermon by the Bishop, the latter handed twelve small Bibles to two ministers and instructed them to repair to the ante-room and place a small strip of white paper, which he gave them, in the corner of one of the twelve Bibles. Upon their return the Bibles were set on end on a table at the foot of the pulpit.

"One by one the candidates stepped up and selected a Bible. Each book was then examined by the Bishop, who started with Amos Charles. The next one opened was that of Daniel Lehman, and in his Bible the slip of paper was found. Greeting him with the holy kiss, Bishop Eby immediately ordained him to the ministry in the informal but impressive custom of the church."

SOME CURIOUS CALLINGS.

In India all callings are hereditary; a baker's son becomes a baker, and his son after him, and so on from generation to generation. The census, however, reveals some more startling vocations than that of the maker of bread.

The people of Allahabad especially are not ashamed of their professions.

Thirty-five describe themselves as "men who beg with threats and violence"; 226 as "flatterers for gain"; twenty-five as "hereditary robbers"; 974 as "low blackguards"; 29 "howlers at funerals," while as many as 6,372 publicly announce that they are "poets."

In the other districts one finds, besides the ordinary professions, 11,000 tom-tom players; forty-five makers of crowns for idols, and—most curious of all—"hereditary painters of horses with spots."

The census containing this interesting information is kept at the Sanskrit College at Benares.—"The Church Standard."

"BELOW DECK."

Man's greatest debt is to the invisible. This is true in a physical, common-life sense, quite as much as in the realm of the spiritual or the ideal. . . A brave fellow writes from the flagship at Manila in behalf of the "men below deck." These are engineers, machinists, oilers, coal-passers, or still others. What were the navy without these heroes whose place is twenty-five feet below water-line? Every business in life has its men and women "below deck," upon whom success largely depends. Some of them are visible to the eye, but not to the appreciation of the public. Track-walkers and switchmen, compositors and proof-readers, janitors and sextons—these, and a hundred others, constitute that nobler kind of "submerged tenth," by whom we live, and to whom we forget to give the full meed of credit. We walk by a kind of half-conscious faith in them, but we ought to keep them in sight, for their own encouragement, if not for our own betterment.—"Sunday School Times."

State Superintendent of Schools Stetson was visiting a school down in Pembroke, when he got into the pleasant mazes of nature studies and asked some interesting questions about the little things of the world about us.

"How many seed compartments are there in an apple?" he queried. No one knew. "And yet," said the State Superintendent, "all of you eat many apples in the course of a year and see the fruit every day, probably."

"You must learn to notice the little things in nature. Now, perhaps some little boy who has driven cows to pasture every day this summer can tell me on which jaw the cow has her teeth?"

No answer. Rather was there blank astonishment, at last pierced by one little fellow volunteering the information that "our cow has teeth on both jaws, 'cause she chaws hay all up fine."

"If that is so, my boy," replied the head of the State schools, "I'd advise you to sell that wonderful cow with teeth on both jaws to some museum. I'm afraid, children, that you haven't studied nature quite closely enough."

The talk of the State superintendent deeply impressed the children. They earnestly discussed the matter at recess time, and the teacher the next day overheard this conversation in the play yard:

A little girl got some of her companions around her, and gravely said, "Now, children, make believe that I'm Mr. Stetson. You've got to know more about common things. I you don't you'll all grow up to be fools."

"Now, tell me," she said, looking sternly at a playmate, "how many feathers has a hen?"—Bangor "Commercial."

Ellen awoke, feeling thirsty, one hot night. Mamma brought her some water from the pitcher, from which all the ice had melted. Ellen took a swallow, and then observed, "I suppose you thought that water was fresh, mamma; but it's really a little bit wilted."—"Youth's Companion."

MY TRIUMPH.

*The airs of heaven blow o'er me ;
A glory shines before me
Of what mankind shall be,— Pure, generous, brave, and free.*

*A dream of man and woman
Diviner but still human,
Solving the riddle old,
Shaping the age of gold !*

*The love of God and neighbor ;
An equal-handed labor,
The richer life, where beauty
Walks hand in hand with duty.*

*Ring, bells, in unrequited steeples,
The joy of unborn peoples !
Sound, trumpets, far off blown,
Your triumph is my own !*

*Parcel and part of all,
I keep the festival,
Fore-reach the good to be,
And share the victory.*

*I feel the earth move sunward,
I join the great march onward,
And take, by faith, while living,
My freehold of thanksgiving.*

"I CANNOT DO OTHERWISE."

THERE are few grander scenes in human history than that of Luther standing alone with God before the Diet in the city of Worms on the Rhine, face to face with the gathered authority of church and empire, and holding by his conviction of truth with no prospect of escape from death. "I cannot do otherwise. God help me. Amen." No braver words were ever spoken.

And yet such conviction of truth as that ought not to be rare. It is impossible to get much spiritual power in a man, or out of a man, until such conviction possesses him. "I guess I'm saved," "I hope I may at last get into heaven," "I think I believe," "I humbly trust that God will receive me." In some such halting words as these most Christians express themselves, if they speak at all. But such a "faith" as that dishonors God and makes the whole religious life weak and nerveless. A stream never rises higher than its source, and by a law no less sure and fixed, the spiritual height and moral force of a life are determined by the soul's faith, and conviction of truth.

Paul's "I reckon" and "I am persuaded" and "I know" indicate the spiritual height of his life as truly as a barometer tube measures the pressure of the atmosphere. The "guess-so, hope-so" kind of Christians on the other hand have almost no weight, though they help to give the impression that religion is mostly guess work and heated imagination.

One reason for this uncertainty and weakness of grasp undoubtedly is that the historic church asked its members to believe certain dogmas which found no ground or response in the moral nature of man, and which could not be tested, as primitive Christianity always can be, in personal experience, and this tended to make faith blind.

But there can be no greater misfortune than such a blind and weak-kneed faith which halts and stumbles, and is never sure of its mark. It has only the force of mere opinion with none of that vital certainty which grounds itself in the deepest conviction of the heart and being. "Will you also go away"? Christ says to his disciples when the multitude of those who only had an opinion about Him began to leave. "To whom should we go," they answer, "Thou only hast the words of eternal life." Their hearts knew Him, and rested on the knowledge that eternal life was in Him, with a conviction as certain as that their feet were on the solid earth, and that the sun was in the sky. We want to bring religion back to such a certainty as this; we want to see it founded on the eternal "must be so." The everyday Christian ought to feel as he follows Christ in his duties, in his work, in his testimony to truth, "I cannot do otherwise." The soul ought to close upon truth with a grip as sure and firm as the blacksmith's hand on his hammer.

GOOD AIR IN PLACES OF WORSHIP.

"Do FRIENDS avoid sleeping in meeting and other unbecoming behavior?" This is one of the old historic queries, and one which almost always "came up lame." "There is some sleeping in meeting," or "a few Friends sleeping in meeting," or "not quite clear regarding sleeping in meeting," are some stock answers to this question. It is a shame that somebody did not add another companion query to the one given above: "Are Friends particular to have their meeting-houses well ventilated, and is care taken always to have the air in them fresh and good"? If such a query as the one we suggest had been asked regularly and lived up to, the one about sleeping might have been omitted, for most of the sleeping was caused by close, heavy air. It is astonishing how few worshippers have the privilege of breathing good, wholesome air. Most meeting-houses are shut up tight through the week, and the congregation comes in on the Sabbath to breathe over again the air which was left there the week before. A hot fire is built, and this impure air, highly heated, is breathed over and over until it is a wonder that anybody keeps awake, and has a clear mind for the exercises of the meeting. All this time there are millions of cubic miles of God's air outside waiting to get in and refresh the heavy worshippers!

This is no fancy picture, as many will testify. There are stuffy meeting-houses in every section of the country, even in California, as a Friend tells us, who thought the air outside the most pure he had ever breathed. "Why not have some of it inside?" he asks. We have often asked the same question farther east. Some persons would not like perhaps to admit that the work of the Holy Spirit is limited and hindered by the quality of the air in the meeting-house, but there can be no doubt that persons are often rendered heavy and unresponsive to Him because of the close, stuffy air they are breathing, and we have seen a revival meeting before now settle down in a heavy, dead condition from which nothing would move it, when the real difficulty was a need of brisk, fresh air. The same condition is frequently present in meetings for worship. No ministry seems to have any effect. The speaker feels no response, and his hearers look heavy. Not unlikely the whole situation would have changed, and low breathings might have stole

"Of a diviner life from soul to soul, Baptizing in one tender thought the whole,"

if the bodily condition and physical vigor of those present had been at their best.

Bad air is responsible for a lot of deadness, and sextons and caretakers of meeting-houses ought to be made to realize that they are responsible for the bad air. Here is a reform which can easily be worked out, and it would be well for each meeting to have a committee on fresh air to co-operate with those who faithfully pray that the meeting may be preserved from deadness.

THE CANTEN SYSTEM.

JOSHUA L. BAILY, in an article in a recent number of THE AMERICAN FRIEND, gave a vivid picture of the canteen system and its pernicious effect. It has been almost universally acknowledged that the canteen, whether in army camps or in soldiers' homes, was a disgrace to the nation, and a source of incalculable demoralization, and for months a strong tide of public opinion has been rising against it, until at last the pernicious system has been swept away.

A bill has been reported to Congress by the House Committee on Alcoholic Liquor Traffic, prohibiting the sale of intoxicating drinks on any reservation or in any building under the control of the United States, but it was evident that this bill would not get consideration during this present session, so that a quicker method was adopted to accomplish the end in view. A short amendment was added to the bill to reorganize the Army, forbidding permission to any officer or to any other person to sell intoxicating drinks in any post, exchange, or canteen in any encampment or fort on any premises used for military purposes by the United States.

This amendment passed with almost no opposition, and it seems to cover the ground completely, though we are not entirely certain that the clause refers to soldiers' homes. At all events, it will stop the shameful practice of allowing the Army itself to debauch and ruin its own soldiers. This abolition of the canteen is a great step in the right direction, but it alone will not prevent drunkenness in the army. So long as there are saloons in the neighborhood of encampments, and soldiers are allowed to frequent them, the effects will continue, but we should rejoice at every victory which is gained by an enlightened public sentiment, and which points in the right direction.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

WE have for a long time wished that we might have our first page free of advertisements, but it has never been possible to accomplish this without considerable financial loss. We appear, for the first time, this week with this desire realized, and we hope we may be able to present an attractive and profitable front page each week. We shall often have portraits of distinguished Friends, together with some fitting quotation from the person whose picture is given. The picture of Whittier, given this week, is a reproduction of the frontispiece of Houghton, Mifflin & Co.'s Riverside Edition of the poet's works.

We believe everybody will appreciate this improvement, and will recognize that we do not indorse the proverb, "Let well enough alone."

SOME of Whittier's letters which we publish this week refer to Macaulay's treatment of William Penn in his "History of England." The subject was fresh at the time these letters were written, and Macaulay's unjust and unhistorical picture of the great Quaker deeply stirred the Friends both in England and in America. It is now a well known fact that Macaulay was wrong, but the weight and authority of his name made his attack on the Quaker hero hard to face. The attack called out from the poet a very fine passage on the subject in his "Quaker Alumni," which should be read in connection with these letters.

GENERAL CHURCH NOTES.

The movement toward such unification is a slow process, but religious toleration and fellowship which one day may result in a greater measure of unification than we can now conceive continue apace. After two years' preparation there has just been put forward by the free Evangelical Churches of England a catechism, or common statement of faith, upon which the representatives of the churches unanimously agreed. The committee which prepared the catechism consisted of men selected from the Congregationalists, Wesleyan Methodists, Baptists, Presbyterians, Primitive Methodists, Methodist New Connection, Bible Christians, and United Methodist Free Church. There are fifty-two questions and answers, all marked by breadth and spirituality, and entirely free from the musty theological absurdities which are usual in compilations of its class. It is important to observe that the catechism does not embody all that each church represented would express in a creed of its own; it is meant only as a practical statement of Christian faith, and in a very complete measure enumerates the essentials of the Christian religion. To us, however, it is a matter of sincere regret that the platform must be broadened still further before entire assent could be given by our branch of the church to all the questions and answers. It is noticeable that the Friends were not represented on the committee.

A most interesting manuscript—or, rather a mass of tattered papyrus—was discovered lately by a German resident in Cairo, and is now the property of the University Library of Heidelberg. The fragments have not yet been arranged for publication, but enough has been deciphered to know that this ancient treasure is a book of New Testament Apocrypha, entitled "The Acts of Paul the Apostle." Its real value has yet to be ascertained, but according to "Biblia" the net gain to our knowledge will be a "small but very precious residuum of genuine new information about the unique career and personality of one of the most interesting figures in history." From the manuscript has been taken the following description of Paul: "And Onesiphorus saw Paul approaching, a man short in stature, bald-headed, crook-kneed, of a fresh complexion, with eyebrows that joined, and a rather hooked nose, full of grace; for sometimes he appeared as a man, and sometimes he had the face of an angel." The manuscript is in a hitherto unknown text of Coptic.

The Volunteers of America, under the leadership of Commander Ballington Booth and his excellent wife, Maude Ballington Booth, are engaged in their third year's work as a separate outgrowth from the parent organization, the Salvation Army. During their second year, which ended Eleventh month 30th, 1898, there were held 23,400 open-air meetings, enabling the Volunteers to reach nearly 2,000,000 people. Much good was accomplished in this way, but the mission which lies nearest the hearts of the leaders of the Volunteers is the prison rescue work. Ten thousand prisoners have been reached in nine of the principal State prisons. Three thousand men have been enrolled in the Volunteer Prison League, and three prison homes, like "Hope Hall" in New York city, have been established.

Now that the Senate has ratified the Peace Treaty, more and more interest will centre about the Philippines, which have hitherto been the bone of contention. One of the most important questions confronting this country, and one that involves most significant opportunities and responsibilities, is the religious condition of the natives. This was pointed out at length in a recent editorial. It is, however, interesting to observe that the Catholic papers of America are generally blind to the faults of the church in the East, and they see in the revelations of the true condition of Catholicism in the Philippines only calumny and abuse.

THE PSALMS.

David has bequeathed us many Psalms in which the waiting, contrite souls of ages so remote and races so diverse as ours from his, find a fuller and fitter expression of their aspirations and their needs than all the piety and genius of intervening ages have been able to indite.

Yes, this untaught shepherd son of Jesse, this leader in many a sanguinary fight, this man of a thousand faults, knew how to sweep the chords of the human heart as few, or none, have ever touched them before or since—to take that heart, with all its frailty, its error, its sin, and lay it penitently, pleadingly at the footstool of its Maker and Judge, and teach it by what utterances, in what spirit, to implore forgiveness and help.—Horace Greeley.

These are truths: we are all of us God's children; every soul is made for purity, and has no right to sin; no soul can do its duty anywhere without a thrill of richer life running through all the world.—Phillips Brooks.

UNPUBLISHED LETTERS FROM WHITTIER.

We have received from Martha Allen, of Beverly, N. J., some letters written by John G. Whittier to her father, William J. Allinson. The first one refers to the death of Stephen Grellet, and is of peculiar historical interest. The second letter relates to an incident in the poet's own life. Neither of them, so far as we know, has ever been printed before.—Ed.

My Dear W—: Thy letter, informing me of the passing onward to eternal rest of our friend, Stephen Grellet, was duly received.

The loss of such a man seems to me very sad; the world seems darker for the withdrawal of such a light. But wherever he is, in the universe of our Heavenly Father, he is the true and loving spirit; his works of love continue the same, only freed from the interruptions of bodily weakness and pain. He is Stephen Grellet still, and the prayer of my heart is that I may be permitted through infinite mercy, all unworthy as I feel myself to be, to meet him once more, where there is no more death. Let me thank thee for a copy of Cortland Van Rensselaer's beautiful and worthy tribute to our dear friend. I have read it with great satisfaction. I have thought of writing to the author to thank him for his labor of love; but I hope thou wilt assure him of my sincere and hearty appreciation of his tribute.

Amesbury, First month 20th, 1856.

Later.—Enoch Lewis, Stephen Grellet and Richard Mott—what a loss our Society has sustained!—who can take their places?

Amesbury, 1st Eleventh month, '46.

My Dear William:

I hasten to thank thee for thy kind interest in my welfare, and to assure thee that the injury sustained by the accident was trifling. I took pains to have it kept from the papers, but it unfortunately got in spite of me. It occasioned me some pain, but is now well. The shot did not penetrate the bone, but glanced on it and passed out. I happened to stoop to pick up something at the moment, and the heavy part of the charge passed over me. It was certainly a narrow escape, and furnishes occasion for gratitude and thankful acknowledgment of renewed obligation to infinite goodness in sparing an unfaithful servant yet a little longer.

I was glad to hear from thee and thy dear wife, and aunts—and also from the venerable John Cox. Do remember me most affectionately to him; and tell him I shall never forget his kind words of sympathy and encouragement in the cause in which I was engaged when in your part of the country. I am very sorry I could not see him when I was at Burlington last winter.

I enclose thee some autographs, and a note from the ever to be remembered Clarkson to his friend—the last work of his pen!—which he did for the Philadelphia Fair. Please hand them to Elizabeth Nicholson agreeably to J. Sturge's request.

I have been rather more than usually unwell this fall; and at this moment am scarcely able to write a long letter. My sister's health is also very poor. She and mother desire to be affectionately remembered. Please say a kind word for me to all who are our mutual friends, and believe me, as ever, thy affectionate friend,

JOHN G. WHITTIER.

Dear Wm.:

If thou hast read Macaulay's History thou hast doubtless been pained by the studied effort of the author to reverse the decision of nearly two centuries with respect to Wm. Penn, and to represent him as a weak, vain sycophant, and the tool of a cruel tyrant.

It is important for the Truth's sake that this calumny should be met fully and decidedly, and put down, as I think it can be. Who will do it? Enoch Lewis? It will require a great amount of reading and laborious research, and to be read it must be presented in a garb as attractive, if possible, as the pen of Macaulay has made the libel. I almost felt myself like undertaking it; but I have no access here to books and documents, and my health is not equal to any serious effort. If answered at all, it must be done thoroughly. Mere contradiction and abuse of the historian will not answer. The facts must be presented plainly, clearly, impartially. If there is anything indefensible in Wm. Penn's connexion with James II., it must be frankly admitted, and the proper apology for it given. By the by, the character of James II. is as amply misrepresented, I think, as is W. P's. Do talk to thy brother, S. Rhoads, and Enoch Lewis about it. . . .

Remember me kindly to dear Stephen Grellet and to all enquiring fds.

Affly,

J. G. W.

Amesbury, 3d month 18th, '49.

My Dear Wm.:

I have to thank thee for two letters in answer to my note, and for the interest manifested in the matter upon which I consulted thee. I was exceedingly pleased with thy brother's views, and it has occurred to me that he would be a suitable person in connexion with E. Lewis to investigate the matter, and set it right. . . .

As for myself I fear it not in my power to do anything just now. I have been unable to read or write at all most of the time for the last six weeks, and now see no prospect of amendment, save in absolute rest. If I can I shall write for "The Era" a brief article on the second vol. of Macaulay, vindicating as I believe Truth requires W. P. I am sorry to hear that the health of E. Lewis is so feeble. Nothing would give me more pleasure than to be able to look over this whole matter with him, thyself and brother, but I am not now able to read a page without suffering, and writing is especially irksome.

I enclose for thee a notice of Macaulay from the pen of C. Sumner—as I believe "The Christian Examiner" briefly defends Penn from the charges of Macaulay. . . .

Thou wilt infer from what I have already said, that it is not in my power at present to do anything requiring study and labor. If Providence permits I may one day take it up in earnest. The truth is what we want. If the character of W. P. will not abide the test of investigation, let it fall. . . .

I am, as ever, thy friend,
JOHN G. WHITTIER.

FOR THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

THE ANCHOR OF THE SOUL.

BY MARY LOWE DICKINSON.

In his poem called "St. Paul" Frederic W. H. Myers asks:

What shall we do o'er whom the unbeholden
Hangs in a night with which we cannot cope,
But gaze on sunward, and with faces golden,
Comfort each other softly with a hope?

Not for all of us, thank God, and not always for any of us, does the unbeholden hang in a night with which we cannot cope. To those who live in eternal things—and remember, it is the unseen that is eternal—it rarely takes the aspect of shadows. When it does, it is the protecting shadow, like that of "a great rock in a weary land," instead of the cloud shadow that threatens the tempest.

We read that they who walked in the darkness saw a great light, but if the unseen hung over us always in night, the darkness would be too dense for walking; we could only grope, and should therefore know nothing except by the sense of actual contact. Now and then, we admit, there are souls to whom the unseen takes this aspect. To find God they are forced to feel after Him. They come into close personal touch with Him, and perhaps it would have been impossible for them to reach Him by the brighter way. Such seeking and finding has been voiced for us in lines like the following, called "Light in Darkness":

The fire burns low, the shadows gleam and fade,
And darkness fingers where the sunset played;
A hand of silence on my lips is laid—
I cannot find the Light!

My soul, consumed by sin's corroding rust—
My soul, that spurned the stars and loved the dust—
My soul, that longs at last for love and trust—
Is all I have to bring.

I strain my gaze now for one gleaming star;
I sit in darkness, with my door ajar,
That I may hear Thy footsteps from afar—
The footsteps of my King!

And I do hear, though clouds Thy visage hide;
I reach my hand out through the shadowy tide
Of doubts and fears, and, on the other side,
Lo! it is clasped in Thine.

I, shuddering, feel the nail-prints in the palm;
But, oh, the wound drops healing, and a balm
Of tenderness, that blesses with a calm
Of peace and love divine.

Pathetic as is the attitude of the soul that thus feels after God, and safe and tender as is the outstretched hand that leads to the light, yet groping like this must never be mistaken for "walking by faith," though both the groping and the walking are a substitute for sight, and are often mistaken one for the other by souls that have not tried them both. The utterance of the soul that gropes, feeling after God, "if haply it may find Him," is, "I am blind by the wayside. Oh, Lord, that I might receive back my sight"; while the song of the soul that walks by faith, is:

I would rather walk with God in the dark than walk alone in the light,

I would rather walk with God by faith than walk alone by sight.

In both cases the spirit comes under the power of the unseen; only, in one the unseen overshadows and haunts the soul with dreaded forms and fears, in the other case the soul dwells in the unseen, walking in faith and cheered by the light. But the unseen is not only what lies in the future beyond the grave, but what lies in the future this side the grave. Indeed, it is the chances, the advantages, the possible misfortunes, the suffering, the death, the partings, the human anguish of every sort, that are more apt to hang over us in a night haunted with the horror of dread and fear than the unbeholden that lies beyond the other side of death. That is sufficiently far beyond us for us to be able to trust it. It is the near-at-hand trouble, the "lion in the way," before which we quail.

Moreover, the unseen that pertains to the other world is less truly unseen than that which relates to this. The child of faith knows that over there the mansion is prepared. The reward waits. The suffering is at an end. But the divine provision for the unbeholden in this life lies more verily in the region of faith. It is in regard to the things of time, then, that we need to keep our faces sunward if we would help ourselves or if we would comfort each other.

Every forward step in life is a step into the unseen. We can keep our faces toward the shadows and move forward with shrinking and with fear. So truly as we do, our fear imparts itself to our fellow pilgrims on the road. Or we can turn our faces sunward, which is only another way of saying that we turn them Christward and Godward; and that is only another way of saying that we turn upon our trials and our shadows faces aglow with the mercy of God and the love of Christ. So doing, we are prepared not to grumble, not to be startled and overcome by whatever awaits us, not to stumble over any of the hidden difficulties of the way. On the contrary, we are ready to "comfort each other softly with a hope."

And after all there is no sweeter service that any one human soul can perform for other souls than that which is covered by these two hints: first, to gaze sunward, refusing to look at the darkness, letting the whole soul and spirit become saturated with the light of love and faith and joy, and then moving forward, to "comfort each other softly with a hope."

In a homely fashion some one has said, "A widespread umbrella of hope is the very best protection in this vale of tears." And, indeed, we know no better.

After the recent war with Spain a young soldier, whom his mother found at Camp Wikoff, and who was lifted into the car beside her and lay with his head on her lap while she carried him home, came, after weeks of nursing, to where he poured into his mother's heart the experiences of camp and field.

Among the stories that he told her was this: "Whatever happened to me, mother, as long as I could crawl I tried to help the others to keep courage, to try to live. You know Willie B., poor, dear fellow, who never ought to have enlisted. Well, I think I kept him alive two weeks simply by comforting him with the hope that he would be the next to go home. I believed it was true, for we had been told so. And as his life was more and more burned out with the fever, and he grew weaker and weaker every day, he would say, 'If you think they will send for us to-morrow, I think I can hold on,' and I would tell him how I hoped they would send for us to-morrow; and when to-morrow came he said, 'Do you think we will go to-morrow?' and again I told him that I thought it would be to-morrow.

"And little by little I thought I could see the strength coming back into him. He was so determined to live until he could get home—just once more to see his mother and his home. The thought of it was enough to keep him alive, and so, though I was coming down with the fever myself, when he begged me not to deceive him, and to come and tell him, I never failed to crawl to him, and say that I hoped it would be to-morrow. And so, mother, I kept him alive on the hope, until one day the officer, passing along behind me, heard me tell him that I hoped we would go to-morrow, and he said, 'Well, you are a young fool to hope it. If you get away from here in a month you'll be lucky.'

"Mother, as long as I live I shall never forget Willie's eyes, as he looked at me, so full of reproach. He thought I had deceived him, but I, too, believed we were going. I tried to talk to him, but he turned his face away from me, and in twenty minutes he was dead. It knocked the hope all out of me, too, mother, and before night I was crazy with the fever; nothing kept me alive except the hope that I would get back to you."

If there was this life-giving power in the human hope, how worthy then is the heavenly hope of being called "an anchor to the soul." The apostle speaks of it as "reaching within the veil," as "laying hold of the great eternal verities" that, going on within, or behind, the veil, have their place in the region of the unseen.

In there, beyond the veil, took place the great Sacrifice. There was the place of the eternal and unseen. Surely an anchor that laid hold of the eternal mysteries, typified by the altar and the sacrifice and the veil, went down through the sea of love and mercy outpoured for the sinning and suffering children of men, and laid hold upon the inmost heart of God.

Just two thoughts with regard to hope as an anchor to the soul.

The anchor has a two-fold use. So has the Christian hope. Its first use is as a safeguard and a strength and a steadiness and a quieting influence in the midst of the tides of trouble, the beating waves of disappointment and the tempests that bar the Christian's progress. But the anchor is not alone for the storm. It goes with the soul into the higher region of peace. When the journey is over and the ship has come to its desired haven, then has its anchor a higher and a nobler task. It was the hope that strengthened. It is now the hope that holds the soul in peace.

It has both an active and a passive function. It not only enters and controls the conditions of the strife, but on the one side it clasps hands with faith, and on the other with joy, and becomes the central figure in that peace of God which is the highest condition of the human soul out of Heaven.

"PARADISE WILL PAY FOR ALL."

(Last words of Samuel A. Purdie.)

From the charm of idle pleasure,
From Ambition's syren song,
From the rush for earthly treasure
Of the busy, careless throng;
In the dawn of life's fair morning
He had heard the Master's call:
"Yea, I come," his heart made answer,
"Paradise will pay for all."

So through years of toil and struggle
Walked he, faithful to his word;
Blameless life and kind entreaty
Leading many to the Lord.
Meeting dangers, bearing burdens,
Well might stoutest heart appal;
But to every doubt replying,
"Paradise will pay for all."

Now at eve, toil-spent and weary,
Pierced with pain, the pilgrim lay;
Watching still, with faith triumphant,
For the dawn of brighter day.
Then upon his ear there falleth
Once again the Master's call:
"Come up higher"; "Yea," he answers,
"Paradise will pay for all."

LIVES OUT OF TUNE.

The secret of a serene, strong, inspiring life is a life in perfect tune with God's keynote. Many a man has at least a subconsciousness of an imperfect adjustment of his life. Somewhere, in some way, self is grating against duty just enough to give a perhaps undefined impression of discord. And, just as one tosses aimlessly on the bed when uncomfortable in sleep, constantly seeking ease in new positions, so the imperfectly adjusted life is characterized by fitfulness, absent-mindedness, peevishness, cynicism—all symptoms of a craving for peace. Such a one usually has a vague expectancy that, some time or other, he too will possess such experiences as he hears described by others. Some day he too will reach his best estate, will live a life calm, strong, elevated above petty harassing. But that can be attained to now. Adjustment of the life to God's revealed plan is the remedy.—"Sunday School Times."

FRIENDS WEST OF THE MISSISSIPPI.—III.

BY M. Z. KIRK.

ACKWORTH AND BEAR CREEK QUARTERLY MEETINGS
IN IOWA.

As one visits such quarters as Ackworth and Bear Creek, it seems strange that only fifty years ago, this productive land was an open prairie. About this time the tide of emigration reached this portion of the state and a number of Friends settled near the present town of Ackworth, but this region was then known both far and near as the "Three River Country."

This rich, fertile land was soon taken up and the Friends who settled here have been very successful. They were very energetic in organizing the work of the church. Three Rivers Monthly Meeting was opened at South River, now Ackworth, Sixth month 30th, 1852, with Charles Hinshaw as clerk for the day. This meeting was held alternately here and at Middle River. The latter meeting has gone down. Those Friends and their families who were prominent during the early history of this meeting were, John Cook, Benjamin Smith, Joseph Smith, Athenatious Barnett, Samuel Owen, Joseph Cook, John T. Moorman, Robert Hodson, Joseph B. Carey, Elias Newlin, Jesse Barnett, John White, Wm. Pearson, Amos Bogue, George Haworth, Daniel Frazier, Solomon H. Wright, Jacob Moon, and others.

They showed their missionary spirit at the very first monthly meeting by appointing a committee to advise with and assist the poor. At their second meeting, numbers were received from Salem, Spring Creek, and Pleasant Plain, Iowa, and Vermillion Grove, Illinois. They also appointed a committee on education. They granted Elm Grove (now Indianola), an indulged meeting, Ninth month 29th, 1852. In Eleventh month of the same year, Lindley M. Hoag, of Sandwich Monthly Meeting, N. H., visited this Monthly Meeting. On Third month 30th, 1853, Martin Cook and Mary Jane Cook inform this meeting in writing that they intend marriage with each other, and this is the first wedding.

In 1853, Richard Mendenhall settled within the present limits of Bear Creek, and other Friends soon followed. The first public Friends' meeting was held at the home of Wm. Cook, in Seventh month, 1854. The meeting was appointed by Seth Barker, a traveling minister from North Carolina. A meeting was established and regular services have been held there ever since. They sent in their request for a Preparative Meeting to Three Rivers Monthly Meeting in Tenth month, 1854. A committee was subsequently appointed, and a meeting was established Fourth month 7th, 1855, at the home of John Cook. Those of the committee present were: Elias and Rhodema Newlin, Joseph B. Carey, and Joanna Cook. Wm. H. Cook was appointed clerk for the day. Joseph Cook informed the meeting that he had received $50 from James Farmer, of Ohio, to aid in building a meeting house at Bear Creek. A committee was immediately appointed to propose plans for the new house. A committee was also appointed to seat the meeting. Wm. H. Cook was appointed clerk and served two years.

In Third month 7th, 1855, the committee appointed to seat the meeting reported: Richard Mendenhall, first; John Cook, second; and David Bowles, Sr., third. The committee on plans for a house reported as follows:

A frame house 24 x 26, 10-foot story, walls sealed, weather-board rough, floor square joint, probable cost, $350.00.

The following apportionment list, given in the minutes of Fourth month 11th, 1855, gives the names of the pioneers in this meeting:

First class, 12 per cent., John Wilson, John Cook, George Smith, Joseph Cook.

Second class, 8 per cent., John Lee, Cyrus Bowles, David Bowles, Jr., John Lamb.

Third class, 5 per cent., Wm. H. Cook, Martin Cook, Richard Mendenhall, Calvin W. Carson, Samuel Wilson.

Fourth class, 3 per cent., Richard Cook, Joshua Thornton, Isaac Smith, Darius Bowles, David Bowles, Sr., Dugan White and Jesse Lee. Their direction from the monthly meeting was 16 per cent. The yearly meeting stock was $2.85; the Indian Committee stock was $1.54.

In Seventh month, 1855, Summitt Grove (now Stuart), requested Three Rivers Monthly Meeting for a preparative meeting. Bear Creek and Summitt Grove requested a monthly meeting to be known as Bear Creek Monthly Meeting. The request was granted Seventh month 9th, 1856. The first trustees were: Wm. H. Cook, Eli Scott, John Ramsey, and Wm. Kivett.

The following meetings were established and have been discontinued: Oak Land, East Grove, Middle Coon, Wiscotta; North Branch now belongs to the conservative. Union is now known as Earlham.

Samuel Lloyd held what was called a general meeting at North Branch.

The first revival work conducted by the Yearly Meeting's committee was carried on by John Y. Hoover, Laurie Tatum, and Elisha Smith, in Bear Creek Monthly Meeting. The new meeting house, which is one of the largest in Iowa Yearly Meeting, was built in 1873.

After discussing the monthly meetings, we are now ready to return to the establishing of the Quarterly Meeting. The following is taken from the minutes of Indiana Yearly Meeting: "By the report from Pleasant Plain Quarterly Meeting, it appears that Bear Creek and Three Rivers Monthly Meetings unite in requesting the establishing of a new Quarterly Meeting to be held on the second Seventh-day of Third, Sixth, Ninth, and Twelfth months, alternately at South River and Bear Creek, at South River in the Third, and Bear Creek in the Sixth months, etc., and called by the name of South River Quarterly Meeting of Friends. The said request having had the consideration of this meeting, we are united in appointing a committee to unite with a like committee of Women Friends to visit Pleasant Plain Quarterly Meeting and the monthly meetings which will comprise the new Quarter, and report their judgment as to granting the said request to next Yearly Meeting. The following Friends are therefore appointed: James Owen, David Hunt, Joseph D. Hoag, Jacob Griffin, Laurie Tatum, and Olney Thompson. Women Friends are: Lydia Thompson, Mary N. Tatum, Mary Rhodes, Mary Abbots, Julia Ann McCool, Hannah Mather, Amelia C. Darlington, Anna Pierson. The monthly Meetings are directed to make such adjournments as the committee may desire to suit their convenience in making the visit as aforesaid. By this time Rich Square Monthly Meeting had been established, and wished to be included in the new Quarter.

South River Quarter was composed of Bear Creek, Three Rivers (now Ackworth). Rich Square (now Smyrna and later Spring Grove), and Cottonwood, Kansas, were included.

The minutes of South River Quarter of Sixth month 8th, 1861, state that Spring Grove, Kas. and Cottonwood, Kas. Monthly Meetings wish to unite with Kansas Monthly Meeting (now Springdale, Kas.), in requesting the privilege of holding a Quarterly Meeting in the State of Kansas, to be known as the Kansas Quarterly Meeting of Friends, and to be held as follows: at Kansas meeting house in the Third and Ninth months, and at Cottonwood in the Sixth, and at Spring Grove in the Twelfth month, which claiming the solid consideration of this meeting, it united with the request and directed the same forwarded to our ensuing yearly meeting.

This little sketch makes no claim of a complete history, but only a few notes of interest.

We see from the above how rapidly Friends were pushing to the West about 1860. The meetings mentioned have all belonged to Indiana Yearly Meeting. Those in Iowa became a part of Iowa Yearly Meeting, and those in Kansas a part of Kansas Yearly Meeting.

The territory then covered by South River Quarter is now made up of Ackworth, Bear Creek and Des Moines Quarters in Iowa, and Springdale, Hesper, Cottonwood, and Buffalo in Kansas. From these have been set off many other meetings. Thus we have been enabled to trace the line of emigration from Indiana through Iowa to Kansas Yearly Meeting, and the two little monthly meetings have grown into great Quarterly Meetings.

In connection with this article we are glad to give a little sketch of the life of one of the oldest members in the Three Rivers country.

Charles Newlin was born at Springfield, Ohio, the 4th of the Seventh month, 1822. His parents, John and Esther Newlin, were members of the Religious Society of Friends. Elias was a twin brother in a family of twelve children, one brother and sister being younger than the twin boys. Being deprived of a father's love when a small boy, his mother thought best to go West, and sold the homestead and moved to Indiana and settled in limits of Sugar Grove in Hendryx County.

On the 12th of the Sixth month, 1843, he was married to Rodema Lewis, whose home was at Mill Creek, thirteen miles from Sugar Grove. In the autumn of 1850, he and his wife removed to Iowa, and at what was then called Three Rivers Settlement, where they improved a good farm; remaining on it forty-five years, and where they saw a flourishing meeting grow up, afterwards named Middle River Meeting.

He was converted in his twenty-ninth year in a Silent Meeting at Sugar Grove. They buried their only child a few months before moving to Iowa, a little girl seventeen months old. They both came forth in the ministry while young in life and they were very faithful in the attendance of their Monthly and Quarterly Meetings, which at that day occasioned a great deal of travel. Their first extended visit was in the year 1860, to Ohio; from that time until the winter of 1872, they traveled almost continually.

In the winter of 1872, his wife took to her bed, little thinking that her public work was done. She had it on her mind to visit all the meetings on the American continent, and she thought for a few years that she would get well, and be able to realize the desire of her heart, but she with her husband gradually acquiesced to the ministry of pain and solitude. After her death he was married again, and they now live in a very pleasant home in Indianola. They attended Kansas Yearly Meeting this fall. He is a man who has always taken a deep interest in the church and especially in education, being one of the strong friends of Penn College.

FOR THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

A WINTER MESSAGE.

As I look on the snow and its crystalline flakes,
Falling steadily, softly down,
I wonder how many God's artists it takes
To fashion and send all around
Such dainty and pure, ethereal-like stars,
So delicately, carefully wrought,
That not e'en the fall on old earth ever mars
The Creator's own crystallized thought.

Not an artist from God, howe'er skilful and willing,
And eager his task to complete,
Could send down from heaven, the atmosphere filling,
The snowflakes so winged and fleet.
'Tis alone that Power which all things created,
Makes perfect minutest details,
And should his supervision for once be abated,
Then nothing the snowflake avails.

So then fall, fall on gently, white pinions from heaven,
And this be thy message to man,
That the dear Lord above to whom all power is given,
Has for all His own perfect plan.
There's never a flake falls through space unmolested,
But is guided by Light from above,
And never a soul howe'er bruised or tested
But is moulded by Infinite love.

The Feast of Tabernacles was a feast of thanksgiving. It was held at the time of harvest, and was for the purpose of celebrating this fact and for giving thanks to the Lord of the harvest. It was also in commemoration of the Jewish people dwelling in tents in the wilderness, and a time of thanksgiving for settled abodes. "It was the most joyous of all the festivals." All, except those who were excused on account of physical inability, were expected to dwell in booths or tabernacles. These were huts made of the boughs of trees, and were erected in the streets, when wide enough, squares, courtyards, and even on the flat roofs of the houses. The branches of the olive, palm, pine, myrtle and other trees with thick foliage were used. The feast lasted from the 15th to 22d of the Tisri. This corresponded to our late September and early October. There are a number of references to the feast in the Old Testament. Ex. 23: 16; Lev. 23: 34-36, 39-43; Neh. 8: 13-18, etc.

As the Feast of Tabernacles was about five months after the Passover, there is an interval of that time between the last lesson and the present. See John 6: 4; 7: 2. If, as is likely, the feast began October 11th, in A. D. 29, the date of the present lesson would be October 17th.

14. "But when it was now the midst of the feast." Revised Version. Possibly the fourth day. "Into the temple." The temple court. It is not known whether he had been in Jerusalem some days or not. "Taught." He proclaimed his doctrine openly.

28. Verses 15-26 should be read to get the connection. "Jesus therefore cried in the temple." Revised Version. Lifted up his voice so as to attract attention. The change in the Revised Version from "then" to "therefore," shows the special reason of his crying out. It was because of the total misconception of his previous words, "Ye both know me," etc. Several constructions have been given to these words; some think they are ironical; some that they are interrogative; some a mingling of these two; others that they are reproachful; and some that they are the simple statement of a fact. The last is, on the whole, most satisfactory. The Jews knew much about his outward life (John 6: 42), but there were spiritual facts about which they knew nothing. This meaning is brought out still more if we read the following clause thus: "And (yet) I am not come of myself." The "and" introduces a contrast; compare verse 30, Revised Version. "Ye know not." They did not really know God any more than they knew Christ.

29. "I" is emphatic in contrast with "ye" of verse 28. I have been with him, I came from him. Compare Matt. 11: 27.

30. Literally, "They keep seeking." Watched for every opportunity. "They," are probably the rulers, the members of the Sanhedrin, as is indicated by the next verse. "Because," etc. They were restrained from seizing him, because he had not yet fulfilled his divine mission; the immediate reason was that they feared the people. Compare Matt. 21: 26.

31. "But of the multitude." Revised Version. As compared with the rulers. So far as their belief went, it seems to have been sincere. "Miracles." "Signs." Revised Version.

32. "The Pharisees heard the multitude muttering these things." Revised Version. The Pharisees themselves heard the people disputing and discussing; it was hearsay evidence. The condensed narrative would imply that these Pharisees went to the Sanhedrin and reported what they heard, and then the Sanhedrin sent officers to arrest him. This appears to be the first official attempt to arrest Christ.

33. "Jesus therefore said." Revised Version. In consequence of the attempt to arrest him. "Yet a little while." I must remain on earth for a short time longer. It was until the next Passover, about six months. "And then I go." "Go" is here used in the sense of withdrawn.

34. "Ye shall seek me," etc. Here, too, there have been several interpretations: (1) That Christ refers to the hostile search for him which would not be successful; (2) a penitential seeking when it will be too late; (3) a search for the Messiah when they had rejected Jesus. Of these the latter commends itself most—the days would come when they would desire the Messiah, and could not have him, because they had put him to death—the primary reference is to a temporal, not a spiritual Messiah. These words give no warrant for the doctrine that an earnest spiritual search may be in vain.

35. "Whither will this man go that we shall not find him? will he go unto the Dispersion among the Greeks, and teach the Greeks?" Revised Version. The Dispersion generally means the Jews who were scattered abroad. See Jas. 1: 1; 1 Pet. 1: 1. Here, in the original it is quite possible to read it "the dispersion of the Greeks"—that is, the wide scattered Greeks. The verse would then read, "the dispersion of the Greeks, and teach the Greeks." The contrast being between the chosen Jews and the Gentile Greeks. The sentence would be highly sarcastic. The Revisors take the first interpretation, but imply the possibility of the second in the margin.

36. "This." Spoken contemptuously.

37. "Now on the last day, the great day of the feast." Revised Version. The feast being held for seven days, the last day would naturally be the seventh, but on the eighth day, which was kept as a Sabbath (Lev. 23: 36), the people left their booths with rejoicing; it was also the closing of the festivals of the year, and most commentators regard the eighth day as the one on which Jesus spoke the following words.

There was a custom of drawing water from the Pool of Siloam, and pouring it out upon the altar of burnt offering. Jesus probably refers to this. Compare Isaiah 12: 3. "If any man thirst." Wide as the statement is, it is conditioned upon desire—there must be thirst, which is longing. It has been said by those who have experienced it, that no suffering is greater than thirst, so no word can express a stronger desire. "Let him come unto me and drink." There must be a voluntary coming to Christ, and a voluntary partaking before spiritual life comes. Rev. 22: 17.

PRACTICAL THOUGHTS.

1. Christ is the source of spiritual power.
2. Faith in Christ is the condition of spiritual power.
3. Believers in Christ should be channels of spiritual power. See John 7: 38.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC FOR SECOND MONTH TWENTY-SIXTH.

PALM-TREE CHRISTIANS.

Ps. 92: 1-15.

Second-day, Second month 20th. Known by fruit. Luke 6: 43-45.
Third-day, Second month 21st. Chosen to bear fruit. John 15: 14-22.
Fourth-day, Second month 22d. Fruits of righteousness. Phil. 1: 1-11.
Fifth-day, Second month 23d. Fruit of the Spirit. Gal. 5: 22-26.
Sixth-day, Second month 24th. Fruit in its season. Ps. 1: 1-3.
Seventh-day, Second month 25th. Not ceasing to bear fruit. Jer. 17: 7, 8.

In any oriental or semi-tropical landscape where great stretches of barren, sandy soil produce only lowly shrubs, and there is no relief to the eye in the weary monotony, the sight of the tall, straight palm with its crown of evergreen leaves, its promise of refreshing shade and abundant fruitage is most welcome to the weary traveler. No wonder that it furnished to an oriental language, ever rich in similes, one of its most expressive figures of the perfect life. Together with the cedar of Lebanon, whose greenness, fragrance, utility for building material, and great longevity, made it an equally expressive illustration, the two suggest the essential traits of a Christian life.

A palm tree is always upright. It grows only at the top; hence it is ever reaching higher and higher, a true illustration of the Christian life. A shrub sprawls all over the ground, the prey of all its enemies and distorted by every environment. A palm reaches up beyond its enemies, and grows in the clear space above. A palm is ever green. It must have a large amount of moisture; hence its presence denotes abundant supplies of water beneath the surface. So a Christian must draw largely upon the grace of God if he would flourish. A palm is a tree striking in appearance. A Christian cannot hide himself. He is a city set on a hill, a light on a candlestick, a palm in the desert. The power to stand upright for God, to stand alone, to stand out boldly in business, in social life, in school,—this above all is the virtue most needed by tens of thousands of those who profess Christ. Too many of those who profess His name are apologizing for it rather than faithfully witnessing for him. A palm differs from almost all other trees, in that its life is on the inside. Girdle any one of our forest trees and it dies, but a palm may be girdled, burnt round with fire, cut deeply, yet it lives right on undisturbed by such treatment. Its life is at the heart. So with a true Christian; his life is at the heart. No outward afflictions, trials or adversities can touch the vital forces of his spiritual life. A palm tree is one of the most fruitful of all trees. Its great rich clusters of dates make it a treasure to the dweller in the desert. It bears most abundantly even to old age. Indeed it grows better when its branches are weighted down. There is all the more room for the new leaves to shoot upward and catch the light and air. No tree can be put to a greater variety of uses. Its fibre is used in a variety of ways. Its branches are used for thatching, its fruit for food. It is an oriental saying that the palm has as many uses as there are days in the year.

The sum of it all is that a palm tree Christian is a vigorous, outspoken, healthful, useful, victorious Christian, living above the world, yet a blessing to the world, triumphing over temptation and adversity, and always fruitful unto every good work. Do not be a mere shrub, a heath in the desert. God means for us to be planted in the courts of his house, not in the deserts of worldliness.

THE ZIONIST MOVEMENT.

The second Zionist Congress, held in Basle last fall, was considered by those interested in it as a landmark in the history of the Jews. Seven hundred members were present as the representatives of 900 associations. Every association having the power to send a delegate must have at least 100 members. The majority have over 500, some of them 2,000 and even 3,000, there being thus about 300,000 Zionist members, each the head of a Jewish family, and as these Jewish families are proverbially large, it is estimated that about 1,500,000 Jews were represented in this second conference in Basle, or about one-fifth of all the Jews in the world, the delegates coming from every quarter of the earth. . . . The leader, Dr. Herzl, is a well known journalist and author. . . . The object of the conference was to discuss the means of securing a legal and safe-guarded home for Jews in Palestine. A question before them was how to educate a homogeneous mass of units into the best possible condition, mentally, morally, and physically, so as to be in a position to form themselves into an independent state, and how to secure that state by all lawful means. They formed a Jewish Colonial Bank, with a capital of $10,000,000, to be used in starting commercial enterprises, banks, mines, insurance; establish companies, railways, as well as colonies in Palestine and Syria. The bank is not philanthropic, but commercial, looking to opening factories, working the iron and coal mines, and making fertile the whole desert from the Jordan to the Euphrates, the huge granary which might produce grain enough to feed a continent.—Dr. Gracey, in "The Missionary Review."

News from the Field.

PHILADELPHIA YEARLY MEETING.

Philadelphia, Pa.—A meeting in the interest of foreign missions, held in Twelfth Street Meeting House on the evening of Second month 1st, was greatly favored with the presence of Robert E. Speer, Secretary of the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions.

The meeting was opened with Scripture reading and prayer by Anna Rhoads Ladd. She gave a short history of the Women's Foreign Missionary Association of Friends of Philadelphia, which has recently dropped the word women's from its name, and has now a membership of both men and women. The Association lends a little aid to the work of both English and New England Friends in the East, but its chief task is the support of its own mission in Japan. In Tokio it has a mission property upon which are a girls' boarding and day school, a meeting-house, etc., and in two towns north of Tokio are out-stations.

The Association appeals for $700 more this year in order to carry on its work. The missionaries who are in the field at present are Joseph and Sarah Cosand, Mary Ann Gundry and Edith Dillon. Gurney Binford, who is supported in this field by Canada Yearly Meeting, is in America this year. Minnie Pickett returned last summer, and after an extensive visit here she returned to her home in Glen Elder, Kansas, where she was married to Gilbert Bowles, of Penn College, the Secretary of the Christian Endeavor mission work of the Friends of America.

Robert E. Speer was then introduced, and he held the undivided attendance of the meeting for more than a half hour. His trip around the world in visiting the various mission fields has helped to make him the most able speaker in America on missions. He speaks with the deepest conviction upon this subject. Every sentence is freighted with thought and information. In a few well-chosen words he would give us a sweeping view of hundreds of thousands of heathen for whom Christ died just as much as he died for us. We are all glad to accept God's promises to us, but we forget that his word refers to us just as much where he says, "Go preach the Gospel to every people." If a railroad train had started at the rate of twenty-five miles an hour the day Christ was born, and had been running ever since, it would not have run as many miles as there are heathen to-day.

There are one hundred and ten times as many heathen in China alone as there are, not books of the Bible, or chapters, or verses, or lines or words, but letters.

In a three-weeks' tour through a portion of China he could often look out over the plains and see scores of villages with from 1,000 to 50,000 inhabitants without a single missionary. Did not Christ die for those poor heathen as much as for us?

About seventy years ago the Baptist Church split because a part of them believed in foreign missions while the other thought they had enough to do at home.

The former branch has grown and multiplied, until to-day it numbers between four and five millions, while the latter has had a struggle to hold its own.

The spirit of missions is the spirit of Christ. After his address a few of the Friends took part in the services. The Friends here very much appreciated this unusual opportunity, and Robert E. Speer's presence was indeed a great blessing to the Association.

OHIO YEARLY MEETING.

Adrian Quarterly Meeting, Mich., was held at Raisin Valley, Second month 4th and 5th, 1899.

The attendance was smaller than usual on account of the prevalence of la grippe.

We were glad to welcome among us our dear brother and sister, Alfred H. Bartlett and wife, who formerly resided here, but whose home has been in Nebraska for several years. Their visit is truly appreciated by their many friends.

On Seventh-day Brother Bartlett preached from Romans 8: 2, showing the privilege and duty of the Christian to know of complete deliverance from the power of inbred sin.

We had also with us on First-day our brother, Jonathan Jay, from Indiana. He spoke from Hebrews 6: 1-3, encouraging Christians to go on unto perfection, and be faithful to do whatever work God is calling for at their hands. Brother Bartlett followed, by suggesting that some might be present who had not yet got onto the foundation, and were not ready to go on unto perfection, and they needed to be sure that they were building on the atonement made by Christ on the cross, else all the edifice they might seek to build by going on would fall to the ground. Jacob Baker followed by comparing the six principles of the doctrine of Christ mentioned in Hebrews 6 to the six fundamental principles of arithmetic, upon which the solution of all mathematical problems rest, and that unless these are thoroughly mastered any attempts at progress are worthless, and applied it to unite the two lines of thought presented by the previous speakers. Others followed, and we felt that we had truly partaken of a feast of fat things.

At two o'clock we listened to an address given by Lena Stanley on the mission work being carried on at Nanking, China, by the Friends of Ohio Yearly Meeting. She is visiting her friends, after spending several years connected with the work at that place. We were made glad by the progress of the work in that far-off land, and to know that many are leaving their heathen worship and accepting Christ. Glad also to know that our sisters are happy in their work, even amid the darkness and superstition that surrounds them, and that the protection and blessing of God is resting upon their labors.

MARY C. WOOD.

Olena, Ohio.—We have had with us Evangelists N. C. McLean and wife, C. E. McLean, of Toledo, Ohio, who conducted six days' revival services in our town. These evangelists were greeted by large audiences, who gave marked attention to the preaching and singing of these earnest workers. Quite a number of our citizens became greatly interested in these services, who have not been accustomed to attending church service, and although a committee selected from the different churches tried to arrange to have these evangelists remain for a general revival, it could not be done, and there is a deep regret not only among our Christian people, but among the unconverted, among whom are some of our most prominent citizens.

BALTIMORE YEARLY MEETING.

Pretlow, Va.—Since our last Yearly Meeting in Baltimore we have had with us several ministering Friends, whose communications have been both instructive and helpful, for which we feel thankful. Eli Parker gave us a most excellent Peace discourse, which was very grateful to the lovers of that precious doctrine.

MARY J. D. PRETLOW.

WILMINGTON YEARLY MEETING.

Sabina, Ohio.—A very interesting series of meetings were held here from First month 15th to Second month 3d. They were in charge of Morton C. Pearson pastor of this meeting, who had the hearty support and co-operation of the membership in a very marked degree. We feel a great work has been accomplished. The membership have deepened in spiritual things. Some careless and indifferent ones have been aroused to a sense of their duty and privilege and have taken advanced ground. From the first a spirit of conviction rested upon many of the unsaved. Of these sixteen definitely identified themselves as seekers of salvation, thirteen of whom gave evidence of having not only sought, but found Jesus as their Saviour. The meeting was characterized by deep, serious thought and earnestness. The Gospel message from time to time was clear, forcible and convincing, and was accompanied with the unction and power of the Holy Spirit. A very interesting feature of the work were the meetings held after the congregation of the evening had been dismissed. To these "after meetings" all who were interested in themselves or others were invited to remain. Not only did the members very generally remain, but also many unsaved ones, and the opportunities thus afforded of coming in close touch with those whom the Holy Spirit was striving with proved very helpful and blessed occasions. We believe others were interested and brought under the influence and power of the meetings, with lasting benefit, who as yet have not been garnered. We sincerely hope the harvest time will soon come when they, too, shall be gathered in. Ten persons have given their names for membership, either by certificate, letter or request, with others to follow. Morton C. Pearson, our beloved pastor, is now engaged in his third year of work with us, and the Lord is abundantly blessing his labors. E. H. F.

CANADA YEARLY MEETING.

Hartney, Manitoba Province, Canada.—The Lord is wonderfully blessing us in our work in this part of the province of Manitoba. The Home Mission Committee of Canada Yearly Meeting helped me to obey the call of the Master to this part of His vineyard. Friends are much scattered, but we have a good meeting and well attended. During the warm weather the building would not hold all who attended our meetings. Many people sat in their wagons under the open windows. Now the cold of the Manitoba winter is on us and our meetings are small. On the 8th I drove eight miles to our first meeting. It was 32 degrees below zero and a strong east wind blowing. Twelve came out. In the afternoon I drove six miles. Thirteen came out. Then I drove seven miles and there were thirty. We established a Monthly Meeting on the 3d of this month. Twelve Friends met and sat down to worship before we proceeded to establish the meeting. Our hearts were tendered under the Spirit's power and influence. Many tears fell as our thoughts went back to the last Monthly Meeting we attended years ago in Ontario or Ireland. We said, "Surely the Lord is with us and is blessing us to-day, and we, though small in numbers, take courage and press on in the work, knowing in whom alone we are trusting."

We ask an interest in the prayers of all Friends that God will bless us in His work, and send us funds to erect a small meeting house, which is necessary for our work here. Who will help us?

ALMA G. DALE.

OREGON YEARLY MEETING.

Rosedale, Oregon.—Oregon Yearly Meeting is composed of two Quarterly Meetings, Newberg, with seven meetings, and Salem, with five. Charles E. Lewis is pastor at Newberg, which is a large meeting. He has done good work the past year. The interest and attendance are increasing. Edwin Morrison has been at Cheholm Center the past year. He has done good, earnest work. Herbert and Sadie Cash held meetings there through the holidays, with good results. S. S. Lewis is laboring at Sherwood and Middleton. Those two meetings are located two miles apart. Brother Lewis is working up quite an interest in those two places. Spring Brook is two miles east of Newberg. Mary Jane Newlin is living here, and takes part in the work. S. S. Lewis has been attending there twice in the month. Anson Cox held meetings there twelve days, closing on the 4th of First month, which was a great encouragement to them. There are some very good Friends there. Portland Meeting is located in Sunny Side, East Portland. Aaron Bray is located there as pastor, and is doing good work. There is good spiritual life manifest in the meeting. Dundee is a small meeting two or three miles southwest of Newberg. A number have moved away from there. Brother and Sister Cash go this week to hold meeting there. Charles Scott is located at Salem. Anson Cox, Benjamin Coppock have been holding meetings there the last two weeks. They were assisted the last week by Brother and Sister Cash. The meeting closed on Sabbath evening, but we have not heard what success. Scott's Mills, located twenty-miles northeast of Salem is a very live meeting, though not nearly so large as it once was, so many having moved away from there. Anson Cox has been pastor there for two years. Prune Ridge is a small meeting, six miles southeast of Scott's Mills. Doctor Minthorn lives there, and is doing good, active work. Marion is a nice meeting, located sixteen miles south of Salem. There are quite a number of earnest Friends there. Frank Hinshaw is pastor. Charles Townson has given the account of Rosedale. I have been visiting the meetings and a great many of the homes this fall and winter, and can truly say there is good reason for encouragement. With very little exception there is a hearty feeling of union and fellowship throughout. The Quarterly Meeting at both places in the Eleventh month were times of great spiritual uplift and refreshing. J. H. Douglas was present at both places, and had good service. We praise the Lord for sending Brother and Sister Cash to us.

CHARLES BALDWIN,
Y. M. Superintendent.

CALIFORNIA YEARLY MEETING.

Whittier, Cal.—Thinking that some things of recent occurrence in this, the youngest Yearly Meeting, might be of interest to many, I write:

The bountiful rain that came early in the year revived the business outlook in nearly all lines. The usual drought of last year, and the scant rains before New Year's, caused even many of the old settlers to fear that another dry year was coming, but now good cheer and hope prevail. Friends generally desire that in some way our appreciation and endorsement of the Czar's peace proposition may be given, and the representatives have been asked to memorialize the President and Cabinet, expressing our views.

The request for Friends to assist in building a mission chapel some eight miles from Whittier, and near the town of Narwath, New River District, has not only been accepted, but by the faithful work of a few, the house (20x30) was enclosed, and ready for dedication New Year's Day, with the entire cost provided for, and with the half acre of ground deeded to California Yearly Meeting. The outlook is quite encouraging. Brother B. F. Farquhar is to serve as pastor of this work as soon as he is able. He is just recovering from some weeks' confinement with typhoid fever.

For some time it has appeared that the faithful seed-sowing of Caroline N. Hunnicutt, pastor at El Modena, was ripening for harvest. So on the 16th of last month a series of meetings began, in charge of Yearly Meeting Evangelist Superintendent, and continued until the evening of the 31st. Although there was much sickness in the neighborhood, and many Friends were thus prevented from attending, yet much interest was manifested from the first, and the plain, earnest presentation of the Gospel, under divine blessing, brought conviction to many, about twenty of whom accepted the terms of life and salvation, and received Jesus as their Saviour, rejoicing in His name.

Most of our meetings are in a prosperous condition. In three smaller meetings steps are being taken to build or buy suitable property for parsonage. At Ramona the Friends have sowed some forty-five acres of grain, the returns of which is to be used for parsonage.

While California is titled the Golden State, there seems to be no superabundance of that bustal for some months now. This fact will doubtless effect the evangelistic work in the Yearly Meeting this year, as the long distances of some of our meetings means considerable expense.

Los Angeles Friends have secured a very desirable lot, on which they are planning to build a suitable church building as soon as the necessary means can be secured.

The next session of Pasadena Quarterly Meeting is to be held by adjournment at Friends' Chapel in Los Angeles.

LEVI GREGORY.

IOWA YEARLY MEETING.

Marshalltown, Iowa.—The fourth Educational Conference, held by the three academies—Le Grande, New Providence and Hartland—under the auspices of Bangor and Honey Creek Quarterly Meetings, occurred at Le Grand on the 4th inst. Of these academies, Le Grande is the older, having been doing academical work some twenty-eight years, and New Providence like work eighteen years, while Hartland is scarcely out of the cradle of its infancy. Directly and indirectly these schools have exerted a very helpful and extensive influence. Not a few who are successful educators or active Christian workers began their higher education in one or another of these academies.

An excellent program had been prepared for this occasion, and as well prepared papers were presented. In her discussion on the subject, "Can the Self-government Idea be Applied to Secondary Schools," R. Ella Naylor gave an inside view of Bryn Mawr College, having had personal experience in that famous institution. An elaborate address by Prof. Benjamin L. Miller, of Penn College; "How to Cultivate the Use of Good English"; "The Importance to the Youth of a Better Knowledge of the Body and its Proper Care," and other subjects of kindred interest, claimed the attention of the Convention. Those in attendance could not fail to gather new courage and higher aspirations to reach greater efficiency in their chosen field of work, whether along educational lines, in literature, or in science.

E. B. MENDENHALL.

Springdale Quarterly Meeting opened at 2 p.m. on Sixth-day, 3d of Second month. A deep and living silence covered our minds, broken by a very impressive prayer by Jesse Lloyd. Other prayers followed, mingled with songs of praise, and Brother Lloyd spoke to us on the line of saving souls through us as God's instruments.

John Pearson thought that the reason James and John were called the sons of thunder was because they were so filled with divine electricity.

Gilbert L. Pinkham said it gave him great comfort to be here, and he wanted to indorse the truth brought before us by those who had spoken. The great work has been done by those who have most fully trusted in the leadings of the Holy Spirit for their messages for the people. He referred to the power of J. J. Gurney and Spurgeon, who were men eminently led by the Holy Spirit, "we cannot afford as a church to depart from the thought of being led by the blessed Holy Spirit in our ministry, both as to the subject and wisdom to deliver the message."

Brother Hadley said the great secret seemed to be for us to know God, be true and obey Him. His hand is not shortened that it cannot save, but the sword must be used under the leadings of the Holy Spirit. We need side helps that we may better understand the word.

The thought was brought before us that if we expected to have a living gospel ministry, we must have living Elders filled with the Holy Ghost, who can hold the ministers up before God in prayer.

John Fry united with the thought of praying elders for the help and strength of the ministers. We feel it when they pray.

The meeting on Seventh-day morning opened with songs of praise, followed by the reading of the 10th chapter of Hebrews. Jesse Lloyd spoke from the 9th chapter of Acts, 20th verse, and he showed that our preaching must not be to please men.

Reference was made to the overflowing of the tide of divine life in the early days of the Society of Friends.

Charles White asked us this serious question, "What is the trouble with us?" He was afraid we kept the salt too closely barreled up inside the church. We do not go enough among the people of the world.

The sermon First-day morning by Jesse Lloyd was an evidence of God's goodness—a demonstration of what He can do with or through a minister when he is willing to be led like a child by the Holy Spirit. The Missionary and Endeavor services were times of blessing.

J. Y. HOOVER.

Hartland, Iowa.—On Sabbath morning, First month 22d, Chas. Wright, of Indiana, began a series of meetings at this place, continuing until Second-day evening of the next week. The brother's preaching and labors among us was accompanied with much power, which resulted in greatly strengthening the membership, and the special blessing of twelve souls. Several who did not then yield to the Master are still under deep conviction, and we are praying and believing they will soon be saved. Previous to the coming of our brother at our Sabbath evening service seven souls were saved, some of whom, though young in years, are taking their place in the front ranks and the Lord is blessing them. All glory to Him. Bangor Quarterly Meeting is to be held at this place from 24th to 26th of Second month.

JENNIE E. KIRBY.

WESTERN YEARLY MEETING.

Central Academy, at Plainfield, Ind., is in a very prosperous condition, under the management of Freeman Cox, of Columbus, Ind., as principal, Robert L. Kelly having been allowed a year's absence to pursue his studies at the University of Chicago. The enrollment for the winter term is 82; most of these are in the Academic Department. Some of these are pursuing post-graduate work.

Murray N. Hadley, as principal of Union High Academy, in Westfield, Ind., is pushing the interest of the school vigorously forward. The prospect for this Academy to develop into a strong institution and to become a centre of educational interest only lacks the hearty co-operation of the church in Hamilton County, Ind.

Allen D. Hole is successfully teaching a private school at Sand Creek, near Azalia, Ind. The work done is of a most substantial character.

A few persons desirous to be Friends, formerly members, residing in Washington, in Southern Indiana, have rented a suitable room, and have been regularly holding meetings on the Sabbath for some weeks. Recently David Hadley, James Jones and Cyrus Jones were with them in their meetings on Seventh-day evening, and three times on Sabbath. There seems to be an opening here for Friends to enter and garner results. W. H. Witty, one of these members, formerly resided at Van Wert, Ohio, and was recorded a minister there.

David Hadley, General Superintendent, recently attended New London and Kokomo Quarterly Meetings, arranging plans for collecting funds for the Building Fund of Western Yearly Meeting.

Sylvester Newlin is being greatly blessed of the Lord in his pastoral work at Kokomo, Ind.

David Hadley held special dedicatory service in the recently repaired house in Russiaville; also similar services were held in South Kokomo, in the house purchased to be used as a meeting-house for the meeting recently organized, known as Courtland Avenue.

John L. Kittrell is now aiding in a series of meetings at Plainfield, Ind.

Samuel P. Tolbert has recently assisted in holding a meeting at Russiaville, Ind.

Mary W. Couch, pastor of the meeting at Kempton, Ind., has recently held a very satisfactory meeting at that place. As a result of these meetings the church was greatly blessed with thirty-five conversions and renewals, and twenty accessions to the church.

Thomas W. Truman, of Sheridan, Ind., has spent some time in evangelistic work in Orange County, Ind. He was called home on account of sickness in his family.

Zeno H. Doan has assisted the pastor, Leonora Hobson, of Stanton Meeting, Ill., in holding a very deeply spiritual meeting, at which many were saved.

Kokomo Quarterly Meeting was held at Kokomo First month 28th, and was a time of unusual blessing. Several ministers were acceptably with us, but the public service devolved mainly on our beloved evangelistic superintendent, David Hadley. He preached in the power of the Spirit, on Seventh- and First-days, and we were encouraged in the manifestation of the Lord's presence, and the realization that He is still in the midst of His church anointing His servants, and speaking through their lips words suited to the needs of His people.

The meeting house on Courtland Avenue was dedicated on First-day evening, the services being conducted by David Hadley. The meeting held here has but recently been organized, and is the outgrowth of an interesting Sabbath School and home mission work that has been carried on in the neighborhood for the past few years. Among the faithful laborers who have given their service to this field grateful mention is due to the untiring faithfulness of Dr. Samuel T. Kirk, who has superintended the Sabbath School and given much attention to other departments of the work. A private Bible class is now regularly conducted at this place by Martha Wasol and Josie Hockett, of Kokomo Meeting. Praise the Lord.

ESTHER TUTTLE PRITCHARD.

Westfield Quarter.—My attention has been called to the difference between the number of members of the church and the number of scholars in our Bible schools. In the minutes of our Yearly Meeting we find less than half of our members in the Bible School, and no reason given for the difference except non-resident members. This did not satisfy me. I studied the subject quite a good deal, and looked after the matter more closely than ever before.

Consequently I wrote out the following list of questions to be answered by every school in our Quarter. After much work and thought on the subject by persons appointed in each school, all the questions were answered, and read in our Quarterly Conference on Bible School work, which created much interest. One of the greatest benefits derived from this work is that we find out just how many more members might be in our schools, and it points them out definitely to the committee and others interested. We have ten schools in our Quarter, but I simply give totals.

1. Number of members in your meeting? 1,645.
2. Number of non-resident members? 328.
3. Number of scholars in the Bible School members of the church? 677.
4. Number of members of the church who do not attend any school? 640.
5. Number who do not attend who have reasonable excuses for their non-attendance? 208.
6. Number that could but do not attend? 418.

Paoli, Ind.—Myron Y. Hartley, of Wabash, Ind., has just closed one of the best series of meetings, of two weeks' duration, that was ever held at Paoli, Ind., and "Blue River Quarter." The teaching was so definite that our church is now on a substantial foundation as never before, Christ being the chief "corner-stone." We were warned against fanaticism and a one-sided gospel, there being a tendency in that direction in some localities.

CYRUS JONES.

NEW YORK YEARLY MEETING.

J. Walter and Emma B. Malone began a series of meetings in Brooklyn Meeting-house, a week ago last First-day.

INDIANA YEARLY MEETING.

Joseph O. Binford, the new Superintendent of Evangelistic and Pastoral Work, is visiting various parts of the Yearly Meeting, and it is reported that his visits and labors are edifying to those who are visited.

Samuel C. Mills has entered upon his work as pastor at Knightstown, and finds the change of work profitable to his health. His labors are appreciated by the membership with whom he is engaged in service.

Charles Stalker, after holding helpful series of meetings at Marion and Fairmount, began a series at Knightstown, which was cut short by the death of his uncle, to whose funeral he was called. At last accounts he was engaged in meetings at Carmel, in Western Yearly Meeting.

Adella Lindley, a valued member of Fairmount Meeting, died on the 2d inst. She had greatly enjoyed the divine blessings poured out upon the church at the meetings recently held. Her death came suddenly, and with a shock brought grief to her many friends. She is the daughter of Abigail Hobson, a well-known minister.

The next State Christian Endeavor Convention will be held next Thanksgiving in the Yearly Meeting-house at Richmond. Elwood O. Ellis, pastor of the South Eighth Street Meeting, has been chosen as Chairman of the Committee of 1899.

Esther Cook, assisted by Ella Applegate, held a profitable series of meetings at Fountain City. The former is now engaged in similar service in a meeting at New Westville, Ohio, in the limits of Whitewater Quarter.

Benjamin Johnson, of Richmond, gave an account of his trip on a visit to the Mexican missions to the Friends at Lynn. He also exhibited some Mexican curios he had collected in the journey. It was done at the request of the Friends there in order to increase the interest in mission work.

Levi Jessup at Lynn, and Hannah Lawrence at Richmond, are both invalids confined to their respective homes. As ministers of the Yearly Meeting they are doubtless remembered by their friends at the throne of grace.

Allen Jay is confined to his home principally on account of the illness of his wife. Her health having been poor for some time, an attack of grippe has added to the seriousness of her sickness, but it is hoped she will improve.

The various committees of the Yearly Meeting have just held their Quarterly Meetings at Richmond, except the Evangelistic and Pastoral Committee, which met at Fairmount. All seem to have special cause for encouragement in the work committed to their charge.

The friends of denominational colleges have been actively engaged in securing legislation that will reorganize the State Board of Education, but as it now appears they will not be successful, farther than to increase greatly the public sentiment in favor of such a change. Earlham has been an active participant, and it is confidently expected that two years hence the desired change may be effected. As it is at present, the fact that the presidents of the State Schools, three in number, are ex-officio members of the State Board, gives them tremendous advantage in securing patronage from the state, the tendency of which is to drive the non-state schools out of recognition as factors in the educational field.

George Levering, Earlham's representative in the recent oratorical contest at Indianapolis, won honors for the second place, and was given a reception at Earlham in honor of the success he achieved.

Jonathan M. Jay, of Pleasant Hill, Ohio, began a series of meetings at Centre, belonging to West Branch Quarterly Meeting, on First month 8th, 1899. After continuing a week, George Westgate, from Michigan, and Lizzie Melton, from Kansas, came to assist and the meetings continued two weeks longer. The Gospel was preached with power, and in its fullness and purity, to the strengthening of the believers and the building up of the church.

JOHN THOMAS.

Franklin and Mary Moon Meredith have located at Amboy, Ind., as pastors of the Amboy Meeting, and are progressing with the work nicely.

Fairmount Academy is prospering. The big debt was lifted in the fall, the total enrollment was increased over that of last year, the first class is much larger than usual, and the number of music students is greater than ever before, while several are pursuing post-graduate work. They have put into the library a new bookcase, which extends entirely across the west end of the room, and which will hold, perhaps, four hundred and fifty volumes, of which two hundred were promised as soon as the Academy could properly care for them. The floor of the library has been covered with matting, and two beautiful tablets announce to strangers that it has been named the Iredell B. Rush Library, in honor of its most generous benefactor. Moreover, more than one hundred dollars' worth of apparatus has been added in the various departments. A bill of thirty-seven dollars and fifty cents of Academy Song Books has been received, and the books make lively our general exercises. Last, but not least, the Board have fitted up a neat room in the basement to be used as a gymnasium, and it is now being furnished. The Inter-Academic Oratorical Contest will be held at Fairmount the 31st of Third month. The home institution will have strong representatives in that; hence we hope to win. A weekly prayer meeting has been inaugurated.

Sycamore, Ind.—The series of special meetings here has just closed. They were conducted by Evangelist Daisy Barr, assisted by our worthy pastor, J. H. Ellis. Meetings were held forenoons and evenings—thirty-one in all. Great interest prevailed from the start, but increased with each meeting. Persons of other churches lent their encouragement and were blessed. The young sister's preaching was plain, simple, practical, powerful and effectual. She taught the necessity of the new birth, Christian living, Christian giving, and the judgments of God, as well as his mercies. She assailed sin in all its common forms. There were forty-one conversions and many more firmly established in the faith.

Sycamore has a school of four rooms. The interest reached the school and almost every young man and young woman in the principal's room received conversion. The good that was done in the meetings will never be measured on earth. Sister Barr left us followed by the good wishes of all.

CLARKSON L. CATER.

Greensboro, Ind.—Frank Stafford and Milo Rees, ministers from Ridge Farm, Ill., commenced a meeting at Clear Spring on the 15th of First month, and closed on the 30th, holding thirty-one sessions, attended one funeral and Monthly Meeting in the time. Their preaching was clear and pointed; their teaching plain and forcible on the baptism with the Holy Ghost and holiness. The meetings were attended by the presence of the Spirit and power of the Lord, and nearly every session was signalized by definite results. Twelve conversions, eighteen renewals, and twenty-three professed sanctification. Most of these were already members. Three gave their names for membership with Friends. We rejoice and praise God that these brethren were sent this way. May the benediction of heaven rest upon them and their labors wherever they go.

SETH STAFFORD.

KANSAS YEARLY MEETING.

Lizzie Butler, of Barclay, has been engaged in evangelistic work in the limits of Pleasant View Quarterly Meeting since about the middle of Eleventh month.

Achsa Kenyon is spending the winter in revival work and visiting families in Walnut Creek and Mount Ayr Quarters. Much good is being accomplished.

The address of our Yearly Meeting Superintendent, Eliza H. Carey, is North Hall, Friends' University, Wichita, Kansas.

Sterling Quarterly Meeting has a pastor in every meeting in its limit. Ira Bundy is Quarterly Meeting Superintendent.

Edward Woodward, of Indiana, has just closed a very successful revival at Barclay. J. Morris Lemon, of Iowa, assisted by others, is being greatly blessed in the work at North Branch.

James Mills is prosecuting the work with his accustomed vigor in different places in Oklahoma.

E. H. Carey, in her work as superintendent, expects to attend Rose Hill, Spring River, Elk River and Buffalo Quarterly Meetings, and then visit the meetings of Hesper and Springdale Quarters.

There is being a persistent effort made throughout the Yearly Meeting to improve financial conditions.

Three of Cottonwood's ministers have gone to other Quarters; two of them located in Sterling Quarter and one in Rose Hill. But they are quickly replaced.

Our Academy meetings are points of especial importance for soul-saving and sound spiritual instruction.

The meeting for worship at the Kansas Friends' University opened on First-day morning, First month 8th, at 11 o'clock, with an attendance of about 300 to 350. Sabbath School, at 10 o'clock, with an enrollment of 59. Eliza H. Carey preached from the subject, "Heights and Depths."

Hoisington, Kansas.—On First month 15th, 1899, Ira S. Bundy, Quarterly Meeting Superintendent of Sterling Quarterly Meeting, began a series of meetings at Calvary Particular Meeting, lasting until First month 30th, in all twenty sessions. Hiram Davis, the pastor, was present during the entire meeting, assisting in the work. These special meetings have proved a great blessing to the church. A number who had been backsliders were reclaimed. Others were built up in the life of Jesus Christ, and the church has received three valuable members as a result of the meeting. Ira Bundy's preaching was sharp and incisive, yet in the spirit of the Master. We feel to praise the Lord for the work done at this meeting under the pastoral care of H. M. Davis.

Hoisington Monthly Meeting is growing, and since Yearly Meeting there have been four additions, and the church building at Prairie Center, Barton County, Kansas, is nearing completion. Friends have great reason to rejoice, even in this western part of Kansas, that God is thus highly favoring us spiritually and temporally. We expect to dedicate the new house in our Monthly Meeting the last Sabbath in Second month. This is the second church building we have made in three years, and we shall dedicate it free of debt. To Him be all the praise.

LEVI D. BARR.

Hannah E. Sleeper writes from Lukfate, Indian Territory. The following passage from her letter will be of general interest:

The outlook throughout Kansas Yearly Meeting for mission work is very encouraging. Reports from the Quarterly Meetings as far as heard from are most cheering. The presence of our missionaries at last Yearly Meeting seemed to enthuse all with new life and determination to do their duty in supporting the work on Douglas Island.

I am visiting my son, who with his wife have been located as missionaries under the Freedmans' Board of the Presbyterian Church at this isolated place for five years, it being forty miles from a railroad town. It is within the Choctaw Indian reservation. The colored people for whom they labor were slaves to the Choctaw's before the emancipation. As a consequence they are very low in the scale of humanity, and a missionary life is one of great hardship and privation. The country is almost entirely unimproved. Roads are not much more than trails winding through the heavy forests. But human beings are here perishing for the Bread of Life.

Washington Academy.—That "His word shall not return unto Him void" has been plainly demonstrated in our school this year.

By the many Christian influences of the school and surrounding community, among which may be mentioned the students' prayer meeting, Christian Endeavor, and the faithful, patient labors of our pastor, Anna M. Ray, many of the students have been led to take Christ as their Saviour. Many others have been deepened and strengthened in their experience.

Just lately we were much encouraged and profited by a short visit from Susie E. Allen. She preached five sermons to the people here; also gave some most excellent talks in the chapel exercises.

A. D. STANTON.

W. G. Hubbard, of Cleveland, Ohio, spent the greater part of First month in Kansas lecturing on peace, temperance and various other topics. His lectures are highly commended by the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, at whose call he came to the State, and by the Academies, Colleges and churches which were fortunate to secure them.

Owing to previous appointments he has left Kansas for Iowa, but he is wanted by the Peace Committee to lecture again on the new phase of the peace question contained in the late proposition of the Czar.

Cottonwood Falls, Kansas.—Matilda Steward has moved from Emporia to Cottonwood Falls, Kansas, as pastor in Toledo Monthly Meeting.

EDMUND GOSSE'S VISIT TO WHITTIER IN 1884.

In "Good Words" for First month, Mr. Edmund Gosse describes Whittier, and a visit paid him in the winter of 1884. The poet was not then living at Amesbury, his house there being under repairs. Mr. Whittier was staying with some friends at Oak Knoll, near Danvers. It was on a day of arctic rigor, December 6th, that Mr. Gosse went forth from Boston "to discover the author of 'Snow Bound,'" and Massachusetts, he intimates, may be enchanting in the summer time, but rather forbidding in the "bleakness of mid-winter." After ringing at the door of Oak Knoll, the visitors were received by a dog, who looked them over at first rather suspiciously, but soon was friendly. Next "a hard-featured woman grudgingly admitted us, and showed us, growling as she did it, into a parlor." Certainly a rather unhospitable reception. But presently "Mr. Whittier himself appeared, with all that report has ever told of a gentle sweetness and dignified cordial courtesy." Mr. Gosse thus draws Whittier's portrait:

He was then seventy-seven years old, and, although he spoke of age and feebleness, he showed few signs of either; he was, in fact, to live eight years more. Perhaps because the room was low, he seemed surprisingly tall; he must, in fact, have been a little less than six feet high. The peculiarity of his face rested in the extraordinarily large and luminous black eyes, set in black eyebrows, and fringed with thick black eyelashes curiously curved inward. This bar of vivid black across the countenance was startlingly contrasted with the bushy snow-white beard and hair, offering a sort of contradiction which was surprising and presently pleasing. He was careful to keep on my right side, I noticed, being presumably deaf in the right ear; even if this were the case, which he concealed, his hearing continued to be markedly quick in a man of his years.

We have heard before that Mr. Whittier was color-blind, and Mr. Gosse confirms this.

It appears that he was never permitted, by the guardian goddesses of his health, to go "shopping" for himself, but that once, being in Boston, and needing a carpet, he had ventured to go to a store and buy what he thought to be a very nice, quiet article, precisely suited to adorn a Quaker home. When it arrived at Amesbury there was a universal shout of horror, for what had struck Mr. Whittier as a particularly soft combination of browns and grays proved, to normal eyes, to be a loud pattern of bright red roses on a field of the crudest cabbage green! When he had told me this it was then easy to observe that the fullness and brilliancy of his wonderful eyes had something which was not entirely normal about them.

Then follows another appreciation of Whittier's manner and his way of talking:

He struck me as very gay and cheerful, in spite of his occasional references to the passage of time and the vanishing of beloved faces. He even laughed frequently and with a childlike suddenness, but without a sound. His face had none of the immobility so frequent with very aged persons; on the contrary, waves of mood were always sparkling across his features, and leaving nothing stationary there except the narrow, high, and strangely receding forehead. His language, very fluent and easy, had an agreeable touch of the soil, an occasional rustic note in its elegant colloquialism, that seemed very pleasant and appropriate, as if it linked him naturally with the long line of sturdy ancestors of whom he was the final blossoming. In connection with his poetry, I think it would be difficult to form in the imagination a figure more appropriate to Whittier's writings than Whittier himself proved to be in the flesh.

Mr. Gosse makes this criticism on Whittier as a poet:

Mr. Whittier was composing verses all his life, and the difference of quality between those he wrote at twenty and at eighty is remarkably small. He was a poet in the lifetime of Gifford and Crabbe, and he was still a poet when Mr. Rudyard Kipling was already famous. During this vast period of time his style changed very little; it had its ups and downs, its laxities and then its felicities, but it bore very little relation to passing conditions. There rose up beside it Tennyson and Browning, Rossetti and Swinburne, but none of these affected Whittier. His genius, or talent, or knack—whichever we choose to call it—was an absolutely local and native thing. It was like the Indian waters of strange name of which it sang, Winnepesaukee and Merrimac and Katahdin; it streamed forth, untouched by Europe, from among the butter-nuts and maples of the hard New England landscape. The art in Whittier's verse was primitive. Those who love his poetry most will wish that he possessed a better ear, that he could have felt that "mateless" does not rhyme to "greatness." In all his books there is a tendency to excess, to redundancy; he is apt to babble on when he has nothing very inspired to say.

But when all this is acknowledged, none but a very hasty reader will fail to recognize Whittier's lasting place in the history of literature. He is not rich, nor sonorous, nor a splendid artist; he is even rather rarely exquisite; but he has an individuality of his own that is of durable importance. He is filled with moral enthusiasm as a trumpet is filled with the breath of him who blows it. His Quaker quietism concentrates itself until it breaks into a real passion-storm of humanity, and when Whittier is roused he sings with the thrilling sweetness of a wood-thrush. By dint of simplicity and earnestness, he frequently hits upon the most charming phrases, instinct with life and truth; so that the English poet with whom it seems most natural to compare him in the lyrical order is the epic and didactic Crabbe.

The only final comfort is God; and he relieves the soul always in its suffering, not from its suffering—nay, he relieves the soul by its suffering, by the new knowledge and possession of himself which could only come through that atmosphere of pain.—Phillips Brooks.

ENTHUSIASM IN WORK.

BY BYRON J. REES.

There are two kinds of workers, the drudge and the man who loves his work. The former turns out a "grist" of so much given labor, but it has no soul and is "of the earth, earthy." The latter leaves the product of his activity instinct with life and thought and spirit. The reader of Hawthorne will remember that all of Drowne's wooden images were truly wooden, with the exception of the single one into which he threw the passion of his soul.

"For the heart
Giveth grace to every heart."

There are men who work for God from a sense of duty; there are also those who offer Him not only the service of their hands, but the treasure-store of their hearts. They are active because to please Christ is the one boundless longing of their souls. They consider no sacrifice too dear, and no labor too arduous, if only He will smile upon them.

It is this "heartiness" in work that turns drudgery to play and pleasure. How easy it is to do things for those whom we love! And when the fair and matchless Christ fully wins our affections to Himself work is no longer work, but love's own holiday.

Love gives enthusiasm. Pelleas can overthrow any knight and surmount any obstacle until love dies and Ettarre proves false and base. And Christ's knight who "rides abroad redressing human wrong" by the sword of truth and the shield of forbearance and the lance of sincerity can unhorse his combatant in any tourney, for he knows that Christ beholds him. "The mild-faced King" is watching, and His approval is more to the knight than that of all "the Table Round."

The true lover of Christ sees in each new day a fresh opportunity to prove his profession of love for his Lord. Even common instruments of toil—spades and shovels, and type and press, and pens and ink—seem transfigured by a new and celestial light. A trial comes—it is a carrier-pigeon, which, if received and utilized, will carry a love-note beyond the clouds; a great and awful sorrow darkens the life—it is another victory in embryo, and may become a stepping-stone which shall help lift the soul to wider views and purer air.

One may live a common life in an uncommon way. One may carry with one a resistless spirit of victory and power which the dull routine of service cannot devitalize.

"Gates of brass cannot withstand
One touch of that magic wand."

There is an alchemy by which the stones and stocks of weary days are changed to cabinets of jewels. "A rainy day! how dismal!" Not so. It is God hiding a picture on the screen of nature that we may look at Him who is the source and exponent of all the beauty of the earth.

"A disagreeable and mischievous letter." Nay; but God's hand obscuring the face of human friendship, that we may look at Him for the cause of the blank.

"God is for us—who can be against us?" No one. This thought ought to fill our lives with cheer and enthusiasm, and send us springing from vale to mountain peak with courageous heart and steady step.

BOOK NOTICES.

Revell's announce that the second volume of Dennis's "Christian Missions and Social Progress" will be ready by Fourth month, and for sale at the same price as the first volume, $2.50. It has been found impossible to include all the material in this second volume, so a third is promised which will deal with the effect of missions on the higher life of society, and national, religious, and commercial development. The second volume, soon to appear, will treat of the results of missions apparent in the individual character, the family life, and in humanitarian progress. No other such work upon missions has been attempted, and the three volumes will constitute a summary of the work of the first century of modern missions that will be invaluable to the student of missions and to all interested in the progress of Christianity in the world.

The same publishers have also recently issued three books, as follows:

"Christian Science Examined." By Henry Varley. 16mo., pp. 80. Price, 15 cents. This is a helpful contribution to literature, having for its object the exposure of the illogical, unscientific, un-Christian nature of this so-called "Christian Science," which is neither Christianity nor science, but a wretched delusion of the devil. The fundamental positions of Mrs. Eddy's teaching are dealt with from the standpoint of common sense and Scripture, and their babyish absurdity shown.

"The Young Man of Yesterday," by Judge Tenney, price, 20 cents, is a beautiful little booklet with most interesting material as to the successes of young men. Raphael painting the Coronation of the Virgin at twenty-one, the Sistine Madonna at twenty-eight; Michael Angelo chiselling his masterpiece at twenty-eight; Newton discovering the law of gravitation at twenty-three; Champollion discovering the Egyptian alphabet at thirty-one, and so on through a long list of names, is a series of statements of most suggestive interest.

"The Transformation of Hawaii," by Belle M. Brain, 12mo., pp. 191, $1.00, is a new and valuable summary of the history and Christianization of our new possessions in the mid-Pacific. It will be the best book on Hawaii for the average missionary library.

DIED.

DILLINGHAM.—Died, at the residence of his son-in-law, in Providence, R. I. Twelfth month 20th, 1898, Edward C. Dillingham, a minister, and a member of New Bedford Monthly Meeting of Friends, Massachusetts, aged 84 years 2 months and 11 days. In his younger manhood, while he was sailing as captain of a coasting vessel, a storm at sea seems to have been an occasion of determining him to serve the Lord. Feeling he had much to overcome and endeavoring to be faithful to manifested duty, his heart was engaged for his own cleansing, and was enlarged for the well-fare of others. His strong social nature was made use of in drawing him into intercourse with many, particularly of the younger class, in various places, whose attention he often held with edifying recitals of the Lord's doings in the guidance of men. As he advanced in years he grew in grace and in love for all, and in an ever-deepening conviction of the truth of the principles and testimonies of our religious Society. Of latter time he seemed heavily burdened with the condition of the vocal ministry among us, and earnest was his concern that Friends' ministry should be kept in the life and power, and unless with Divine authority for utterance, held in silence. The warnings of his approaching close which came were followed by a desire to depart and be with Christ, who, he said, was calling him for higher service elsewhere.

FRYE.—Died at South China, Maine, Eleventh month 10th, 1898, Sarah V. Frye, aged 85 years, an Elder of China Monthly Meeting. She lived a quiet and peaceful life in purity and godliness, and exemplified in her life the profession of her faith. She had a remarkably triumphant death, and was favored with a glorious view of the mansion prepared for her.

GOVE.—Moses Gove died First month 25th, 1899, at the residence of his son, J. M. Gove, of Decorah, Iowa, in his 93d year. Moses Gove was born in Weare, N. H., in 1807. He is a direct descendant of an ancient and honored name, known both in England and in America. Edward, who was the common ancestor of the Goves in this country, came to America on or before 1647, and settled at Charleston. Moses Gove was a son of Levi and Lydia Gove, and of the sixth generation of the descendants of Edward Gove. He was married in 1829 to Lydia G. Chase. He was a playfellow and schoolmate of Whittier. Possibly it is best to let the life which so many knew so well speak of the departed. He was a birthright member of the Society of Friends. He was an elder and a very faithful worker in the church during his lifetime. He was gentle in his intercourse with others, kind to his fellow-men, upright in all things; in fact, all that one may say of the truest of true Christians and the most honorable of honorable men, beloved by all who knew him.

HEATON.—Eliza Heaton entered into rest at her residence at Poughkeepsie, N. Y., First month 15th, 1899, at the age of 83 years.

She was born on the island of Nantucket in 1816, where she lived until her marriage to the late Daniel L. Heaton, removing then to New York State.

She was a member of Poughkeepsie Monthly Meeting, and for many years an elder.

Gifted with a fine mind, she was keenly alive to the beauties of nature and a lover of good literature. A defect in hearing shut her off from ordinary conversation. This seemed but to brighten the mental faculties and aid the soul development. In 1891 a book of her poems was published. Her life was a verification of the truth uttered by her Master: "Peace I leave with you, My peace I give unto you."

While the larger half of her family awaited her entrance into the eternal life, those who remain mourn the loss of a tender and true-hearted mother.

HINSHAW.—Ruth Hinshaw, daughter of Jesse and Eunice Hinshaw, died at her home, near Marshall, Ind., First month 19th, 1899, aged 89 years. She was born in Randolph Co., North Carolina in 1810; in the fall of 1827 she was married to John Newlin. Soon afterward she came with her husband to this country and settled on the land where the first stroke of the white man's axe had not been made toward progress, and here, until death, has been their home, he having died in 1884. She was a life-time member with Friends and a true Christian.

JESSUP.—Morris Jessup, son of Tidamon and Lydia Jessup, died First month 15th, 1899, at his home near Eagletown, Ind in his 73d year. In his 17th year he resolved to walk in the light which God placed before his spiritual vision, and from that time he never deviated greatly from the path he believed his Heavenly Father wanted him to pursue. He was a member and elder of Westfield Monthly Meeting of Friends, always willingly performing any duty which the church placed in his hands. His life was closely allied with the great anti-slavery movement of the North, and he delighted to assist the poor negro in his attempt to escape from his cruel master. From the time of the Washingtonian movement he was an earnest worker in the great effort to rid the country from the evils of alcohol. He was always abreast with the most advanced movement on this line either in public organization or in private intercourse. In his life he was a kind, affectionate and faithful husband, a true father, an accommodating and liberal neighbor. As he lived so he passed to the Eternal rest with the testimony on his lips. "All is well. I feel that my work is done. It is blessed to be prepared."

MENDENHALL.—Martha, daughter of Elijah and Elizabeth Mendenhall (the latter deceased), died at her home in West Elkton, Ohio, First month 5th, 1899, in the thirty-ninth year of her age. Although for many years a great sufferer, she always manifested a spirit of Christian resignation to the Divine Will. She was a birthright member of Friends, and gave abundant evidence of her acceptance with her Saviour.

MILLS.—Daniel M. Mills, son of Mark and Charity Mills, died at Plainfield, Ind., First month 7th, 1899. He was born in Clinton County, Ohio, 16th of Second month, 1827. His age was 71 years, 10 months and 22 days. In company with his parents he moved to Indiana in 1833, where he resided, with the exception of about four years spent near Haviand, Kansas. On the 20th of First month, 1847, he was united in marriage with Eliza Epperson, from which union nine children were born, two of which preceded him to the better land. He was a birthright member of Friends, an earnest and faithful member, often testifying of the Lord's goodness to him. He bore many years of affliction with great patience and fortitude, and expressed his readiness to go and be forever with the Lord.

PATTERSON.—Bertha Patterson, daughter of Asa F. and Sarah Patterson, and granddaughter of Wright Cook, deceased, departed this life at Costello, Kansas, Tenth month 23d, 1898, aged a little more than twenty-five years. She was converted when a child, and became a member of Farm Ridge Monthly Meeting, and for some time previous to her death was one of its clerks. She bore a lingering illness of sixteen months with great patience, and we have the comforting assurance she has entered into rest.

STRATTON.—Mark Stratton, son of Joseph and Sarah Stratton, died at the home of his son, J. H. Stratton in Beloit, Ohio, First month 12th, 1899, aged 77 years. He was a birthright member of the Society of Friends, and for more than thirty years an elder in the church. Although he was not able, as many can, to date the exact time of his spiritual birth, yet early in life it was very apparent to those with whom he was associated that he was seeking to follow in the footsteps of Jesus, and for many years has given testimony to a clear experience of justification and cleansing from all sin in the blood of Jesus, in whom was his entire trust.

STUBBS.—Elizabeth J., widow of Zimri Stubbs, died First month 12th, 1899, aged 68 years, 2 months and 26 days. She had a birthright membership with Friends, and lived an honored Christian life; was a member of Elk Monthly Meeting, and in the triumph of a living faith she sweetly fell asleep in Jesus.

WORTH.—Mary E. Worth, daughter of Caleb Johnson, and wife of William Worth, died at her home near Argonia, Kan., First month 2d, 1899, in her 54th year. She was a valued member and Elder of Argonia Monthly Meeting of Friends, Sumner County, Kansas. Her last lingering illness was borne with much Christian fortitude and patience. Years ago she gave her heart to God in complete surrender and consecration, and when she saw the end approaching she had great peace and declared her readiness to obey her Master's call. Her prospects were bright for a home among the blessed, and she bowed in humble submission to His sovereign will. She leaves a sorrowing husband, one son and two daughters, and hosts of friends, to mourn their loss—but their loss is her gain.

A WOMAN'S LIFE WORK.

Including Thirty Year's Service on the Underground Railroad and in the War.

BY LAURA HAVILAND.

This is a story of a wonderful life. The author was an active Anti-Slavery agitator and through her underground railroad work assisted hundreds of slaves to escape from bondage. During the war she spent about two years taking care of the sick and wounded. Through her efforts more than 2,000 Union Soldiers were liberated. She accomplished a great work in providing for the Freedmen of Kansas after the close of the war. She was the founder of the State Public School, at Coldwater, Mich., an institution which was the first of its kind in the world. The Industrial School for Girls at Adrian Mich., almost utterly owes its first existence, and especially its name to her efforts. Haviland Academy at Haviland, Kansas, was named in her honor, as also the town in which it is located. At the World's Fair she was introduced by President Palmer as "The Mother of Philanthropy," and well she deserves the title. Her experience as told in this book will be read with thrilling interest.

This book is printed on good paper and contains 625 pages. It is bound in cloth with red edges. The retail price of the book is $1.50. We will send it postpaid, for $1.00. Address,

HULDA:

The Pentecostal Prophetess.

BY BYRON J. REES.

152 Pages. Bound in Cloth. Price, 50c., postpaid.

A short life story and seventeen of the sermons of Hulda A. Rees, together with her portrait and picture of her early church. This book needs no other introduction than for the reader to know that seventeen of her sermons, which Sister Rees preached with such accompaniments of power and blessing, are for the most part to compose it. The life-story is short yet comprehensive, the writer of it avoiding anything of a eulogistic nature and making the facts of the life serve as an appropriate introduction to the character back of the sermons.

Mrs. E. E. Williams, in a beautiful poem, which is also a part of the book, gives some refreshing glimpses into the character of Sister Rees.

Esther T. Pritchard also contributes a "Tribute," glowing with fervor and truth.

A SHREWD DREAMER.

An English general and his wife, resident in Ireland, were constantly pestered by a beggar-woman, to whom they had been very charitable. One morning, at the usual hour when the lady was getting into her carriage, the old woman appeared, and began:

"Ach, my Lady, success to your Ladyship, and success to your Honor's honor, this morning, of all the days in the year; for, sure, didn't I drame last night that her Ladyship gave me a pound of tay and yer Honor gave me a pound of tobacco!"

"But, my good woman," said the General, "do you not know that dreams always go by the rule of contrary?"

"Do they so, please yer Honor?" rejoined the old woman. "Then it must be yer Honor that will give me the tay and her Ladyship that will give me the tobacco."—Short Stories Magazine.

DE GOOD LAWD KNOW MY NAME.

I jes' don' know ef de conn'll grow,
But I plants hit, jes' de same;
I jes' don' know ef de wind'll blow,
But I watch an' pray, an' I reap an' sow,
An' de sun, he rise, an' de ribber flow,
An' de good Lawd know my name!

I just can't tell ef de cotton sell,
But I toils on jes' de same;
De birds, dey build when the spring sap swell
An' dey know enough for a rainy spell,
An' dat's lots more dan dey gwine ter tell
But de good Lawd know my name!

So I watch an' pray as I goes my way,
An' I toils on jes' de same;
De rose is sweet, but de rose can't stay,
But I'm mighty glad when it bloom my way;
De nightfall dark, but de Lawd send day,
An' de good Lawd know my name!

A QUICK REPLY.

That quick wit is not confined to cities was proved last spring by a young woman who was rambling along one of our roads.

She was dressed smartly; and, when she met a small, bare-legged urchin carrying a bird's nest with eggs in it, she did not hesitate to stop him.

"You are a wicked boy!" she said. "How could you rob that nest? No doubt the poor mother is now grieving for the loss of her eggs."

"Oh, she don't care," said the boy, edging away. "She's on your hat!"—"Cape Ann Advertiser."

During the earthquake at Laibach some persons kept their wits about them sufficiently to observe the extraordinary behavior of animals. Several minutes before the first shock an owl began to cry out as if for help in an unearthly voice, sparrows and other birds fluttered aimlessly about, and horses, long before the shock occurred, began to tremble violently, some falling on their knees. Dogs howled the whole night through, and when a shock was near their yelping was piercing and unnatural.

Do You Feel Irritable

Take Horsford's Acid Tonic.

It makes a refreshing, cooling beverage, and is an invigorating tonic, soothing to the nerves.

Don't use

an imitation—especially imitations of Pearl-ine. Many are dangerous. And dangerous washing powders can never be cheap—no matter how little you pay for them. Peddlers and untrustworthy grocers will tell you the stuff they offer is "Pearl-ine," "same as," "as good as," "made in the same factory," etc. It's false.

Pearline is the standard washing compound; never peddled; gives no prizes; simply stands on its merits as the best, safest, and most economical.

FLAGGED WITH MATCHES.

The Jamestown (N. Y.) "Standard" prints a remarkable story of the manner in which a railroad employee saved a passenger train and the lives of those on board. The story is given as follows:

Martin Troy, of Hartford, Conn., an old railroad man, was down at East Bristol bridge watching the men at work. When the afternoon train from Bristol came along, the bridge was noticeably weak, and the weight of the train jarred it so seriously that all the wooden piling under it was carried away.

When Troy saw that the piling had been carried away, and that the bridge had settled, he hurried up to flag the train from Hartford, which would arrive at this point at about five o'clock.

It had grown quite dark by this time, and Troy had no lantern; but as the train came along he took matches from his pocket and lighted them for a danger signal. He was just in time: the train stopped as the engine was about to go on the bridge.

When the workmen came to repair the bridge, they tried to induce Troy to go to work with them, but he refused, declaring that the bridge was likely to fall at any minute. His warning came too late. Before the men could leave the bridge the collapse came.

JOHN BRIGHT,

*Ho ! Pilot of the roaring seas !
No summer sailor thou ;
It was no idle breeze
That set those manly lines upon thy brow ;
For thou hast done what all to do are fain,
Yet few, ah, few attain :
Hast never struck thy sail
And fled before the gale
Till it has spent its force,—
But sawest clear upon the chart of life
Thy straight-drawn track ; and though the storm blew loud,
And elemental strife
In one mad whirl joined sea and cloud,
Thou hast but lashed thy helm and held thy course.
And for the manly heart and manly deed
Thy country loves thee ;—gives
Honor unstinted as thy meed :
And they that still can hold
The Quaker name, rejoice that one man lives
Who fills the measure of their hero-mould.*

TRIED IN THE FIRE.

"He knew He had ore that could bear the test
And He wanted the purest gold—
To mould in a crown for the King to wear, set with gems of a price untold—
So He laid our gold in the burning fire, though we fain would have said Him, "Nay,"
And He watched the dross that we had not seen, as it melted and passed away.

And the gold grew brighter, and yet more bright,
But our eyes were so dim with tears
We saw but the fire,—not the Master's Hand, and questioned with anxious fears;
Yet our gold shone on with a richer glow, as it mirrored a form above,
Who bent o'er the fire unseen by us, with a look of ineffable love.

So He waited there with a watchful eye, with a love that is strong and sure,
And His gold did not suffer a whit more heat than was needed to make it pure;
He has lifted it out from His furnace, now too bright for our eyes to see
Till the tears that dim them are wiped away on the shores of Eternity."

NO SIGN SHALL BE GIVEN.

THERE is but one occasion on record which drew a deep sigh of discouragement from the heart of Jesus. Twice he wept; once in sympathy with mourners, though not in hopeless grief, because he was conscious at the same time that he was the resurrection and the life, and again over Jerusalem, because He saw that only on the ruins of the Jerusalem he loved could the more perfect Jerusalem arise. But this "deep sigh" was different. It was called out by a hopeless situation which came before Him in his ministry. The people who failed to feel the power of the truth he taught, and were incapable of appreciating his spiritual revelation, came demanding that he should authenticate or prove his revelation by a physical "sign." "He sighed deeply and said, 'No sign shall be given.'" In fact, from the nature of the case no sign could be given. Spiritual truth must be taken at first-hand or not at all. No physical sign could be given to prove, or authenticate, Christ's message of Divine love, of forgiveness of sin, of sonship with God, or the possibility of a life hid with Christ in God.

One of Christ's severest temptations was the suggestion that he should miraculously make bread for himself out of stone. It was a temptation to use his marvelous powers, but it threatened his very Messiahship, for if he had yielded he could have brought no redemption to man. If bread is made out of stones by a miracle for Him who comes as a Saviour of men, it at once puts Him out of relations with those whom he came to save. We must toil and struggle, and eat our bread in the sweat of our brows, and if he refuses to taste man's hardship and want, and eats the bread of miracle, he ceases to be in all points like us, and, not sharing our life, he cannot be our complete Redeemer. He could not yield and still be the Saviour.

The impossibility of yielding to the cry for a physical, miraculous "sign" is made still clearer during the crucifixion. The mocking priests and scribes ask for a last sign: "If he be the Christ, let him come down from the cross that we may believe." It was the very thing which would have proved Him no Christ at all. The gift of Himself, the manifestation of Divine love, his faithfulness unto death did prove his Sonship and attest his message, but the sign they demanded was forever impossible for Him, who even on the cross proves His spiritual power, not by coming down himself, but by lifting a dying thief out of his old, ruined life, up, up, until he sees the meaning of love and sonship, and can BE WITH CHRIST in paradise.

This power to transform a life, and bring it into Divine relation, is the supreme sign; it is the only sign by which Christ could attest his spiritual message. Magdalen is a "sign;" Simon, the wavering, fickle, impetuous fisherman, changed to Peter, the apostle of Jesus Christ, is a sign; John, the son of thunder, wishing to call down fire on the Samaritans, transformed into the apostle of love, is a sign; Saul, breathing out threatenings and slaughter, hauling men and women to prison, changed to Paul with his life hid with Christ in God, who, also "crucified with Christ," can say in truth, "I live by the faith of the Son of God, who loved me and gave himself for me," he is a sign. Every soul since which through Christ has turned from its prodigal life, and cried, "Abba, Father," has found Christ's truth true, and has become a living sign to others. No other sign shall be given to this or any other generation.

Each generation in its own way asks for a sign. Crowds gather around the spiritualistic "medium" to get a material "sign" that the soul lives after death, but not thus shall the great truth of immortality be proved. One generation expects the astronomer with his telescope to find an indisputable sign in the starry heavens; another asks the geologist to dig up one from the strata of the earth's crust, or the biologist to find a sign in the cells of living forms. It is because of the failure to find God in material things that a modern poet has cried out in hopelessness:

"The God I never once behold,
Above the cloud, beneath the clod;
The unknown God, the unknown God."

—WILLIAM WATSON.

The trouble is, he is looking in the wrong direction for Him, and he is asking for a sign which cannot be given. "God is love," let us remember, and He can be found only where love can be, and the sign must be sought in a human heart that can feel and test a spiritual truth.

That is the meaning of Tennyson's great lines in "In Memoriam," written when his own heart was yearning for a sign that God is love and that life goes on. He says:

"I found Him not in world or sun,
In eagle's wing or insect's eye;
Nor thro' the questions men may try,
The petty cobwebs we have spun.

"If e'er when faith hath fallen asleep
I heard a voice, 'Believe no more'
And heard an ever-breaking shore
That tumbled in the Godless deep;

"A warmth within the breast would melt
The freezing reason's colder part,
And like a man in wrath, the heart Stood up and answered, 'I HAVE FELT.'"

This first-hand knowledge, by experience, is the only all-sufficient attestation of a spiritual truth, and however much we may long for tests through our senses, and for signs that are tangible, we must at last get where we can receive His beatitude, "blessed are they that have not seen, yet have believed," and cry out, because our hearts know Him, "my Lord and my God."

A CHRISTIAN BUT NOT A QUAKER.

A good many persons in some parts of our denomination talk as though a "Friend" were a Christian plus something. These persons say, "He is a good man and a thorough Christian, but he is not a Friend," or "I regard many who bear the name of 'Friend' as worthy of high respect, as Christians certainly, but not as Friends." Such remarks have been made so often that probably those who make them do not realize how entirely inconsistent the statement is, nor do they realize that those of whom they speak can with equal justice make the remark of them. But we contend that the idea is largely false and untenable, and it is time intelligent persons stopped expressing it. A "Friend" is not a Christian plus something; he is merely a Christian in the true sense of the word.

The original Friends never once hinted this erroneous idea. To them Quakerism was primitive, genuine Christianity with neither additions nor subtractions. A Friend was a Christian—nothing more. The striking thing about them was that they had a new idea of what it meant to be a Christian. It meant to them a man (or woman) whose spiritual life came directly, immediately from the living Christ, and who lived joyous and free, conscious of a union between himself and God, and whose spiritual activities sprang forth as a normal result of this Divine union and Divine prompting. This relation with Christ affected the entire life, not on certain days and in certain places, but on all days and in all places. It removed all distinctions of clergy and laity, for all Christians are ministers in so far as they have received gifts. It swept priesthood and sacerdotalism out of existence, for a Christian is a priest unto God, and needs no one to mediate between himself and the holy of holies but Christ. This same relation removed at once the importance of so-called rites and ordinances, because he who is in spiritual union with Christ cannot find added strength or satisfaction in a material symbol which by no possibility could take the place of the spiritual union. Love for all men as brothers, a genuine moral life, refusal to swear or fight are not additions to Christianity, but are involved in its very essence. So also is the declaration that the Gospel ministry must be free and never sold for money or position or "honor."

In short, there is not a single thing of vital importance in Quakerism which is not involved in the very meaning and essence of Christianity as promulgated in the New Testament. Quakerism is simply an interpretation and expression of spiritual Christianity.

Even during the lifetime of Fox there were as many varieties of expression of it as there are in our own day. There were extreme mystics and quietists in the "Society;" there were noisy revivalists; there were those who emphasized looking within, and those who emphasized activity; there were the deep and the shallow, the calm and the enthusiastic; there were those who talked much of the inner Light, and those who talked no less of the sacrifice of the historic Christ. It was an interpretation of Christianity broad enough and inclusive enough to meet the spiritual needs of all classes of men, and the early Friends had the good sense to see that a true religion cannot be run into a mould. They did not make the fatal blunder of having two grades of Christianity, one for the poor and ignorant, and another for the respectable, but "Friend" meant a person who took Christ at first-hand, with all the spiritual results following therefrom. In the course of time traditions and shibboleths accumulated, and took almost equal rank in importance with the vital truths. It is time to get back to the essence again, and to realize that a "Friend" is a Christian who takes his religion first-hand from Christ, and nothing more nor less. He may express his vital faith in forms suited to his environment; he may or may not say "thee" and "thy"; he may or he may not sing; he may or he may not worship in silence, but he must know that his spiritual life is in Jesus Christ, and he must expand that life and make himself a channel of spiritual life to others. Such a man is not a Christian plus something; he is merely a genuine Christian, and he deserves the name of Friend or Quaker, if he wants to be called that.

GENERAL CHURCH NOTES.

Archbishop Chapelle, of New Orleans, who has been appointed by the Pope as Apostolic Delegate to Cuba and Porto Rico, is engaged in the study of the problem of the financial support of the Catholic Church in those islands. This is a serious question for Rome, and it may well engage her attention, for now that Spain's sovereignty no longer exists in the Antilles, her maintenance will depend upon the free will offerings of the people. We believe that nothing less than the regeneration of the Catholic Church will suffice for this; her standard must be raised and her clergy purified before the people of the islands will rally to her support. Father Sherman has spoken of Porto Rico as a Catholic country without religion. What wonder that it is without religion, when the priests are shamelessly and notoriously immoral. It is said that an effort will be made to introduce priests from the United States to take the place of the present Spanish incumbents. This will be made easier by the apparent distaste on the part of the latter to remain in the islands under the new regime.

Dr. Barton, the Foreign Secretary of the American Board of Foreign Missions, in a letter to the "Boston Herald," testifies that he does not know of one of the missionaries of the Board who favors an imperialistic policy, and he further says that it has heretofore been a great advantage to American missionaries that their work has been felt to be wholly disinterested and not associated with colonization schemes, nor hampered by any suspicion of the heathen that the United States had ulterior designs on their liberties or their lands. It is certainly a well-mooted question to what extent the missionary should be assisted and protected by his country, if, indeed, he should not go out entirely untrammelled by national ties.

The war in England on Ritualism is being waged most energetically. Sir William Harcourt is making the most vigorous stand, and in letters to the "Times" is scoring severely the "lawlessness" of the Bishops. He has even secured the support of this influential journal. The attack is particularly aimed against the auricular confession, which is being more and more tolerated by the State. The High Church papers, especially "The Church Times," would deride the movement as of no consequence, but evidently the subject will not down, and now even disestablishment is discussed. It is said that the Queen is considerably worried over the turn events are taking.

FOR THE AMERICAN FRIEND.
FRIENDS DURING THE REVOLUTION.
 THE VIRGINIA EXILES.

BY PRESIDENT ISAAC SHARPLESS.

Late in 1776 the war, which had hitherto been mainly confined to New England and New York, approached Philadelphia. "These are the times that try men's souls," wrote Thomas Paine, in Twelfth month, 1776. Washington, with a wreck of an army, retreated across Jersey, closely followed by the British under Sir William Howe.

In Philadelphia there was great excitement. Galloway and other loyalists joined the British. The roads leading from the city were crowded with fugitives seeking places of safety. The sick of Washington's army were brought into the city almost naked, and were lodged in the vacated houses. Every effort was made to arouse the spirit of resistance by accounts of the barbarities practised by the British troops in the march through the Jerseys. Congress, then sitting in Philadelphia, adjourned to Baltimore.

The daring and successful night attack of Washington on the Hessians at Trenton, and his magnificent campaign following, when, with a raw and inefficient army, he completely outgeneraled Howe and drove him back to New York, removed for a time the danger to the Quaker City. The American army hovered about between Philadelphia and New York during the early half of 1777, uncertain of the plans of the British general. On the 25th of Eighth month he revealed his purpose by landing at Elk Ferry, in the Chesapeake, with the evident intention of attacking Philadelphia from the south. Washington marched through the city, making the best show he could with his poorly armed and clothed troops, and on the 11th of Ninth month met the British army, under Cornwallis, at Chadd's Ford, on the Brandywine. In this quiet farming country, settled almost exclusively by Friends, around the old Birmingham Meeting House, was fought one of the bloodiest battles of the war. Washington was defeated by a flank attack, led by Cornwallis, who crossed the stream about five miles above the Ford, and met the American army hastily drawn up to face them at the meeting house. The Americans lost 1,000 men, the British about half as many, and followed the retreating, but not demoralized, Americans to the Schuylkill. After two weeks' manœuvring Howe's army succeeded in crossing the stream, and on the 25th encamped at Germantown.

Congress departed in haste to Lancaster, and a detachment of British troops took possession of the city. The people, an old account states, generally "appeared sad and serious." This may be partly accounted for by the following minute of Philadelphia Monthly Meeting:

The 26th Day of the 9 month 1777 being the day in course for holding our monthly meeting a number of friends met when the present situation of things being considered and it appearing that the Kings Army are near entering the city, at which time it may be proper the inhabitants should generally be at their habitations, in order to preserve as much as possible peace and good order on this solemn occasion it is therefore proposed to adjourn the mo. mtg. &c.

The attack on Germantown, where the main body of the British were encamped, showed the world that the spirit of the Americans was not quelled. This was only temporarily successful, and the two armies settled down in winter quarters, Washington and his troops to endure the sufferings of Valley Forge, while Howe and his officers held high revel in Philadelphia; and his men were comfortably quartered in the numerous unoccupied houses and stores. The capture of the forts on the Delaware made them largely independent of the neighboring country, where foraging parties of Americans greatly interfered with their supplies, and a winter of gaiety and revelry followed. If the Friends had any disposition to look upon the king's troops on their entrance as settling their allegiance on a stronger basis, they changed their minds before the winter was over. Their influence hitherto had kept the city decorous and reasonably moral, and they were shocked at the laxity which now for the first time invaded the city of Penn. Drunken soldiers destroyed the quiet of the nights, cock-fighting and gambling were openly sanctioned by Sir William Howe, and the young Philadelphians, making common cause with the dissipated British officers, were ruined in morals and purses, while stage plays and balls, club meetings and horse races, followed each other in rapid succession. It was a difficult time for the Friends, who were probably one-fifth of the population, and who were in general in fairly comfortable circumstances, to maintain their standards of living among their young men.

The probability of a French army of attack coming to America made the permanent occupation of Philadelphia impossible, and on the 18th of Sixth month, 1778, Sir Henry Clinton, who had superseded Howe, evacuated the city and marched across Jersey. Washington promptly started in pursuit, fought the battles of Princeton and Monmouth, and had the satisfaction of accelerating their retreat and finally seeing the British army embark for New York city.

The out-and-out Tories left the city with the British. The Friends remained in their houses, as they had done when the invaders entered. They suffered from both parties, the most, however, from the Americans for their unwillingness to join in the national defence. Their policy was to remain quiet and take what came to them without giving military aid to either party or acting as spies upon either.

When the American army regained possession of the city it was placed in command of Benedict Arnold, who proceeded to enrich himself by confiscating the property of the Tories and by his marriage with Peggy Shippen, the daughter of a prominent loyalist. The National and State Congresses resumed their sessions. Wild speculation and gross extravagance, to which the depreciated condition of the paper currency was a stimulus, pervaded the city. The State Government, under the new Constitution, was in the hands of new men who did not receive the confidence of the more substantial people. The town was full of desperate characters. Its beauty was destroyed, its trees cut down for firewood, its suburbs burned, its streets filthy, its houses denuded of furniture. There were the bitterest feelings against Tories of all grades, and two victims, of whom more presently, were hung to appease the popular fury. A mob which threatened to hang all Quakers, Tories and speculators was for a time in possession of the city. The "Constitutionalists," as the extreme revolutionists were called, resolved to drive out every vestige of loyalism. The college founded by Franklin—now the University of Pennsylvania—had its charter annulled, and a new one, supposed to be more favorable to the prevailing powers, was created in its place, which had only the effect to bring into existence two rival weaklings and to destroy the medical school, then just establishing its great history.

In this disturbed, unhealthy state, Philadelphia remained until the end of the war. It was no time for Quakers to have anything to do with government, and they wisely refrained from making any attempt.

The city Friends had to bear the brunt of the trouble. Those in the country were disturbed by the actual passage of the armies and of foraging parties, in 1777 and 1778, but at other times tilled their fields in personal security.

About one-fifth of the adult male Friends in Philadelphia had joined the American army, or taken places under the revolutionary government. A very small number had as openly espoused the cause of the king. The large majority, including the more representative Friends, with varying sympathies, had kept straight to the advice of their Yearly Meeting in favor of neutrality and non-participation. Dr. Fothergill wrote:

"Be quiet and mind your own buisness; promote every good work. Show yourselves subject to that overruling Providence which guides all things for the good of that immortal part which is made to subsist not only after all these transient outrages are at an end but through endless ages."

When news arrived of the landing of the English army on the Chesapeake, Congress, then in session at Philadelphia, recommended "That the Executive officers of the State of Pennsylvania be requested to cause all persons notoriously disaffected forthwith to be disarmed and secured until such time as they may be released without injury to the common cause. That it be recommended to the Supreme Executive Council of the State of Pennsylvania to cause diligent search to be made in the houses of all the inhabitants of the city of Philadelphia, who have not manifested their attachment to the American cause, for firearms, swords, bayonets, etc."

Three days later they further advise:

"That the several testimonies which have been published since the commencement of the present contest betwixt G. Britain and America, and the uniform tenor of the conduct, and conversation of a number of persons of considerable wealth, who profess themselves to belong to the society of people commonly called Quakers, render it certain and notorious that those persons are, with much rancor and bitterness, disaffected to the American cause: that, as these persons will have it in their power, so there is no doubt it will be their inclination, to communicate intelligence to the enemy, and, in various other ways, to injure the counsels and arms of America:

That when the enemy, in the month of December, 1776, were bending their progress towards the city of Philadelphia, a certain seditious publication, addressed 'To our friends and brethren in religious profession in these and the adjacent provinces,' signed John Pemberton, in and on behalf of the meeting of sufferings held at Philadelphia for Pennsylvania and New Jersey, the 26th of the 12th month, 1776, was published, and, as your committee is credibly informed, circulated amongst many members of the society called Quakers, throughout the different states:

"That, as the seditious paper aforesaid originated in the city of Philadelphia, and as the persons whose names are under-mentioned, have uniformly manifested a disposition highly inimical to the cause of America, therefore,

"Resolved, That it be earnestly recommended to the supreme executive council of the state of Pennsylvania, forthwith to apprehend and secure the persons of Joshua Fisher, Abel James, James Pemberton, Henry Drinker, Israel Pemberton, John James, Samuel Pleasants, Thomas Wharton, sen., Thomas Fisher, son of Joshua, and Samuel Fisher, son of Joshua, together with all such papers in their possession as may be of a political nature.

"And whereas, there is strong reason to apprehend that these persons maintain a correspondence and connexion highly prejudicial to the public safety, not only in this state but in the several states of America.

"Resolved, That it be recommended to the executive powers of the respective states, forthwith to apprehend and secure all persons, as well among the people called Quakers as others, who have, in their general conduct and conversation, evidenced a disposition inimical to the cause of America; and that the persons so seized, be confined in such places, and treated in such manner, as shall be consistent with their respective characters and security of their persons:

"That the records and papers of the meetings of sufferings in the respective states be forthwith secured and carefully examined, and that such parts of them as may be of a political nature, be forthwith transmitted to Congress."

Under cover of these resolutions the Council proceeded to arrest about forty people, more for the purpose of striking terror into British sympathizers than anything else. There was no trial, or even hearing. They were merely hurried into confinement, their houses searched, their desks broken open for compromising papers, and a parole, including a promise to remain in their houses, demanded of them. Some of them gave it, others, including all the Quakers, refused.

The authorities, therefore, had on their hands a company of about twenty people of irreproachable character, highly respected in all the relations of private life, against whom no definite charges could be preferred, but who refused even to promise good behavior if allowed to remain at their homes. They said they had committed no offences and that it was an outrage to throw citizens into jail without a charge, and present a test to them, as if they had ever been guilty of misconduct, and could be suspected for the future.

There was undoubtedly considerable popular outcry against them, due in part to general suspicions, in part to the epistles of the meetings, more especially that of the Meeting for Sufferings, the objectionable paragraph of which has already been given in a previous number, and in part to the publication of a curious paper said to have been captured by General Sullivan on Staten Island with the British baggage, which was considered evidence of treasonable correspondence with the enemy.

This paper began with eight questions relating to the position of the American troops, and under the head of "Information from Jersey, 19 August, 1777," gave as a partial answer to them:

"It is said General Howe landed near the head of Chesapeake Bay but can not learn the particular spot or when.

"Washington lays in Pennsylvania about twelve miles from Coryell's Ferry.

"Sullivan lays about six miles north of Morristown with about 2000 men.

"Spanktown Yearly Meeting."

Then, in a postscript dated nine days later, was added information of the southward march of the various divisions of the army, with the number of each.

The only circumstance connecting the Quakers with the matter was the subscription "Spanktown Yearly Meeting." There was, of course, no such yearly meeting, but Spanktown was a name sometimes applied to Rahway, where was a Quarterly Meeting. The absurdity of an organized meeting being engaged in spying out the proceedings of the American army and signing its name did not save the report from receiving considerable credence. It was quickly pointed out that the 19th of August was several days before the landing, as was also the 22d, the date of the capture by Sullivan, and that the signature of a mythical yearly meeting to an otherwise unrecognizable letter was no proof of Quaker origin. Indeed, so far as the authorities were concerned, after a little investigation the matter was apparently allowed to drop, and the charges were based on the general belief in the English sympathies of the prisoners and the deliverances of the meetings. Spanktown, however, had a prominent place in the ephemeral literature of the day, and undoubtedly intensified the anti-Quaker feeling of the people, who apparently believed that every Quaker meeting was a centre of treasonable plotting and correspondence.

The searching of the prisoners' desks produced nothing except the minutes of the meetings, which were taken and printed by order of Congress and were with some difficulty regained. They contained only what the reader has already seen—nothing more compromising than the general advice to take no part in the revolution. There were no evidences of correspondence with the enemy, and we must believe James Pemberton when he writes to Robert Morris from Virginia:

"I can with much firmness and truth assert my innocence of having given any occasion for the hard treatment I have received from this unnatural banishment.....From a mind conscious of integrity and innocence I can unreservedly declare that I have never had at any time the least correspondence with General Howe or any British commander or others concerned in the military operations against America nor do I intend to have; I hope my general conduct and conversation have evidenced me a friend to mankind and my country, and I am restrained from a pure principle of conscience in doing anything to promote contention, war & bloodshed among men whose universal welfare I much desire."

"'Tis only noble to be good."

FOR THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

THE TOUCH OF JESUS.

BY GEORGE DANA BOARDMAN, D.D.

The sense of touch is the fundamental sense. For example: We hear, because the auditory nerve is touched; we see, because the optic nerve is touched; we smell, because the olfactory nerve is touched; we taste, because the gustatory nerve is touched; we feel, because some sensitive nerve is touched. Handling, hearing, seeing, smelling, tasting, feeling, sensibility—these are different illustrations of the same foundation sense—the sense of touch.

How vividly all this comes out in such familiar expressions as these: "Artist's master touch"; "touch of genius"; "a touching story"; "in touch with the people"; "out of touch with the times"; "one touch of nature makes the whole world kin."

No wonder, then, that the Lord of nature so often used this sense of touch. For example: Does Peter's mother-in-law lie ill of a fever? Jesus touches her hand; the fever leaves her. Does a Galilean leper kneel before Him, begging to be cleansed? Jesus is moved with compassion, stretches forth His hand, touches him; the leper is cleansed. Is a funeral procession coming from Nain? Jesus approaches the bier, touches it; the dead youth sits up. Are flute-players making lamentation over the dead body of Jairus' daughter? Jesus touches the maiden's hand; her spirit returns, she walks. Do two blind men of Capernaum beg Him for mercy? Jesus touches their eyes; they see. Is Peter sinking in Gennesaret's waves? Jesus stretches forth His hand, touches him; he is saved. Do citizens of Decapolis beseech Him to heal a deaf stammerer? Jesus puts His fingers into the unfortunate's ears, and touches his tongue; the deaf ears are opened, the tied tongue speaks plain. Do citizens of Bethsaida bring a blind man for cure? Jesus touches his eyes; the blind man sees. Are the favorite three terrified by their Master's transfiguration? Jesus comes and touches them; they are calmed. Is the demoniac boy convulsed in death? Jesus touches him; he is healed. Does a woman bowed with a spirit of infirmity eighteen years worship in a synagogue? Jesus calls her, and touches her; immediately she is made straight. Are blind men begging by the gates of Jericho? Jesus touches their eyes; straightway they see. Does Peter strike off the right ear of Malchus? Jesus touches his ear; it is healed. Is the exile (John at Patmos) affrighted by his vision of the risen King? The risen King touches him; he is calmed.

Why did Jesus thus appeal to the sense of touch? Was it because He could not heal without touching? No; He healed the nobleman's son in Capernaum, while He Himself remained in Cana. Why then did He touch? Because His touches, like His miracles, were acted parables.

Glance at some of these parable-touches. For example: There was the touch of encouragement, as when He stretched forth His hand to the sinking Peter. There was the touch of affection, as when He laid His hands on the infants of Perea. There was the touch of instruction, as when He healed the deaf stammerer of Decapolis, taking Him aside from the crowd, putting His fingers into the unhearing ears, touching the inarticulate tongue, looking heavenward. There was the touch of sympathy, as when He stretched forth His hand and touched the Galilean leper.

Here in fact was one of the great meanings of the Incarnation itself. The Son of God became the Son of man in order that He might get into touch with our leprous humanity, and cleanse it with His own purifying contact. We cannot be too grateful that Jesus is not a fastidious Saviour.

Here also is the secret of Christ's great sway. He rules our hearts, not by patronizing us from Heaven's throne, but by associating with us in earth's vale. His gentleness makes us great.

And here also is the secret of our own healing ministry. What our leprous world needs is the healing touch of a practical, sympathetic contact. It may be that the church is losing many a Paul, because no Ananias or Barnabas offers to give the right hand of fellowship to Saul of Tarsus.

Philadelphia, Pa.

Charles Tyler, in "Witnesses for Christ," relates how "a premium for pulpit oratory," at the end of the fourth century of our era, "led to a contempt of simple Gospel ministry when unaccompanied by learning and eloquence.

"In the still earlier period of the church the free exercise of prophecy and teaching in the congregation was exchanged for the ministry of one man only; grievous loss was incurred, and this loss was yet more enhanced when it came to be held of first importance that the minister should be both scholar and orator.

"No warrant for such a change is to be found in the New Testament, where a sound knowledge of Scriptural truth, with faith and love and the anointing of the Holy Spirit, are set forth as the only and sufficient qualifications of the Gospel herald.

"This departure from the original Christian institutes brought with it a train of evil consequences."

"Not only were those gifts stifled which the apostle so fully recognized as the spiritual possession of the many, but the congregation no longer came together to realize the presence of Christ in their midst, and to wait for the manifestation of His spirit.

"They came to see and to hear and to be entertained."

"The Preachers,' as Gregory Nazianzen observes, 'too often seek to adorn the artless piety of our religion by introducing into the sanctuary a new sort of secular oratory, borrowed from the forum and the theatre.'"

"The multitude seek not priests but rhetoricians; and I must say something in their defence. We have thus brought them up, by our desire to become 'all things to all men.' I know not whether for the perdition or salvation of all.'"

LETTER FROM THE HOLY LAND.

Ramallah, Palestine, First month 12th, 1899.

Dear Friends: We have been holding the enclosed letter since Twelfth month 20th, in order to be able to inform you that success has at last crowned our efforts.

To-day the Governor of Jerusalem and the heads of departments have signed the long-awaited-for "Licenses," and given them into my hands, thus placing our Mission upon better footing than any other like work in Palestine, for which we are devoutly thankful. We now expect to take the first steamer to our native land.

We have now at the Training Home twenty-seven girls and one boy. Two girls and the boy come in school hours to recite only.

We try to impress upon the people that this institution is intended for the instruction of bright, active and healthy girls, who will be likely to make missionaries, teachers, good wives or helpers in the future, for the elevation of their own people; so many applicants who do not fulfil the above requirements are rejected.

The health of all at this writing is excellent, for which we are truly thankful.

It is a beautiful sight to look into their spacious school room, and see so many children with happy faces, and all so obedient and diligent in their studies.

For a few days after the opening of the term, the school room looked like a wholesale dress-making establishment, so many dresses had to be made for the new-comers, eight in number.

The most of these girls came to us without a single garment suitable to wear.

One of our girls, Zereefie Abou Shalah, is about thirteen years of age. She was in the school a few years, when her mother died. When Zereefie was eight or nine years old her father took her out of the school to sell her, in order to obtain money to buy himself a wife; but not succeeding in this, he has kept her home to do the drudgery.

Formerly when we tried to get Zereefie back, the father would reply, "Give me money to buy me a wife, and you may have the girl."

Just as this term opened the father came to the Mission and said, "If Friends would feed, clothe and educate his boy, now about eight and a half years old, we might have the daughter." This offer we at once accepted, and Zereefie is again in the Training Home. The boy has been clothed, board with a relative obtained, and Ghamin is in one of our day schools doing well.

In Seventh month last we turned over the books, funds, and the immediate care of the Mission to our successors, Wilfred and Della Rowntree, since which time we have ourselves done whatever our hands found to do.

As most of the committee are aware, at about that time we petitioned the Turkish Government for a license to exempt the Mission from taxation, customs duties, and the fear of having our work interrupted.

Week after week we have followed up our petition. Promise after promise has been given, delay after delay upon trivial excuses have been made, until we are almost worn out; but considering the great value to the Mission of this license, if obtained, we have persevered—attended day after day the courts, answered every requisition, traveled hundreds of miles horseback to and fro, and, at last, we have obtained the papers we were promised by the highest authorities in the Government that we should ultimately get.

As all papers are drawn in my name, as Trustee, I have not dared to leave the case lest all fall through. We committed it all unto the Lord, laboring and trusting that He would bring the same to a successful issue.

We have made some changes in the medical work, which we have not fully reported, as, expecting so soon to be with you, we could then explain all so much better than by writing. We have all considered the changes prayerfully together, and are fully persuaded that the changes made are for the best good of the people and the Mission.

Without reviewing the past or attempting to explain in writing all the reasons for making the changes, we will say in brief that we found the medical work was not accomplishing, in the way it was carried on, the spiritual good we so much desired, nor giving the proper teaching to the people.

When Dr. Malouf was allowed to resign, some two years ago, he left very pleasantly, and his conduct since, so far as we have learned, has been above reproach. He at once opened an office and dispensary on Market Street, Ramallah, where he is attending his patients satisfactorily and, we think, successfully.

We experienced the same difficulty with the spiritual work under our new Dr. Kavar, and at the end of the year for which he was engaged we allowed him to retire.

At this stage Elias Audi, our dispenser, informed us that he would like to carry on the dispensary on his own account—sell medicine as other apothecary shops do. This we approved, and we sold him all the medicine in the dispensary, retaining all the medical instruments and furniture.

This, in brief, is the present situation. At the time of making the changes we had blank slips printed—form given below—which we have supplied to Dr. Malouf and Elias Audi.

We have previously written how well our arrangement with the German Hospital has proved. The same continues, much to our satisfaction, and while we have some patients there the most of the time, the expense is very small.

The cost of the medical department, as formerly conducted, was to the Mission, in round numbers, one thousand dollars a year.

Under the present arrangement the cost will be less than one-quarter that sum, and we believe more good will be accomplished. We have long felt that it would be better for all who are amply able to pay for their medicine and attendance than for the Mission to pauperize them by giving it to them.

Friends will see by our systematic arrangements that all who are poor are amply provided for.

In our experience here we have learned that very much of the sickness is caused by the habits of the people. Many of them live in dark, smoky and really filthy homes, children seldom if ever washed, hence the great mortality among the children.

We have felt for a long time the pressing need of a good, motherly, Christian woman—a sort of deaconess—to go about teaching the people cleanliness and showing them by actual contact with them a better way.

To give an example. A few days ago a woman came to the Mission to ask for an order to admit some of her children to the Hospital. My wife and I went at once to visit her home. There we found, living in one room, and that totally dark except when the door was open, with no other egress for the smoke than the same door, two fathers, two mothers, nine children and a grandmother. My wife sent her interpreter to the Mission for warm water, soap and towels, and with their own hands they washed the nine children, six of whom were sick with very sore eyes, one so bad we sent him at once to the Hospital; the rest, after the washing and an application of eye water, were all comfortable. We explained to the people the cause of the sickness—the neglecting to wash their eyes and living in the dirt and smoke. We persuaded them to open an old closed window and clean up their home.

Now, this is what is needing to be done over the village, and the Lord has most remarkably opened the way for it. Martha Nuss, a most estimable woman, is feeling that the Lord would have her do this very work. Her whole heart and soul is in it, and she left the boarding house she opened and has entered most heartily into this Deaconess work. She loves to wash the children, sweep the rooms and so teach the mothers how to care for their families.

We think under this arrangement a very large percentage of the sickness of the children will be avoided. This will also give an excellent opportunity for her to read the Bible and impart some spiritual instruction.

Martha's sister, Hannah Nuss, who has so long and faithfully taught "Hope School," has just left us, on account of the recent death of a brother in America, and has gone to be with and comfort her aged parents in Mt. Lebanon. We hope she may be able to return to us in the spring.

Katie Gabriel, who has been and is still a tower of strength to the Mission, feels that, having taught school now for about twenty-five years, she must have a rest, and she has notified us that she can continue with us only the present year. Hers is a most responsible position, and we feel that the Committee should be looking for a strong and worthy American woman to take her place as Principal of the Training Home School.

Jeanie Hishmah and Anesia Malouf continue as formerly as assistants in the Training Home, and Della Rowntree has her classes in English as last year.

The present arrangement of teachers in the out-school is as follows: For Ramallah—Affufie Fargella, in "Hope School"; Nayha Rodeslie, in "Western School"; Martha Totah, in "North School"; Julia Salfetie, in "The Thomas Wood School."

The above teachers are graduates of the Training Home and board in the Mission.

The school in Ophrah is taught by Rachoot Kirdehie; Aris Areek School, by Helanie Totah, one of our girls; Jiffneh School by Lamya Gibran, graduate of the Training Home. All of these schools are doing excellent work.

We wish to express our warmest thanks, on behalf of the Mission, to the dear friends for their generous and valued donations contained in the three well-filled boxes, which reached Ramallah Eleventh month 27th; and we would also tender thanks in advance for a fourth box from Purchase Quarterly Meeting, New York, on the way, but not yet arrived.

All the gifts intended for the girls of the Training Home at Christmas will be made very pleasing and useful to them, and will add much to their enjoyment of a happy Christmas time at the Mission.

The supply of five thousand envelopes, so liberally contributed, will meet a great need here, we think, for several years to come. We are very thankful for them.

The bountiful donation of sheets and pillow slips which the boxes contained, all beautifully made and ready for service, are very acceptable and greatly prized. They represent in a very touching manner the loving interest and generosity of our dear home workers, whose share of blessing in helping on the work at Ramallah must surely be counted a goodly part in the Master's sight.

These goods, of such excellent cotton, are the more highly valued from the fact that cotton material purchased in Jerusalem is much inferior to that manufactured in America, and this is true of most imported fabrics found here. They are not as serviceable and satisfactory as our country goods are.

The Bible School Fifth-day evening meetings, Christian Endeavor and Teachers' Meetings, all under the care of Wilfred Rowntree, are doing excellent service.

All the work built here last year has proved very satisfactory, water supply ample and everything prosperous.

MISSIONARY ITEMS.

Recent letters from Nanking, China, tell of the prosperous condition of the new work at Luh-Hoh, under care of Margaret Holmes and Dr. French.

England has gained the right of way from Cairo to Cape Town, and now you can travel on English steamers, railways and roads for the whole six thousand miles. It will not be long until the screech of the locomotive will be heard for the entire distance. What will become of the poor blacks when the path is so fully opened for commerce with its accursed rum traffic? We only know that we are commanded to preach the Gospel to every one of them, and to try to protect them to the best of our ability.

Pundita Ramabai has returned to India to give herself now wholly to religious work. Surely she is to be commended for that, for only an unadulterated Gospel can save a Hindoo or an American.

Missionary societies are still forced to cry retrenchment in spite of the fact that America was never so rich as to-day, nor so prosperous. What does it all mean? Banks are loaded with money, rates of interest are at a minimum; great industries, as for instance, the iron trade, cannot produce fast enough to supply the demand; produce cannot find cars for transportation, and yet our giving for God is on the most parsimonious scale known in the history of our nation.

Henry Stanley Newman has written an interesting article in a recent number of "Our Missions" on "The Polity of Faith," citing the resolution of the Church Missionary Society that no candidate shall be held back from the field on financial grounds only. Since that decision, in 1887, the missionary force has increased more than for fifty years before, and the funds have come in accordingly! Do we believe that God has called men to this work? Then why not trust him? Would not a similar policy of faith in our American work be more honored of Him?

Hold sorrow till its most selfish aspect passes, till it turns its religious side to you; till time and experience and faith do their work; till you feel not its gloom, but its glory; not its cross, but its crown. Do not, through any device, lose its sanctifying influence, the greatest loss the soul can meet.—J. F. W. Ware.

FRIENDS WEST OF THE MISSISSIPPI.—IV.

BY M. Z. KIRK.

FRIENDS IN NORTH CENTRAL KANSAS.

While making a hurried trip through the meetings of north central Kansas the writer gathered a few items of interest concerning the growth and development of Friends here.

Among the first settlers in this part of the state were a number of Friends. The following families, John Green, Abner George, Miles Moon, Elias Ratcliff, Abel Carter, Isaac Hawkins and others, settled in Jewell County, southeast of the present town of North Branch, in the early seventies. As usual, this many Friends could not live in the same part of the county without a meeting. For some time they met at John Green's home; when the log school-house was built they met there for a while, and then built a "dug-out soddie" meeting-house in the "draw" near the present site of the Walnut Creek meeting-house. Although they had no minister in the settlement they had a very good meeting, and Andrew Wooton, who lived near Glen Elder, frequently came over and preached to them. John and Alkana Mardock, of Washington County, also took a prominent part in this meeting for some time.

Walnut Creek Meeting was set off from Bangor, Iowa, Quarter, in 1872, and was transferred to Springdale, Kansas, Quarter.

When the Monthly Meeting was established Thomas Moore and Martha Mendenhall were appointed clerks.

Largely through the influence of the above-named ministers, the following meetings were soon set up: Mill Creek, near Haworth, in Washington County; Mt. Ayr, in Osborn County; North Branch, in Jewell County; Glen Elder, in Mitchell County.

These meetings, which are now in three Quarterly Meetings, were finally united into Walnut Creek Quarter. Here, as is always the case in a new country, the representatives from the subordinate meetings had to travel long distances to attend Quarterly Meetings.

Pleasant View and Mt. Ayr Quarters have been set off from Walnut Creek, but the latter still has a membership of 969, and is composed of the following meetings: Walnut Creek, P. O., Burr Oak, Kansas; Oak Creek, P. O., Burr Oak, Kansas; Glen Elder, P. O., Glen Elder, Kansas; Fairview, P. O., Glen Elder, Kansas; Gosper, Arapahoe, Nebraska; Highland, Elwood, Nebraska; Pleasant Valley, Narcator, Kansas; Sherman, Edson, Kansas; Bellevue, Goodland, Kan.

The Friends in this Quarter have no regular pastors, but the resident ministers are well organized, and go from place to place from Sabbath to Sabbath. The last Quarterly Meeting was one of great interest in many ways. Josiah Dillon, of Iowa Yearly Meeting, was present, and preached with his usual earnestness and power. Eliza Carey, the Superintendent of Evangelistic Work, was present, and did a great work in harmonizing this Quarterly Meeting with the actions of the Yearly Meeting. Here, as in almost every other Quarter, some Friends never read the reports of the Yearly Meeting in the church paper or in the minutes, but trust to hearsay, and consequently they come up to Quarterly Meeting with a great deal of unnecessary prejudice. If Friends would post themselves on such subjects from reliable sources they would save themselves and the meetings a great deal of trouble. She explained that the Evangelistic, Pastoral and Church Extension Board was made up of two members from each Quarterly Meeting. This board meets and elects its officers, who form the Executive Committee. The officers are as follows: President, Nathan Brown, Barclay; Vice-President, Eusebia Couch, Prairie Center; Secretary, Ezra Spencer, Argonia; Treasurer, Josiah Binford, Haviland; Superintendent, Eliza H. Carey, Wichita.

"It is the duty of the Executive Committee and the Board to arrange the meetings in pastoral charges. George Fox called this work spiritual oversight of the members. Our plan is such as to insure this spiritual oversight in every particular, and every Monthly Meeting, whether the work be done by the Evangelistic Committee, by the ministers and elders, or by a minister who has been relieved from the ordinary cares of life. It is the duty of the Evangelistic Committee of a Monthly Meeting to look after the pastoral care of the meeting, whether the work be done by a pastor or a committee. The Board desires that every meeting shall have a living spiritual care of the new converts and members. Many Friends have feared that the pastor would want to do all the work, and the members would not have an opportunity to exercise their gifts. It is not the pastor's duty to do all the work, or to try to do ten men's work, but to try to get ten men to do their work. The pastor is one who improves and feeds the flock. If a pastor doesn't get some one to become a minister or a very active worker, he is a failure. He is also out of place when he takes up all the hour for service. By some of the above plans it is hoped that all members of Kansas Yearly Meeting, and those interested, shall be visited during the year. It is also hoped that this committee will help to shield the meetings from religious cranks, tramps, and those who teach unsound doctrines, all of whom were plainly denounced at Kansas Yearly Meeting." After this careful explanation of all the plans for the coming year, Walnut Creek Quarter expressed itself as exceedingly well pleased, as all other Quarters no doubt will when the facts are presented.

NORTH BRANCH ACADEMY.

Walnut Creek Quarter followed the example of the Eastern Friends, and began to look after the mental as well as the spiritual welfare of its young people. They discussed the feasibility of establishing an academy for several years. In 1889 they remodeled the meeting-house, and added one room to it, and opened the school that year. The following Friends have served them as principals: H. H. Townsend, D. R. Haworth, C. V. Marshall and A. H. Symons.

Since this institution was established hundreds of young men and women have enjoyed its advantages, and twenty-one graduates have been sent out. No one can ever tell the influence of this institution over the Quarterly Meeting, the town and the county. They are constantly supplying the county with a great many good teachers. Last year was the best in the history of the institution. The enrollment the past fall was not as large as a year ago, but the work is in a good, healthy condition. The principal realizes more fully than any one else that the success of the institution is due in no small degree to the faithful work of the assistant, Rose Haworth.

If crops are good next year a good, substantial and commodious academy building will be erected. As this country grows older there is certainly no reason why this academy should not be more successful in the future than in the past. For some time this Quarterly Meeting had two academies, but Grellet Academy was burned some years ago, and the Glen Elder Friends have about concluded not to rebuild.

GLEN ELDER MONTHLY MEETING.

This Monthly Meeting is in very good working order. Since the burning of the academy the Glen Elder Friends have had to meet in the school-house, but they have commenced building a very comfortable and substantial meeting-house. They have a membership of 50, a Sabbath School of 45, and a Christian Endeavor of 12. As was stated above, Andrew Wooton moved here more than twenty years ago, and helped found this meeting. The Hadleys were also among the earliest settlers. Noah Hadley, THE AMERICAN FRIEND agent here, was formerly a resident of Iowa, and he drove from Bangor to the Three Rivers country, and on to Spring Creek with the committee from Indiana Yearly Meeting when they came out to see about setting up a new Yearly Meeting.

Fairview Meeting is about three miles south of Glen Elder. Thomas Outlands moved from Hesper, Kansas, to this place about twelve years ago. They, with others, kept up a Sabbath School in the school-house during the summer for some time, but under very unfavorable circumstances. About five years ago they began keeping up the Sabbath School regularly. Friends' ministers came in from time to time, and a Christian Endeavor was established in 1895. They were granted a meeting last Sixth month. Owing to the excellent wheat crop this year they thought it a very good time to build a meeting-house, and they did so. Dillon H. Dillon, who has a very warm place in the hearts of the Friends of Mitchell County, held a revival meeting here after Kansas Yearly Meeting. The meeting was greatly blessed, and they have undertaken an aggressive work from their new church home.

PLEASANT VIEW QUARTER.

This Quarterly Meeting has the best historical sketch of its meetings of any Quarter the writer has examined. Kansas Yearly Meeting has urged that every meeting and every quarter should enter upon their minutes a full history of the meetings. This is a thing every meeting in America should do.

In the early 70's Friends began to settle in Washington County, Kansas. In the spring of 1872 a few Friends met in William C. Brown's little log cabin on Mill Creek, near Cuba, Republic County, Kansas. Tonganoxie Monthly Meeting gave them a Preparative Meeting, which was set up at the home of Isaac Mardock, with Abner B. George as clerk for the day. The meetings were held from house to house, until the summer of 1877, when they built a log house, in which the meetings were held until the fall of 1883, when they erected their present frame house. The old log house is still standing, and is a relic of pioneer times in this part of the state. Through the faithfulness of Elkana and John F. Mardock and other Friends their numbers greatly increased until, in Eleventh month, 1876, Union Monthly Meeting was set up in Washington County by Springdale Quarterly Meeting, and was held alternately at Mill Creek, Riddle Creek and Peach Creek; the latter is now called Dale. This Monthly Meeting suffered a great loss in the death of Elkana Mardock, in Second month, 1879. These meetings increased until, in 1882, Mill Creek Monthly Meeting was set off from Union Monthly Meeting by Walnut Creek Quarter. They had at that time 172 members, but when Pleasant View Monthly Meeting was set off, in 1886, they numbered 351. They number at present about 240. They have three ministers,—James Henley, John H. Haworth and Lealdes E. Mardock.

In the fall of 1869 James J. Picketts and Herrald Beesons settled on Peach Creek. John F. and Elkana Mardock left their home one day, and after traveling about fifteen miles southward they felt they had gone far enough, and they stopped, and, greatly to their surprise, found themselves among these Friends. They began a meeting at once, and soon had a Friends' meeting with 60 members. Union Monthly Meeting granted them a meeting for worship and a Preparative Meeting on Eleventh mo. 5th, 1881. After the establishing of Mill Creek Monthly Meeting, in 1883, Union Monthly Meeting (now Dale) was held alternately at Riddle Creek and Peach Creek until Twelfth month, 1888, when Mapleton Monthly Meeting (now Washington) was set off.

In 1883, by request of Union and Mill Creek Monthly Meeting, Pleasant View Quarterly Meeting was granted by Kansas Yearly Meeting, and set up Eleventh month 10th, 1883, at Pleasant View. Those of the Yearly Meeting's committee present were: Penelope Gardner, Mariam Maxwell, Mahlon and Elizabeth Newlin. Simon and Ruth Stout were appointed clerks for the day.

Elisha H. Janeway and Mary A. Roberts were appointed to time the meeting. The Quarterly Meeting was always held at Pleasant View until 1891. Since then it has been held at Mill Creek, in Eleventh month; Washington, in Second month; Triumph, Nebraska, in Fifth month, and Pleasant View, in Eighth month. After the Quarterly Meeting was set up the following Monthly Meetings were established: Mapleton (now Washington), Pleasant View, Platt Valley (now transferred to Iowa Yearly Meeting); Grace, in Sherman County (discontinued).

In 1869 Nathan W. and Asa H. Bales settled on Riddle Creek, Washington County, and the following fall Jane J. Williams and husband located there. They organized a Sabbath School the next summer in a log school-house. In the fall of 1874 Elkana Mardock, of Mill Creek, came into this neighborhood, and held meetings by appointment until the winter of 1875, when they began a revival. A meeting was soon organized with 40 members.

In 1882 and 1883 a subscription was taken at Pleasant View to build a new house, which was built the following summer at a cost of $700. The meeting increased very rapidly, and a Preparative Meeting was organized in the fall of 1883, and a Monthly Meeting in Ninth month 10th, 1886, with 85 members.

Triumph Preparative Meeting was organized in First month, 1884, by Union Monthly Meeting. The Monthly Meeting was established Sixth month 19th, 1886, with 56 members.

Sherman Monthly Meeting was set up Sixth month 14th, 1890, in District No. 2, Sherman County, with 21 members. Bellevue was set up by Sherman Monthly Meeting Ninth month 15th, 1894, but was abandoned in 1895 because of the failure of crops.

From the above we see that the faithful work of a few pioneers has resulted in the establishing of three Quarterly Meetings, with a total membership of 2,037.

WASHINGTON ACADEMY.

This Quarterly Meeting, as others, realized the importance of a guarded education. In 1889 they built the Academy, and Elam Henderson opened the school with 9 students, and the total enrollment for the year was 55. The second year W. C. Pidgeon was made principal, and the enrollment for the year averaged 45. The three years following this the crops were good, and W. C. Pidgeon and H. C. Fellow increased the attendance to about 140. The principals changed, and the crops were poor the next two years, and the enrollment for the spring term of 1896 was only 24.

The fall of 1896 Prof. A. W. Jones took the management of the school, and lost money on it the first year. By his excellent work and careful management in the school room, and his hard work in soliciting students during the summer, the enrollment was increased the second year, and this fall they lead all the Kansas Yearly Meeting academies with an enrollment of 79. The total number for the year will far exceed 100, and they hope for 150. There are a great many things that go to make up a successful year's work at an academy. In the first place the principal must be a teacher of energy, and able to meet men and women and young people, as well as have the self-sacrificing spirit of a Quaker preacher. There are times when there are but few young people in range of the academy who can be interested in education. In times of prosperity some young men think their time too valuable to spend in school. When times are hard a great many think they can't possibly afford to go to school. With all of these influences bearing upon an institution, it is not strange that they are sometimes booming and at other times almost dead.

Now that the Doukhobors have been given a home in Canada, their customs and character are being exposed to the searchlight of inquiry. It seems to be the unanimous agreement of those that have expressed an opinion that these settlers from the distant Caucasus are valuable acquisitions to the Dominion's population. "The Free Press" of Ottawa says: "Now not only is the Northwest, like Oliver Twist, asking for 'more,' but old Quebec is casting sheep's eyes toward the Caucasus, and alluding to the desirableness of some of 'the next batch' settling on some of the vast areas of land to the north of Quebec, now lying fallow for want of cultivation."

"I should be the veriest shallow and self-conceited blockhead upon the footstool," said Abraham Lincoln, "if, in my discharge of the duties that are put upon me in this place, I should hope to get along without the wisdom that comes from God, and not from men."

CHRIST FREEING FROM SIN.

John 8: 12, 31-36.

GOLDEN TEXT.—If the Son, therefore, shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed.—John 8: 36.

DAILY READINGS.

Second-day, Second mo. 27.—Christ freeing from sin. John 8: 12, 28-36.

Third-day, Second mo. 28.—Scripture fulfilled. Luke 4: 14-22.

Fourth-day, Third mo. 1.—Power to forgive. Luke 5: 18-26.

Fifth-day, Third mo. 2.—Dead to sin. Rom. 6: 1-11.

Sixth-day, Third mo. 3.—Free to serve. Rom. 6: 15-23.

Seventh-day, Third mo. 4.—Redeemed from bondage. Gal. 4: 1-7.

First-day, Third mo. 5.—Deliverance from sin. 1 John 3: 1-10.

The time of the present lesson would appear to be either the same day as that of the last lesson, or the day after; that is, the eighth day after the beginning of the Feast of Tabernacles.

The connection appears to be close with verse 52 of chapter 7. Almost all scholars now regard the section, John 7: 53,—8: 1-11, as now being part of the Gospel of John, and it will be noticed that in the Revised Version it is placed within brackets. The general opinion is that it is a true historical incident; that it is part of Gospel history, but that it was not written by John; how it came to be put where it is, cannot as yet be explained. In some manuscripts it is placed in Luke, after chapter 21, where it would come in very naturally; it is certainly out of place in John.

Jesus was speaking in the courts of the temple. Some think that he must have been speaking in the court of women, because it is known that in it were two very high candlesticks or candelabra, on which were placed lights, during the Feast of Tabernacles, which could be seen all over the city. It was this fact to which Christ made allusion. This is all the more probable if reference is made to Exodus 13: 21.

12. "Then spake Jesus again." "Again therefore." Revised Version. The attempt to stop him had failed. (See John 7: 45-48.) "I am the light of the world." Christ illumines. Note that he says "of the world." His illumination is not bounded by race or country, for "He hath bidden all mankind." "He that followeth." Just as the Israelite was to follow the pillar of cloud by day and the pillar of fire by night, so the believer in the Lord Jesus Christ must go on where the "gleam" leads. "The light is given for action, movement, progress." "Darkness." Compare John 1: 5; 1 John 2: 9, 11. "Shall have." Shall possess—it shall be part of his own possessions. "Light of life." "That of which life is the essential principle and which issues in life."

31. "Jesus therefore said." Revised Version. It would seem that the words which follow were spoken at a different time, as the verb is "had believed." See Revised Version. "If ye abide in my word, then are ye truly my disciples." Revised Version." Word here means the teaching, the life, the example of Christ. The true test of discipleship is abiding. "Not every one that saith unto me Lord, Lord, . . . but he that doeth the will of my Father." The promise is discipleship; the condition is living, working, following, Christ. Disciple means learner. One who learns advances. Discipleship means, therefore, progress. 2. Peter 3: 18.

32. "And ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." Note the close connection with the preceding verse. Knowledge of the truth comes from the practical living out the truth. There can be no real understanding of God's protecting care unless there be practical experience. Too often churches require adherence to creeds before there is real spiritual life. A man may believe that Jesus spoke the truth, and yet not believe on Jesus. It is the life that brings knowledge of the truth. "Shall make you free." Knowledge of the truth sets men free from fear, superstition, narrowness, error, from things that cramp and hinder. But what Jesus meant pre-eminently here, was freedom from the guilt and power of sin. That freedom comes through the personal apprehension of Christ as the Saviour.

33. "They answered him." From the context "they" must be the Jews who had believed him. This verse implies that their belief had not gone very deep. "Have never yet been in bondage," etc. In one sense this was true,—they had never been reduced to actual slavery, certainly not since leaving Egypt, but in the truest sense they had been in bondage to Babylon, and were now under the yoke of Rome.

34. "Jesus answered," etc. Jesus, according to his usual custom, makes no attempt to argue, but continues his discourse. The Revised Version is better. "Everyone that committeth sin is the bondservant (slave) of sin." Whosoever keeps on sinning falls into the habit of sinning, and becomes the slave of the habit. This great moral truth has been clearly recognized by all moral philosophers, heathen as well as Christian. The original shows clearly that Christ did not mean to say that a single sin makes a man the slave of sin. The verse suggests verse 31. As continuing in Christ's word makes the disciple, so continuing in sin makes the slave. Compare Romans 6: 16-18; 7: 9-24; 1 John 3: 4, 8; 2 Peter 2: 19.

35. "The bondservant." Revised Version. The verse is a general statement. Not any slave abideth in the house forever, but any son does abide. The contrast is between son and slave. There is probably no reference to the son of God. Some think that there is an illusion to Ishmael.

36. There is now a transition to the Divine Son. True freedom comes through the Son of God, and if He makes us free, we are "indeed" (essentially, absolutely) free. Romans 8 is a comment on this, particularly verses 2, 14, 15. Freedom is not to be independent of law, but to have true understanding of law and of the right use of it.

PRACTICAL THOUGHTS.

1. Pedigree is nothing unless righteousness accompanies it.
2. "He is the freeman whom the truth makes free, And all are slaves beside."
3. Jesus said: "I am the way, and the truth and the life."

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC FOR THIRD MONTH FIFTH, 1899.

THE GATES OF ZION.

Ps. 87: 1-7; 100: 1-5.

Second-day, Second mo. 27.—How amiable are Thy tabernacles! Ps. 84: 1-12.

Third-day, Second mo. 23.—Strength and beauty in sanctuary. Ps. 96: 1-13.

Fourth-day, Third mo. 1.—Holiness becometh Thine house. Ps. 93: 1-5.

Fifth-day, Third mo. 2.—Reverence My sanctuary. Lev. 26: 1-13.

Sixth day, Third mo. 3.—Help from the sanctuary. Ps. 20: 1-19.

Seventh day Third mo. 4.—Vows paid in God's house. Ps. 116: 1-19.

The obvious intention of this topic is to bring to our consideration one of the fundamental principles of the Endeavor movement,—namely, the church, and our relation to it.

What is a church, and what is it for? Wherein is it like or unlike other organizations? What is its relation to other organizations of society, and what is my relation to it? These and many similar questions may be asked with propriety, and carefully considered. Indeed, they demand far more careful consideration than is possible in this brief article.

New Testament definitions of the church begin with the word itself, which means "called out ones," as when a herald in some old Greek town went through the streets proclaiming a meeting of the assembly for the consideration of some question of public importance. So a church in New Testament usage is a company of called out ones, called out by God from the world, from death, from darkness, from sin, to life and light and righteousness. Again, it is a company of those who have truly come to know that Jesus Christ is the Son of God by the revelation of the Father to their souls, and who confess the same. It is a company of those to whom and in whom Jesus is revealed as the Son of God. Again, it is a body, not a mere aggregation of units like a sand heap, but a body united by one Spirit, and thus constituted members one of another. It is also the channel of the revelation of Jesus Christ to the world. As the "pillar and ground of the truth," it perpetuates in the world the witness for Him, and the manifestation of his life among men. It stands for the things He stood for. It is his body existing for his continued incarnation by the Spirit. It exists for mutual helpfulness in all things pertaining to our moral and spiritual life, and for co-operation in the great work of evangelizing the world.

In its relation to other organizations such as the political, educational, social or industrial, it does not usurp their functions, but ever stands for the eternal principles of righteousness and justice which should control all their actions. It does not exist to save men out of these organizations, but to put saved men into all these relations with the strength of God in them to walk aright among men. But the church does supersede the necessity for a multitude of organizations among men that have for their object certain professed moral or social ends that are better secured by the church, and upon the more enduring basis of faith in the Lord Jesus Christ. To sum it all up, the church is a body of people with a common faith in Jesus Christ as their Saviour, banded together in the power of the Holy Spirit for mutual helpfulness, and the great work of the evangelization of the world. The church as it exists in the world to-day may be far from this ideal. Indeed, it may have always been. But it comes nearer to it than any other organization known among men. Its defects do not inhere in the principles of its organization, but in the men who compose it. There is no hope of a more perfect church without more perfect men. Those who fall away from the church because of its defects have never succeeded in giving us anything better. The hope of the world does not lie in the abandonment of the church, but in the more perfect application of its fundamental principles to the needs of men.

What, then, is my duty to the church? First, I ought to belong to it as a living, saved man, ready to obey Jesus Christ. I ought to give up all other fellowships that interfere with the fullest discharge of my duties to the church and as a member of the church. I ought to engage in its work energetically, for half-hearted service is ruinous to any enterprise. I ought not to expect perfection in my brethren, but to bear patiently with their defects. I ought not to think so much about what I can get from the church as about what I can do for it. The church does not exist simply as a place for me to be fed, but also as a place for me to work in fellowship with others. We generally get from the church about in proportion as we contribute to it. Too many people want the church to look after them in trouble who never look after the church in prosperity.

Do not be a grumbler in the church, or a murmurer. Do not have a lot of grievances on hand. Do not be sensitive, always imagining somebody has slighted you. Be filled with the Spirit, and you will overcome all these weaknesses of the flesh. Be so full that you will have to overflow with love and joy and peace. That will cure your grumbling.

For THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

AN EVENING SONG.

When night upon the lips of earth
Her seal of silence sets,
I lay me down in His embrace
And He my sleep begets.

I close my eyes in perfect trust,
My head upon His breast;
And in my soul imagined birds
Sing all my sense to rest.

I lay me down untroubled, calm,
And let Him strengthen me,
That when I rise at morning-tide
I may more valiant be.

KANSAS YEARLY MEETING.

Coyville Monthly Meeting of Friends, in Buffalo Quarterly Meeting.—The Friends began a revival meeting at this place First month 3d and continued until the 25th of same month. Thirty-eight meetings in all were held. The meetings were under the leadership of Nathan D. Perry, and were in the power of the Holy Ghost; the church was greatly strengthened, sinners were converted and backsliders reclaimed. Sixteen in all were converted and some claimed sanctification. There were twelve accessions to the church. We thank our dear Heavenly Father for sending Brother Perry this way, and thank Him for His manifested presence with him and the church. Five years ago this meeting had only three members; we now have about sixty.

This meeting is located in Southeastern Kansas, near the north line of Wilson county, eight miles west of Buffalo. The meetings are held at Providence school, three and a half miles east of Coyville, in a good farming and stock-raising country; plenty of wood and water. We would be glad to welcome any Friends that would locate among us.

W. T. HUFF, Quarterly Meeting Superintendent.

The Executive Committee of the Evangelistic and Pastoral Board of Kansas Yearly Meeting would be glad to correspond with any person who feels called to pastoral work.

Such as wish to do so may address the undersigned,

NATHAN BROWN, Barclay, Kansas.

Clay, Oklahoma.—The Friends of Oklahoma Territory are still at work. Many difficulties confront us, but thank God for brave men and women who are not afraid to trust God! We are not gathering souls into the Society of Friends as in former days, but, thank God, we are holding our own. There are some finding out they are not Friends and are finding their places.

LODI BONSER.

Stella Quarterly Meeting will be held about twenty-two miles southeast of Pond Creek, Oklahoma Territory. Travelers wishing to visit us will please write to Chas. Jackson, Pond Creek, O. T.

Hesper, Kan.—Wm. G. Hubbard recently gave two lectures at Hesper Academy. Subjects: "Elements that Win," and "The Bible vs. the Liquor Traffic." Both of these lectures were of the highest merit and are commended by the people of Hesper to other academies and communities in need of first-class lectures.

The enrollment of students in the Academy is the largest for many years. All are of the academic grade, and are for the most part earnest, energetic students. An entertainment was given by the Hesperian Literary Society on the evening of Second month 3d.

The people here are very much favored by having the ministry of Wm. Elwood Mills, recently of California. It is a blessing to any meeting, and especially to one in connection with an educational institution, to have an able ministry.

IOWA YEARLY MEETING.

Isaac Rich has held meetings in Greenville Quarter and at Eagle City, where he is engaged as pastor.

There are twenty women ministers engaged as pastors in Iowa Yearly Meeting, all doing good work and well suited to their fields of labor.

Jessie Loyd has held meetings in Pleasant Plain, Salem, Bear Creek and Ackworth Quarters.

Viola Smith has been engaged in evangelistic work in South Dakota at Mt. Vernon, where Blanche Ford is pastor, and Harrison, where Carrie Butler is pastor. These meetings have been greatly blessed.

Chas. Wright has held successful meetings at Confidence, Bangor and Hartland, and is now engaged in Winneshiek Quarter.

The new meeting-house in Denver is expected to be completed by Fourth month 1st. George Weeks is pastor of the work there.

Birdie V. Batchlor is now located at Valton, Wis., as pastor.

President Rosenberger delivered an excellent address on Education at Central City, Neb., the evening of First month 14th, and the next morning preached an impressive sermon at the dedication of the new church.

Cassie Commons has been chosen pastor of Bear Creek Meeting.

Richard Newby has held meetings at Muscatine, Ida Groove, Iowa Falls, Hubbard, New Providence and West Branch, all of which have been blessed, and many have been saved and sanctified. He is now at New Sharon.

Joseph Coleman is holding meetings at Honey Creek.

Z. L. Martin attended Scranton Quarterly Meeting, held at Paton, First Month 28th and 29th.

Edwin Loft has been engaged in evangelistic work in Bear Creek, Oskaloosa and Ackworth Quarterly Meetings, and is now at Illinois Grove in Honey Creek Quarter. His work has been greatly blessed, resulting in the converting of some, a deepening of the life of the church, and additions to its membership.

Gilbert L. Pinkham gave a series of historical lectures at Pleasant Plain that were very instructive and entertaining. Other meetings would do well to arrange for these lectures.

A two days' Bible school conference was held at Salem, Iowa, First month 17th-19th.

The first session, on the evening of the 17th, opened with a full house. P. W. Raidabaugh, of Chicago, was present and gave the address of the evening, which was listened to with good interest. The day sessions were given to Bible normal lessons by P. W. Raidabaugh, and workers' conferences, conferred by Anna Draper.

P. W. Raidabaugh gave two lessons on the Book of Romans, one on 1 and 2 Cor., and one on the Book of Hebrews. The second evening he gave an address on the "Inspiration of the Bible."

This was the fourth annual two days' conference that has been held at Salem, and the interest has increased with each conference held.

Muscatine Bible School has recently organized a Home Department, and has a class of 11 members.

Blooming Bible school (near Muscatine) has a class of eleven members in their Home Department; they are also taking the normal courses prepared by the State Sabbath School Association, and hope to have several graduates this season.

INDIANA YEARLY MEETING.

Walnut Ridge, Ind.—On Second month 1st a series of meetings was commenced at this place, conducted by Oliver Beeson of Shirley, and Oliver Gotschall of Lewisville, sixteen sessions were held; which resulted in the conversion and renewal of seventeen persons. Also an increased life and activity were visible in all who were in regular attendance among the membership.

J. T. MORRIS.

Traverse City, Mich.—For nearly two years we held our meeting in Traverse City, in a school house two miles out in the country, but some members living more convenient to the city, and some moving into the city, we thought it best to hold our meeting there, which we did for more than a year, in one of the public school buildings, where our Monthly Meeting was organized by Long Lake Quarterly Meeting, when we made arrangements for building. We have a resident membership of 84. A First-day school of about 75, mostly children and young people.

Milo, Ind.—On First month 10th, 1899, Pleasant Plain Monthly Meeting was organized. The two preparatives constituting said monthly meeting are Pleasant Plain and Milo; meetings to be held alternately on Third-day preceding the Second Seventh-day in each month, at 10.30 a.m. N. Alva Bond, of Milo, Ind., is appointed Monthly Meeting Correspondent. Said meeting is set off from Marion Monthly and Quarterly Meetings. On First month 8th, 1899, our friend Wm. Watts commenced a series of meetings at Milo, continuing for three weeks; although not largely attended on account of inclement weather and several cases of la grippe in the neighborhood, that deprived some from attending, but those that did attend were wonderfully blessed. The line of work was Bible teaching, confined to the church; and which we as a church were very much in need of, as the work done here before has been almost entirely of an emotional character. The church is wonderfully strengthened; five renewals, four conversions, three accessions to the church. Brother Watts was assisted the latter ten days of the meetings by Myrtle Valentine, a young Friend belonging to Portland Monthly Meeting, of Jay County. Her work seemed to be highly appreciated by all.

N. A. BOND.

WESTERN YEARLY MEETING.

Westfield, Ind.—Westfield Monthly Meeting, held Second month 2d, was a time long to be remembered by many present, on account of the spiritual uplift which was given them; after singing and many fervent prayers, our dear brother and minister, Nathan H. Clark, who for some time past has been suffering under a threatening increased affliction, arose up and in much holiness of spirit gave an account of his sufferings, and especially a sleepless night just passed on account of pain; told of the Lord's gracious dealings with him in that, through the prayer of faith, he had that morning been enabled to accept and receive divine healing, and that he got up, harnessed his horse to his buggy, and he, with his wife, came to meeting, and was then free from pain and suffering. whereupon the meeting was broken down in contrition before the Lord, with praises to him who doeth such great things, and came and gave their hands to him as a token of their rejoicing with the dear Brother, after which the business of the meeting was despatched with much harmony and love. The previous Sabbath we were favored with the presence of S. Edgar Nicholson, the author of the famous Nicholson Temperance Law of our State, who preached a thrilling sermon on that subject, putting much stress on the great evils of the saloon, and urging all to fall in line for its complete overthrow.

N. D. BALDWIN.

WILMINGTON YEARLY MEETING.

It has been arranged for Martha E. Hadley, of Wilmington, Ohio, to go in the spring to Kotzebue Sound, Alaska, as missionary under the auspices of California Yearly Meeting.

A series of meetings was held at Dover, Clinton County, Ohio, of four weeks' duration, closing Twelfth month 13th, conducted by W. F. Manley, of Richmond, Ind., assisted by our home pastor, Josephus Hoskins, and some earnest young workers from other meetings. The gospel was preached in power, bringing conviction to many hearts, and as a result thirty-seven professed conversion and renewal—mostly conversion—and eighteen claimed the blessing of sanctification. Our dear brother was wonderfully favored in his clear exposition of Scripture concerning sanctification, and many were led to comprehend it as they never had before. On Seventh-days, in the afternoon, meeting was held for the children who were in school, and on each Sabbath evening, and often during the week, the young people would meet an hour before the time for regular service at the home of W. A. Starbuck, not far from the church, for prayer and praise, which were seasons of great blessing, and no doubt contributed in no small degree to the success of the meeting. Our Christian Endeavor Society came up to the "help of the Lord," for we had been praying for an outpouring of His spirit for some weeks prior to the meeting. A few incidents of the triumphs of grace were truly marvelous. Some of our young workers are now assisting Brother Manley in revival work at Grassy Run Meeting.

W. F. B.

NEW ENGLAND YEARLY MEETING.

Vassalboro Quarterly Meeting, held at East Vassalboro, Me., Second month 10-12, was a time of much blessing. On account of bad traveling the meetings were not as large as at some other times. Seventh day morning the business meeting was quite small, but our brothers in Christ, Perrin Reynolds of New York, and Charles H. Jones of Amesbury, Mass., were with us, and it proved a very helpful season. The meeting at one o'clock was in the interest of Christian Endeavor. After singing and prayer service, there were reports from five societies in the Quarterly Meeting, and Francis N. Maxfield, of Oak Grove Seminary, gave a very interesting and helpful talk.

In the two o'clock service, C. H. Jones spoke of the importance of the present time—now. Our duties now; our opportunities now. Afterward Perrin Reynolds spoke of our work as ambassadors for Christ.

First-day morning, Brother Reynolds preached from Matt. 16: 13-18—the Divinity of Christ: this is revealed not by flesh and blood, not by intellect or man's wisdom, but by the Father through the Holy Spirit.

At the noon meeting our Sister, Belle Harrington, of Ohio, who could not get here the day before, read Acts 1: 1-8, and talked to us of the power of the Holy Ghost. In the afternoon she presented the work and needs of Walter Malone's training school, of Cleveland, Ohio. C. H. Jones followed with a sermon from Heb. 9: 22. The blood of Christ alone can save from the guilt and power of sin. We praise the Lord for sending these workers this way. They are to remain a little longer—perhaps some time—in our Quarterly Meeting, and we trust that they may see the fruit of their labors. We pray that they may help men and women to know Jesus Christ.

BALLARD.—Huldah Ballard, wife of Levi Ballard, and daughter of Joseph and Elizabeth Allen, died at her home in Earlham, Iowa, First month 24th, 1899, aged 71 years. Having come to Iowa in the early history of the state, she bore patiently the trials and hardships of those early times, and contributed her part to the upbuilding of society and of the Friends' meeting of which she was a life-long member. She had been a Christian from early life, and through sunshine and shadow she learned to make the promises her own. Her life was quiet but constant, and her service humble but faithful.

MORRIS.—Died, Eleventh month 24th, 1898, at the home of her parents, I. L. and Ella Morris, at Amo, Ind., Myra Morris, aged 4 years, 10 months and 12 days. She was a child of a beautiful disposition, of whom it could be truly said, "Of such is the Kingdom of Heaven."

WEAVER.—Jane T., widow of Elish T. Weaver, died at her home in Millville, N. Y., on the 8th of Twelfth month, 1898, after a long and painful illness. The deceased was for many years a consistent member and elder of Hartland Monthly Meeting, and was nearly 87 years of age.

News and Events.

Not since the blizzard of 1888 has Philadelphia and the adjacent country, and in fact the whole East, experienced such severely cold weather, and such disastrous snow storms, as prevailed last week and the week preceding. For several days the average temperature was little above zero, and with a snowfall of over twenty-four inches in less than a week, accompanied by high winds, much suffering and general inconvenience resulted. Railroad service, during the early part of last week, was almost entirely suspended, the means at hand to overcome the blockading caused by the snow proving altogether inadequate. A return to schedule time was not accomplished until the latter part of the week. Business was greatly hampered, many persons being unable to get to their offices, and delay was the order of the day. THE AMERICAN FRIEND shared the common fate, and as a consequence our last issue was unavoidably delayed.

As a result of the late court martial, General Eagan has been punished with suspension from service for six years. By the court he was found guilty of conduct unbecoming an officer and gentleman, and was sentenced to dismissal from service. This extreme penalty, however, the President saw fit to commute, and in his reasons for so doing he appears more eager to lavish praise upon Eagan's past than to condemn his recent defamatory utterances against General Miles. General Eagan, during his period of suspension, will draw the full salary of $5,500 a year, and at the end of the time will probably be honorably discharged with a yearly pension of $4,000. If the Commissary General, however, is as sensitive as he would have the country believe, we may well suppose that he will sufficiently feel in this punishment the real disgrace, whereby he will be prevented from enjoying what might otherwise be a pleasing vacation.

The War Investigating Commission, having concluded its session, and, in general, having found the conduct of the war eminently satisfactory, and the charges against the efficiency of its various departments ill founded, we are to have a civil court of inquiry to investigate General Miles's charges against the supply of beef to the army. This Miles court will deal exclusively with the beef scandal, and as the members composing it are for the most part, if not altogether, unprejudiced and thoroughly capable, the country may possibly hope for a settlement of the disgraceful condition which has resulted in so much calumny and bitter feeling.

On Third-day of last week dispatches from General Otis brought the information that General Miller, with his forces, had captured the city of Iloilo, on the island of Panay. The insurgents finding the defence of the city hopeless, fired it and retired. The flames were extinguished by our men, but not until considerable damage had been effected. Everywhere our troops have been successful, and the rebels have been compelled to retire farther inland. At present Aguinaldo has about 30,000 men under him, but in equipment and efficiency they are greatly inferior to the United States troops, who appear to be thoroughly prepared for any emergency. What is most to be feared is that the natives will conduct a guerilla method of warfare, and by refusing to engage in open battle prolong the conflict indefinitely.

A significant sign of the times was the passage in the Senate, on the 13th, of the McEnery Resolution by a vote of 26 to 23. This resolution, while somewhat indefinite, shows that there is a large number of Senators opposed to the permanent acquisition of the Philippines, and favoring especially the government of the islands by the Filipinos themselves. The resolution states that it is the intention of this country to prepare the Filipinos for local self-government. It will probably not succeed in passing the House of Representatives, and it appears sure in any event that it will have the President's veto, or will be pocketed by him if it does not come forward before the 10th day previous to adjournment.

President Faure, of France, died suddenly of heart failure on the night of the 16th. His death was entirely unexpected, though it seems that he has suffered for some time from heart disease, superinduced, it is conjectured, by worry caused by the agitations which for so long have shaken France. He is succeeded by M. Loubet, who was elected by the National Assembly on the 18th. Loubet is politically colorless. He has even been able to conceal his opinion regarding the Dreyfus case, and because he is not plainly an anti-revisionist there is much dissatisfaction towards him as France's executive. There seems little doubt, however, that he is the right man in the right place, and he may yet be able to harmonize the different factions.

The hopes for revision, nevertheless, were given a decided shock when, last week, the Chamber of Deputies voted to remove the Dreyfus proceedings from the Criminal Department of the Court of Cassation to the General Court. It is notorious that the Court of Cassation, as a whole, is opposed to revision, and for the present, therefore, justice is likely to be thwarted and Dreyfus will still remain in his pestilential prison.

QUITE NATURALLY.

"You can't fill the bucket by one stroke of the pump handle."

Many business men insert a small advertisement once or twice in a publication "as a trial," and then sit back and wait to see what comes of it. Quite naturally, nothing—or next to nothing—comes of it. People who see your advertisement once or twice are just beginning to take note of what you say, and, perhaps, to resolve to give your goods a trial. The next time they look over the advertisements in their favorite paper you aren't there. Consequently the man who advertises steadily and persistently wins their confidence and gets their trade. It is quite just and proper that he should. Nobody is going to take the trouble to hunt up a man who shyly bobs up to the surface now and then, and then bobs down again.—The Curtis Publishing Company.

DOWN IN THE VALLEY OF PAIN.
My road lay over the Hills of Joy,
Where the springs of laughter flow;
And I sang and I danced in my careless glee,
And I ate of the feasts that were spread for me,
In the sunshine's wonderful glow.

O, the beautiful, beautiful Hills of Joy,
Where pleasure and happiness reign!
The sojourners there give scarce a sigh
To those who live down in the vale hard by—
Down in the Valley of Pain.

My road led over the Hills of Joy
And—down to the barren plain!
But flowers and fruits grew thick in the way,
And I never knew, till, alack, one day,
I was down in the Valley of Pain!

O, the hunger of hearts in that desolate
vale,
Whose hours are a tortuous chain!
The days are lonely, the nights are long;
There is so little sunshine, so little song,
Down in the Valley of Pain!

And ever I looked toward the Hills of Joy
For a word or a token of cheer;
But they said—who dwelt in the Valley of Pain,— “You will listen and watch and wait in vain;
They forget that we live so near.”

A few who had lodged in the shadowy vale
Bade us to hope and be brave;
But stout hearts sicken amid the breath
Of doubt and darkness, despair and death,
In the face of an open grave.

And I said, as I traversed that horrible place,
“If those heights I should ever regain,
Comfort and beauty and song and flowers
Shall grace and gladden the weary hours Down in this Valley of Pain.”

THE PRUDENTIAL LIFE.

The Prudential Life Insurance Company of America, in its annual statement of 1898, gets all the detail information of its financial condition and insurance transactions into its one-page exhibit in this issue, that is possible in the space occupied. While those familiar with the life insurance business are thus able to gain a good idea of the company's progress in 1898, an officer of the Prudential gave a more detailed account of the company's business. He said:

“In no period of its history has the Prudential made such marked strides as it did last year. In October four members of a prominent firm of Newark, N. J., merchants insured in this company for $100,000 each in favor of their firm. The first annual premium, which amounted to over $13,000 was paid by the firm. This idea of partnership life insurance has been a great incentive of late to business firms desiring to secure a much-needed protection. The death of a partner in many cases brings about a serious financial crisis in the affairs of a firm, and insurance is secured to prevent the liquidation of a business in the event of death. This is a common sense form of life insurance, and is becoming very popular. In December, 1898, the Prudential's policies were also selected by a large Chicago mail-order house, when they decided to make Christmas gifts to their married employees in the shape of life insurance policies. The amount issued was over $150,000. Their selection is excellent proof of the liberality of the Prudential contracts.

“This company issued in 1898 the enormous amount of $164,000,000 new business, $43,000,000 of which was in ordinary contracts. This was a greater amount of business than was ever issued in any one year by the Prudential, and in fact greater than has ever been issued during the same period by almost any life-insuring institution. All this is particularly gratifying to the officers of the Prudential as well as to its members. The company is managed on modern “up-to-date” lines, and its expenses are kept at a minimum. In this way the company is able to offer one of the most liberal policy contracts in the world. That it has become a great seller is shown by the enormous amount of new business issued last year.”

A WOMAN'S LIFE WORK.

Including Thirty Year's Service on the Underground Railroad and in the War.

BY LAURA HAVILAND.

This is a story of a wonderful life. The author was an active Anti-Slavery agitator and through her underground railroad work assisted hundreds of slaves to escape from bondage. During the war she spent about two years taking care of the sick and wounded. Through her efforts more than 2,000 Union Soldiers were liberated. She accomplished a great work in providing for the Freedmen of Kansas after the close of the war. She was the founder of the State Public School, at Coldwater, Mich., an institution which was the first of its kind in the world. The Industrial School for Girls at Adrian Mich., almost utterly owes its first existence, and especially its name to her efforts. Haviland Academy at Haviland, Kansas, was named in her honor, as also the town in which it is located. At the World's Fair she was introduced by President Palmer as "The Mother of Philanthropy," and well she deserves the title. Her experience as told in this book will be read with thrilling interest.

This book is printed on good paper and contains 625 pages. It is bound in cloth with red edges. The retail price of the book is $1.50. We will send it postpaid, for $1.00. Address,

HULDA:

The Pentecostal Prophetess.

BY BYRON J. REES.

152 Pages. Bound in Cloth. Price, 50c., postpaid.

A short life story and seventeen of the sermons of Hulda A. Rees, together with her portrait and picture of her early church. This book needs no other introduction than for the reader to know that seventeen of her sermons, which Sister Rees preached with such accompaniments of power and blessing, are for the most part to compose it. The life-story is short yet comprehensive, the writer of it avoiding anything of a eulogistic nature and making the facts of the life serve as an appropriate introduction to the character back of the sermons.

Mrs. E. E. Williams, in a beautiful poem, which is also a part of the book, gives some refreshing glimpses into the character of Sister Rees.

Esther T. Pritchard also contributes a "Tribute," glowing with fervor and truth.

HOW GOD CHISELS.

I remember some sentences of Ruskin's that had been curiously beautiful to me just from the fact they told, and now the fact interpreted itself. He explains to us how one of the ideas of architecture grew from observing the outline left when the rose, or the trefoil, or whatever was first traced for carving, had been cut and taken away. That which was left was as beautiful as the central design. So God shapes the flower of beauty in us, and seems perhaps only to reveal its glory by a taking away. But he sees how fair in the life stands the outline that is left; how the tender curves bend and cling about an emptiness, and declare themselves a wonderful, essential grace. He makes that which remains by the same stroke which separates and removes, and so he chisels and thins and glorifies us, until in the immortal aspects in which we shall stand before him only so much of the mere form of being shall remain as shall make it possible for us to hold these thoughts of his with which he has been, by depriving, filling us.—Mrs. A. D. T. Whitney.

A TOUCHING TESTIMONIAL.

A gentleman was visiting a friend who was an ardent admirer and lover of Mr. Spurgeon, and was continually extolling him as a preacher. "I have never heard him," said the visitor, "but next Sunday

I will go and see whether he deserves the praise you so liberally bestow upon him." So he went to the Tabernacle, and, on his return from the morning service, his host met him with the eager question, "Well, what do you think of him?" "Nothing," was the reply. Then, seeing the look of astonishment and sorrow on his friend's face, he said again, "No, nothing." But his eyes filled with tears of joy as he added, "All I can think of is the preacher's Saviour!"

A FINE FLOUR OF THE ENTIRE WHEAT

as follows:—

One pint water, one pint milk, one-half teaspoonful salt, one tablespoonful sugar, one tablespoonful butter, one-half fresh compressed yeast cake. Stir in enough flour to make a fairly stiff batter, then stir thoroughly; let rise three hours; knead lightly; mould into two loaves, let rise again, and bake about one and a quarter to one and a half hours in a moderate oven.

Easily done, little work, certain success, and the most delicious and beautiful bread ever produced. But be sure you use Franklin Mills Flour.

DOUBT-CURE.

Not long ago a queer advertisement appeared in a Western paper. It was as follows: "Religious doubts and difficulties answered by private letter. State your difficulty and enclose $1 for reply. No charge to the poor." The advertiser puts the sign "Rev." before his name and the suffix "A.M." after. Our astonished minds ask what next in the line of religious fakes? Shall we look for a graduated scale of doubts and prices? This is the chief deficit we discover in this man's enterprise. There are doubts and doubts, just as there are diseases and diseases. Some doubts are like measles—merely incidental to one's childhood. Others are more serious and require more thorough treatment. This enterprising man's advertisement suggests that his industry is of the nickel-in-the-slot machine order, and that each doubt and difficulty is to be treated at the uniform rate of one dollar per doubt—just as patent medicines are sold at a dollar a bottle and warranted to cure almost any kind of disease. Possibly, however, this wise doctor of doubts out West has concluded that all doubts have a common origin, and can be allayed by one identical circular letter. We really have some doubts about this business, and are doubtful whether doubters who anticipate getting healed at the surprisingly low rate of one dollar per doubt are the victims of very profound doubts. This is a great and enterprising country on many lines.—"Christian Work."

A cable's length is one-tenth of a nautical mile (6,080 feet). The longest mile is the Norwegian, which is within a fraction of seven times ours.

SET THE CLOCK RIGHT.

A story is told of a colored man, who came to a watchmaker and gave him two hands of a clock, saying:

"I want yer to fix up dese han's. Dey jess doan keep no mo' kerec' time for mo' den six munfs,"

"Where is the clock?" answered the watchmaker.

"Out at de house on Injun Creek."

"But I must have the clock."

"Didn't I tell yer dar's nuffin de matter wid de clock 'ceptin de han's? and I done brought 'em to you. You jess want de clock so you kin tinker wid it and charge me a big price. Gimme back dem han's."

And so saying, he went off to find some reasonable watchmaker.

Foolish as he was, his action was much like that of those who try to regulate their conduct without being made right on the inside. They go wrong, but refuse to believe that the trouble is with their hearts. They are sure that it is not the clock, but the hands that are out of order. They know no more of the need of a change in their spiritual condition than the poor negro did of the works of his clock. They are unwilling to give themselves over into the hands of the great Artificer, who will set their works right, so that they may keep time with the great clock of the universe, and no longer attempt to set themselves according to the incorrect time of the world. And their reason for not putting themselves into the hand of the Lord is very similar to the reason the colored man gave. They are afraid the price will be too great. They say, "We only wish to avoid this or that bad habit." But the great Clockmaker says, "I cannot regulate the hands unless I have the clock. I must have the clock."

THE WINNER OF THE RACE.

I saw them start, an eager throng,
All young and strong and fleet;
Joy lighted up their beaming eyes,
Hope sped their flying feet.
And one among them so excelled
In courage, strength, and grace,
That all men gazed and smiled and cried:
"The winner of the race!"

The way was long, the way was hard;
The golden goal gleamed far Above the steep and distant hills—
A shining pilot star,
On, on they sped, but while some fell,
Some faltered in their speed;
He upon whom all eyes were fixed
Still proudly kept the lead.

But ah, what folly! see, he stops
To raise a fallen child,
To place it out of danger's way
With kiss and warning mild.
A fainting comrade claims his care,
Once more he turns aside;
Then stays his strong, young steps to be
A feeble woman's guide.

And so, wherever duty calls,
Or sorrow or distress,
He leaves his chosen path to aid,
To comfort, and to bless.
Though men may pity, blame, or scorn,
No envious pang may swell
The soul who yields for love the place
It might have won so well.

The race is o'er. 'Mid shouts and cheers
I saw the victors crowned;
Some wore fame's laurels, some love's flowers,

Some brows with gold were bound,
But all unknown, unheeded, stood—
Heaven's light upon his face—
With empty hands and uncrowned head,
The winner of the race.

—Susan Marr Spaulding, in "Sunday School Times."

SHINING-FACED PILGRIMS.

A young man who had listened without repentance to many sermons intended to convert sinners once heard a sermon of Dr. Addison Alexander's on "A city which hath foundations," read aloud in a parlor full of Christians. In a short time he called on the pastor to ask what he must do to be saved, and said he had had no peace since hearing that sermon.

"What was there in that sermon to bring you to repentance?" asked the preacher.

"Ah," said the young man, "I looked around and saw a roomful of people on their way to heaven; their faces were shining with joy and hope; but I had no part in it, and I stopped and asked myself for the first time, 'Where, then, are you going?'"—"The Wellspring."

Out of my selfish self,
Oh, lift me up!

To live for others, and in living so,
To bear a blessing wheresoe'er I go;
To give the sunshine, and the clouds conceal,
Or let them but the silver sides reveal.

Out of my lonely self,
Oh, lift me up!

Though other hearts with love are running o'er,
Though dear ones fill my lonely home no more,
Though every day I miss the fond caress,
Help me to join in other's happiness!

Out of my doubting self,
Oh, lift me up!

Help me to feel that thou art always near,
E'en though 'tis night, and all around seems drear.
Help me to know that though I cannot see,
It is my Father's hand that leadeth me!

THE REAL THING.

It is much easier to spin theories than to live truths, and the result has been that the Christian ministry has often degenerated into theorizing and profitless speculation, while the world around has been starving for the living bread. It is astonishing how much empty abstract preaching there still is in the Christian church, and even in the most spiritual denominations. Imagine a poor, struggling, toiling, sin-tempted man going to find some practical help, some clear light for his daily path, some relief from the hopelessness of his struggle, and drifting into some Christian "temple" to see if there is any help or consolation in the Gospel of Christ. What would he hear? He might be convinced that we ought to civilize the Philippine Islands, or build a Nicaragua Canal; but we will pass over the supposition that he would hear an able discourse on current events, and suppose that the subject is distinctly a "religious" one. The minister is perhaps discussing the authenticity and inspiration of the Scriptures. He is piling up his arguments to prove that here is an absolute authority, and when he gets all through, his audience will go home and act just as they did before they came. They may believe as a result that the truth is all packed away between the covers of the Bible, but there they will let it stay. His logical and convincing argument has propped up their ark for them, but he has left their lives entirely unaffected, and our poor, hungry man goes away without a crumb which his soul can use. His subject was a great one, but his words were mechanical and not vital and spiritual.

Or suppose the theme is a great central doctrine of Christianity, the Atonement. Here one would suppose that a hungry soul would be fed, for there is no other truth or doctrine which so completely meets the soul's need. But again the words run to logic and abstractions. We are hearing about Adam's sin and the dilemma in which it put God. The struggle between the two attributes of Justice and Love is pictured. The whole discussion moves in a realm in which our poor, seeking friend does not live. It is an attempt to satisfy his reason; though at last he is told that the whole transaction is beyond human reason, and therefore, of course, cannot be understood. Again he goes home with his heart unaffected, and his life problems unsolved. Now we do not for a moment need to be told that Jesus never once dealt with logical abstraction, whether He was speaking to the rich or the poor, saint or sinner. His words all bear directly upon practical matters, and make for truth and life.

The real thing which He was always telling, and which every Christian minister ought to be always telling, is that God loves the world; that He came to save it; that His love went even to the cross and the tomb; that men belong to God and cannot be free or satisfied or truly successful until God has their lives; that a man in Christ is a new creation, and that the Incarnation is the manifestation of a God who is striving to put His life and power into every man, and to make every man victorious, and to lift the whole race to a consciousness of sonship with Him, so that Christ may be the first-born among many brothers. Let this practical message be made absolutely clear and plain before we run off and go to seed in dry and abstract speculations which only open new questions and another set of difficulties. When Paul wants to move the Galatians, he makes his doctrine of the Atonement warm with a practical, personal experience, "I live by the faith of the Son of God, WHO LOVED ME AND GAVE HIMSELF FOR ME," and when he announces the truth of the Incarnation to the Corinthians he begins again with an intimate experience, "GOD HATH SHINED IN OUR HEARTS to give the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ.

SHALL WE CRITICISE OR HELP?

ONE serious difficulty with much of the criticism which is so freely offered in this world of ours is that it is "shot out of a pistol," instead of uttered from a sympathetic heart. It is of no use, of course, and never was intended to be useful, and its only function is to wound and hurt. Most of it comes from those who have no clear comprehension of the conditions and circumstances of that which they criticise. It is a thrust done in the style of Job's "comforters," who try to fit their foot-rule theories to a case which they do not in the least understand. Their one idea is that Job must have sinned or he wouldn't have suffered, and so they din their conclusions into his ears. This was a good many centuries ago, but the picture is here drawn to life for our modern times. It never occurs to criticisers that there can be anything which they do not understand or that they may have a limited point of view of the matter. They find a situation which their theory does not fit and they cry aloud and spare not.

This is particularly true in religious matters, for most persons fail to comprehend how anybody can be right who does not worship with them in Gerizim or in Jerusalem. They have one hard and fast theory which must not yield, no matter what the circumstances and conditions may be. What we have always done that we must always do. This rigid theory makes all their criticism cold and bitter.

There are not a few persons who are so tender-hearted that they would not step upon a worm and who would be touched with pity at the sight of a wounded bird, but who would send a shaft of cold criticism at a person who went to work to solve a deep religious problem in a way not approved by their old-time experience.

It must not be supposed that we disapprove of criticism; on the contrary, we believe it most desirable. Our only contention is that cold and unsympathetic criticism is useless. One has no right to pass judgment until he sees the whole situation, until he has put himself in the other man's place: and when he has really done that his words will become soft and warm with sympathy and his advice will be of practical use at once. Of what use would Christ's criticism of this world have been? He saw that the only way to save it was to love it, suffer with it and die for it. It is a law eternally true. The only way to make an imperfect thing better is to study it sympathetically, catch its real purpose, feel its struggle, and struggle and suffer with it to help it. What drowning man was ever saved or helped by a lecture from the shore? What he needs is to have some one get down into the water with him and pull him out, and then tell him how to avoid getting in again. We should now have a magnificent body of strong, spiritual Friends in America if everybody who has stood high and dry on the shore and shot criticisms had caught the Master's spirit and had loved and suffered and struggled with sympathetic hearts to help those who were forced to meet new issues and hard conditions. Those who have ears to hear will understand what we mean.

FRIENDS RESTORED TO MEMBERSHIP.

IN last Fifth month certain Friends, residing in San Jose, California, including Joel and Hannah Bean,—widely known in America and in England,—were dropped from membership by their monthly meeting in New Providence, Iowa, as reported in a former issue of this paper. On Seventh-day, the 18th of Second month, New Providence Monthly Meeting adopted the following minutes: "This meeting, having reconsidered its action in regard to certain San Jose Friends who were dropped from membership in Fifth month, 1898, are now united in rescinding said action, and in restoring the following Friends to membership in this meeting." (Then follow all the names of those formerly dropped). "Also this meeting is united in issuing certificates of membership to the following persons, members of this meeting." This means that these Friends are restored to membership, and are free to join any meeting which suits their convenience or desire. Nothing was involved in the first action of the monthly meeting except the desire to end an anomalous relationship with these remote Friends. It was not a question of theology or of past differences of view, and there has been no sign on the part of the members of the monthly meeting of any purpose further than to end a peculiar relationship. They took a short cut to accomplish the end, without realizing properly what it meant to those affected, and without enough serious consideration. As soon as the matter came in the proper way, and in the proper spirit, before the meeting, it willingly reversed its action and set the matter entirely right. The decision of Seventh-day shows much grace and Christian spirit on the part of the meeting. To reverse an action and to retrace a step once taken is no easy matter, and it indicates a good degree of Christian grace. It should be understood that this action was not taken because of the pressure of hostile criticism—and, in fact, it was taken rather in spite of such criticism. It was taken wholly as the result of a sweet and loving consideration of the matter. It is simply another evidence that "love is the best gift," and it shows that if Christian people were true to the spirit of their religion, there would be no wrangles or scandals in the church. We have always believed that this difficult matter could be adjusted if it were approached rightly; we refused to join in the outcry, and we look back with entire satisfaction upon the course we have pursued. There are many advantages in keeping calm. There need never be another spark of trouble over this matter, and those who ever shall make any are to be considered as unfriendly to the cause of truth and harmony. The past is past. The mistakes on either side should fade out of memory in the light of this present graceful act of adjustment, which restores to membership those who felt themselves deprived unjustly of their birth-right and their life-long privileges.

GENERAL CHURCH NOTES.

The character of the famous Father Chiniquy; who died in Montreal on the 16th of First month, is being made the subject of vigorous discussion on the part of a few religious papers. As an ex-priest and a most active antagonist of Rome, Father Chiniquy has made for himself a reputation which the Catholics cannot paint in too vivid colors, and which is the object of eulogium by his Protestant friends. "The Monitor" (Roman Catholic), while recognizing half-heartedly his zeal in the cause of temperance, accuses him of neglect of religious duties, of slander, insubordination, and greed of wealth. "Zion's Herald" acknowledges him to have been a leader of men, the benefactor of his parishioners, and the object of persecution by the Catholic Church. It is interesting to note that he was defended in his most famous suit by Abraham Lincoln, who eventually secured his triumphant vindication. He was at the time of his death a minister in the Presbyterian church of Canada, and superintendent of the French-Canadian missions. The ex-priests and their propaganda are not generally to be commended, but Father Chiniquy appears to have been well worthy of the respect of the church of his adoption.

A number of Jews, of the liberal branch, are agitating the question of adopting the Christian Sabbath. The most interested worker in the movement is Rabbi Joseph Krauskopf, of Philadelphia. He holds that there exists no sufficient reason for his people to observe a different day of worship from the vast majority of worshipers, and that in fact the Jews could accomplish much more good if the time for their services were such that it could fit in with the Sabbath leisure of others than Jews, as well as their own race, who are bound to the business regulations of Christians, and who, consequently, are often hampered in following out their special day of religious observance. "The American Hebrew" takes exception to the agitation, holding fast to the landmarks of their fathers with great tenacity.

The announcement has been made that Dr. Gunsaulus, of the Plymouth Church of Chicago, has been chosen to succeed Dr. Hillis, who recently resigned as pastor of the Central Church of that city to go to Plymouth Church, Brooklyn, in place of Dr. Lyman Abbott. Dr. Gunsaulus is an able man and will probably prove a worthy successor of the retiring incumbent.

Dr. John Watson (Ian Maclaren), the celebrated Scotch minister and writer, is spending some time in this country on a lecture tour. He is, perhaps, the best loved minister of his time, and he is well received wherever he appears.

Happy those who are able in truth to say, "My Lord and my God!" Here is the noblest inspiration for life, strength for work, comfort in trouble, hope in death.—William Forsythe.

FOR THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

FRIENDS DURING THE REVOLUTION.

THE VIRGINIA EXILES.

BY PRESIDENT ISAAC SHARPLESS.

The prisoners in the Mason's Lodge were allowed to receive their friends with great freedom, and made the most use of their few days of captivity to remonstrate on all sides against their arrest. The first protest was addressed to the Supreme Executive Council of Pennsylvania, by whose order they were arrested: "We are advised, and from our own knowledge of our rights and privileges as freemen, are assured that your issuing of this order is arbitrary, unjust and illegal, and therefore we believe it is our duty, in clear and express terms, to remonstrate against it." A more lengthy and formal protest, signed by all the prisoners, followed a little later, ending with the paragraphs:

"In the name therefore of the whole body of the freemen of Pennsylvania, whose liberties are radically struck at, by this arbitrary imprisonment of us their unoffending fellow citizens we demand an audience that so our innocence may appear and persecution give place to justice."

"But if regardless of every sacred obligation by which men are bound to each other in society, and by that Constitution by which you profess to govern, which you have so loudly magnified for the free spirit it breathes you are still determined to proceed, be the appeal to the righteous people of all the earth for the integrity of our hearts and the unparalleled tyranny of your measures."

These papers produced no effect on the Council, even to the extent of granting a public hearing, so the prisoners addressed Congress in a similar vein, asseverating their innocence of any treasonable actions, their unshaken conviction that all wars are unlawful for Christians, and a willingness to suffer anything in support of this testimony.

Following this they issued a printed "Address to the Inhabitants of Pennsylvania," in which they recapitulated the history of their arrest and detention:

"But a few days since the scene opened and we the subscribers were called upon by persons, not known as public officers of justice to put our names to a paper 'promising not to depart from our dwelling houses, and to be ready to appear on the demand of the President and Council of the State of Pennsylvania and to engage to refrain from doing anything injurious to the United free states of North America by speaking writing or otherwise, and from giving intelligence to the commander of the British forces, or any other person whatever concerning public affairs.'"

"Conscious of our innocence in respect to the charges insinuated in this paper against us, and unwilling to part with the liberty of breathing the free air, and following our lawful business beyond the narrow limits of our houses disclaiming to be considered in so odious a light as men who by crimes had forfeited our common and inherent rights, we refused to become voluntary prisoners and rejected the proposal."

The Council's answer to these various appeals was to resolve:

"That such of the persons now confined in the Lodge as shall take & subscribe the oath or affirmation to wit:

"I do swear (or affirm) that I will be faithful and bear true allegiance to the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania as a free and independent State' shall be discharged."

To this suggestion they replied:

"If you had a right to make such a proposition we think it very improper to be made to men in our situation. You have first deprived us of our liberty on one pretence which finding you are not able to justify you waive and require of us as a condition of our enlargement that we should confess ourselves men of suspicious characters by doing what ought not to be expected by innocent persons."

After another solemn declaration of innocence, signed alike by Friends and Episcopalians, of any correspondence with the British forces, they could do nothing more than to accept the decision of the Council, which was:

"That the persons whose names are mentioned above be without further delay removed to Staunton in Virginia there to be treated according to their characters and stations so far as may be consistent with the security of their persons."

With the exception of the substitution of Winchester for Staunton, this sentence was carried out, notwithstanding that a writ of habeas corpus was allowed by Chief Justice McKean, which the State authorities chose to disregard.

The whole proceeding was, of course, grossly illegal, but Sir William Howe and his army were approaching the city, and the measure was justified in the opinion of Congress and the Council by military necessity.

It is difficult to see what was gained. The arrest certainly did not conciliate or intimidate other Quakers; it did not interfere in the slightest degree with the plans of the British. It did please the enemies of the Quakers long in a hopeless minority in the Province and again and again defeated, but now in power. It satisfied a body of extreme "Constitutionalists," which not only had old grudges to pay against Quakers and churchmen, the Pembertons and Provost Smith, but were striving also to discredit positive revolutionists of a moderate class like Robert Morris and James Wilson. It sent into banishment for eight months a company of the best men of Philadelphia, whose fault was that they had urged their fellow-members not to violate the long-established principles of their church against war and revolution, and they must be slow to appreciate Quaker character and Quaker history who could believe that persecution would weaken their hold on these principles. It only induced them to close up their ranks and trust their dogmas more implicitly.

By the time the involuntary emigrants were ready to start the number had simmered down to twenty, of whom seventeen were Friends. Some had declared their allegiance and been discharged. The twenty were Israel, James and John Pemberton, Thomas Wharton, Thomas Miers, and Samuel Fisher, John Hunt, Edward Penington, Henry Drinker, Samuel Jervis, Thomas Affleck, William Drewett Smith, Pleasants, Owen Jones, Jr., Thomas Gilpin, Charles Thomas Pike, William Smith, Elijah Brown and Charles Eddy. They were loaded into wagons and conveyed through Reading and Carlisle to Winchester, where they were retained in a very loose confinement, and allowed to select their own boarding houses, for the State refused any appropriation for the expenses. Indeed, upon their release in the spring the Council "Ordered That the whole expenses of arresting and confining the prisoners sent to Virginia, the expenses of their journey and all other incidental charges be paid by the said prisoners."

The prisoners refused to give any promise, but soon gained the confidence of their keepers and were told they might go where they pleased within six miles of Winchester. They attended meetings, strengthened their brethren, received their friends and wrote abundant letters. They kept a joint journal, which has been published. They softened the harsh feelings with which they were received by the people, and were accused of influencing the neighborhood against the acceptance of Continental money. The country afforded few comforts, and some of them were men who were hardly able to afford the expenses of transportation—a great matter in those days. Their families were within the lines of two armies and were seldom heard from, and some were sick. The affair—while it might have been worse—was a serious deprivation to all of them.

The haste with which their banishment was decreed, and the uncertainty as to its duration, prevented a sufficient supply of clothing being taken by some of them, and that inclement winter, which caused such suffering at Valley Forge, did not leave untouched the Virginia exiles, used, as many of them were, to the solace of Philadelphia homes, then the most comfortable, if not the most luxurious, of the continent. In Third month, 1778, Thomas Gilpin died of acute lung trouble, and was buried in Virginia, advising his companions to be faithful to their convictions. Shortly John Hunt followed him to the grave. He was an elderly man and had made his first acquaintance with America when he came over in 1756, appointed by London Yearly Meeting to advise Friends to resign their places in the Assembly during the trying days of the French and Indian wars. His leg mortified and had to be amputated. The doctor told him he bore the operation like a hero. "Rather, I hope, like a Christian," said the doomed man.

In the meantime their friends at home were not idle. The Yearly Meeting, which occurred shortly after the banishment, issued an address in explanation of its position:

A number of our friends having been imprisoned and banished unheard from their families under a charge & insinuation that they have in their general conduct & conversation evidenced a disposition inimical to the cause of America, and from some publications intimating that there is strong reason to apprehend that these persons maintain a correspondence highly prejudicial to the public safety, may induce a belief that we have in our conduct departed from the peaceable principles which we profess; and apprehending that the minds of some may hereby be misled, for the clearing of truth, we think it necessary publickly to declare that we are led out of all wars & fightings by the principles of grace & truth in our own minds by which we are restrained either as private members of society, or in any of our meetings with holding a correspondence with either army but are concerned to spread the testimony of truth & peaceable doctrines of Christ to seek the good of all, to keep a conscience void of offence towards God & man to promote the kingdom of the Messiah which we pray may come & be experienced in individuals, in kingdoms and nations, that they may beat their swords into plow shares & their spears into pruning hooks & nation not lift sword against nation neither learn war any more. And we deny in general terms all charges & insinuations which in any degree clash with this our profession.

As to a nameless paper lately published said to be dated at Spanktown yearly meeting and found among the baggage on Staten Island every person who is acquainted with our stile may be convinced it was never wrote at any of our meetings or by any of our friends. Besides there is no meeting throughout our whole society of that name nor was that letter or any one like it, ever wrote in any of our meetings since we were a people.

We therefore solemnly deny the said letter and wish that those who have assumed a fictitious character to write under whether with a view to injure us or cover themselves might find it their place to clear us of this charge by stating the truth.

As from the knowledge we have from our banished friends and the best information we have been able to obtain we are convinced they have done nothing to forfeit their just right to liberty; we fervently desire that all those who have any hand in sending them into banishment might weightily consider the tendency of their own conduct ad how contrary it is to the doctrines and example of our Lord & Law Giver Jesus Christ and do them that justice which their case requires by restoring them to their afflicted families and friends. And this we are well assured will conduse more to their peace than keeping them in exile. We give forth this admonition in the fear of God and not only with a view to the relief of our friends but also to the real interest of those concerned in their banishment.

Having been forced to meet to transact the affairs of our religious society which relate to the promotion of the cause of truth & righteousness we have felt a renewed concern for the good and happiness of mankind in general, and in the love of the gospel have issued forth this testimony for the clearing ourselves & our friends & the warning of those who from groundless suspicions & mistaken notions concerning us may be persuaded seek our hurt to the wounding of their own souls and the loss of the community.

The Meeting for Sufferings was concerned about the seizure of the minutes of various meetings and appointed a committee to secure their return. They reported that they called on their erstwhile fellow-member, now Secretary of the Council, Timothy Matlack, through whom all the proceedings, both as to the capture of papers and arrest and banishment of the Friends had passed, and procured all but three, "which Timothy alleged were in possession of Congress." These three were "the rough draft of the epistle of the 21st day of Twelfth month last; report from the Quarterly Meeting held at Rahway the 18th of last month, setting forth the sufferings of Friends on account of our religious testimonies and principles, and the sheet of the rough minutes of this meeting." Congress, no doubt, received some enlightenment from these as to the stand Friends had taken, but the belief must have been dispelled from their minds that the meetings were plotting to aid the cause of the king, and they soon returned all the papers.

(To be concluded.)

Fear death?—to feel the fog in my throat,
The mist in my face,
When the snows begin and the blasts denote
I am nearing the place.

I was ever a fighter, so—one fight more,
The best and the last!

No! let me taste the whole of it, fare like my peers,
The heroes of old.

—BROWNING.

TWO POINTS FOR PEACE.

BY H. LAVINIA BAILY.

It has not escaped the observation of the present writer that the subject of Peace and International Arbitration has from time to time been ably presented in the pages of THE AMERICAN FRIEND, but perhaps space may be given for some further consideration of this theme, which is now engrossing much of the most careful study of our time.

Indeed, it is because the public mind is just now so seriously looking into these national questions, expansion, expenses, naval and military equipment, and arbitration, that I would call attention of Friends to the almost unprecedented need of vigilance and energetic work in the interests of national and international peace.

We seem, as a nation, to be rapidly tending toward a condition of military aggression and military rule, while at the same time it is apparent that the sober, enlightened, patriotic judgment of our best thinkers—statesmen, educators, ministers—covet for us a higher patriotism and a nobler destiny.

Now is the time for the ambassadors of Christ to be presenting the claims of the Prince of Peace before the governments of the earth. Especially is it the time for pressing such claims upon the people of our own land. It is a crucial hour for the nation. It is the golden opportunity for the church, and if we do not now enter every open door that leads to the furtherance of this blessed cause, our responsibility will be commensurate with the opportunity set before us; and the loss to church and country will be greater than we are willing to contemplate.

Many ways of working for the promotion of peace will be suggested. I would now mention with emphasis these two:

1. The education and arousing of the people through public lectures and the abundant distribution of Peace literature. "Sow beside all waters," and work to win.

2. The contribution of means to make the first way of working possible. The Peace Association of Friends in America, through its officers, is using as wisely as may be the limited resources at command to meet the call of this critical hour. But the resources are lamentably small compared with the magnitude and the vast importance of the work. Are there not many in our membership, east and west, north and south, who could of their abundance contribute to the treasury of this Association, and so help in the work? Every dollar helps; but hundreds of dollars could now be used, doubtless, for the great good of our common country, and for the widespread welfare of humanity.

And not only for the present crisis. Are there not Friends here and there in the land, who have been blessed with possessions more than they can use, and who would be glad to make bequests to this Association, which would enable it to carry on its work untrammelled?

O, that many might just now be inclined to do and to give, so as to hasten that coming of the kingdom for which we devoutly pray!

FOR THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

THE PEACE PROPOSITION OF THE CZAR.

An interesting meeting was held on the 20th ult. at Coulter Street Friends' Meeting House, Germantown, to listen to a Russian lady who has come to this country on a voluntary mission to interest the American people in the Czar's recent peace manifesto to civilized nations. This lady, Anna Evreinoff, is a person of culture and ability, whose wonderful paper, written in English with considerable power, was listened to with marked attention by a very good audience. The author may be called a publicist, having graduated in law at Leipsic University, and given much attention to judicial studies and history since. In her early days she was apparently an inmate of the Imperial Peterhof Palace, of which her father, who was a General in the Russian army, was Governor during the reign of Alexander II., the present Emperor's grandfather. She says that the young Czar is more accessible than the President of the United States, and is very modest and amiable.

At the close of the meeting, the following paper was introduced and extensively signed. Copies of it will be found at the Friends' Institute on South 12th Street, and at the office of Herbert Welsh, 1305 Arch Street, Philadelphia, where those who desire to sign it are requested to call for that purpose. The address will be forwarded to the Czar, on obtaining a considerable number of signatures, for his support and encouragement.

It would be well for the friends of disarmament in other cities, to adopt and forward similar addresses, with appropriate change of language.

The text of the address is as follows:

"We, the undersigned, sovereign citizens of the United States of America, without regard to race, creed, or political affinity, desire to express our hearty sympathy with the Czar's noble effort for the cause of God and humanity. Appreciating the difficulties which confront him at home and abroad, we admire the high moral courage with which he dares to face them, in the faith which, in all ages, has removed mountains. We think no more fitting place can be found from which to start an American crusade, than this city of Philadelphia (Brotherly Love), and this State of Pennsylvania, whose founder, in 1693, published an appeal for arbitration to the nations of Europe, while war was raging among them, and practically gave them an illustrious example of what a colony can be whose chief defenses are arbitration and justice extended to all men. Here, from the cradle of liberty, where later we proclaimed that not only ourselves, but all the world, had a right to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, we stretch forth the helping hand to Russia, our friend, when she bringing good tidings, when she publisheth peace."

ANNALS OF OUR BIBLE CLASS.—X.

BY ONE OF US.

Our class is gaining in point of equipment as one and another adds to her private library a valuable book of reference. Bessie had a Christmas present of the set of books mentioned in "Annals" No. VII, and Martha, Virginia and our Hebrew pupil have now each a copy of Edersheim's "Life and Times of the Messiah." The undoubted learning of this author, his wide range of research and thorough acquaintance with Hebrew law and usage, and the eminently evangelical tone of his writings, make his life of Christ of unequalled value in a course like ours. This work, in unabridged form, sold at one time for $6, but can be bought at present for $1.50.

We are now almost through Part IV. in the Harmony, and nearing the close of the period of public favor in our Lord's ministry. Every inch of ground, as we pass over it, is teeming with sacred interest, but some portions detain us with their depth and suggestiveness until we find it hard to turn to other fields. In our lesson for the First month 7th, the light focalized on the scene at the Pharisee's table, and the events that immediately followed, while in that of the 14th the social gathering in Levi's house, stood out as warm in the rosy tints of gospel love as the former had been cold in the frigid atmosphere of Pharisaic legality.

From the account in Luke 11, it is comparatively easy to summon the picture of the great Teacher, His host and legal friends, as they ate, rather than reclined,* about the family board of the proud and exclusive Pharisee, at what is supposed to have been a morning meal; but to catch the vivid contrasts of light and shadow and to distinguish with life-like clearness the moral features of the occasion, calls for keener discernment than we profess to have.

Of one thing, however, we may be sure—our dear Master never had a second invitation to share the hospitality of that home.

Up to this period the prejudice of scribes and Pharisees had not opened its lips in the presence of Jesus. It had been nursed in unspoken enmity and read by the eye of Him who needed not to be told what was in man. But now the limit of reticence is passed, and when that breakfast party breaks up the long-pent wrath of Pharisees and lawyers breaks forth like the fury of wild beasts thirsting for the blood of the prey.

The exciting cause of the table discussion was our Lord's open violation of the traditional law of purification. Edersheim, who was of Hebrew nationality, says that "According to Jewish etiquette, a guest should conform in everything to his host, even though it were unpleasant." Imagine, then, the displeasure of this Pharisee over the utter disregard of that which was to him a matter of conscience; but the law of truth transcends the law of etiquette, and fidelity to God is synonymous with fidelity to man.

The scribes and Pharisees had added ceremonial obligations to the Levitic law of cleansing, until, like the law of Sabbath observance, it had become an intolerable yoke. By every enactment they "bound upon men's shoulders" a new "burden," but in no case did their legislation loosen one, unless it was for themselves. These ceremonies were confessedly traditions of the elders, but to neglect them was "like being guilty of gross carnal defilement. Bread eaten with unwashed hands was as if it had been filth. Indeed, a Rabbi who had held this command in contempt was actually buried in excommunication."

With the utmost particularity the water of purification must be guarded from defilement, and the quantity and mode of its application were minutely defined. Not less than would fill an eggshell and a half must be used for one affusion. The hands were to be lifted and the water poured upon the fingers in such quantity as to run down to the wrist. But if the hands had contracted Levitical defilement two affusions were required, the first to remove the uncleanness, and the second, in which the water was to drip from the finger-tips, to remove the water that had contracted the defilement of the hands. Then the mode of purification before meals differed according to the character of the food to be eaten, whether common food or holy.

This ceremony was at first observed only before the meal, but in time it came to be repeated in the midst of the meal, and later on at the close making in all three affusions.

When it came to the purification of pots and utensils, Edersheim tells us that only those who know the complicated arrangements about the defilement of vessels that were in any part, however small, hollow, can form an adequate idea of the painful minuteness with which every little detail was treated.

The word Pharisee means "separated," and his whole life was an emphatic commentary on the word; but his was solely a separation from, while that of a man of God is essentially a separation unto. The purity of the Pharisee was solely external and could only be maintained by an extreme ceremonialism and a clannish exclusiveness; while that of the gospel is spiritual and incapable of being sullied by anything but sin. It has mastered the divine art of being in the world but not of it; insulated from the earth by grace, and yet everywhere an active factor in its salvation. It finds its tender and beautiful illustration in the easy access of the humblest sinner to the Master, and in His touch of healing for the leper and of life for the dead. The purity of the Pharisee was preserved on the principle of exclusion—keeping the "sick" by themselves and the "whole" by themselves, to avoid contagion—while that of the Christian is permeated with the quality of mercy which constrains it into dens of vice and haunts of sinners to rescue "crown jewels" for the Master. The latter was the pervading spirit of the "great feast" in Matthew's house, and the former in that of the Pharisee on the occasion of which we are writing. If we could handle the brush of the artist these two scenes should be made to speak as companion pieces that would throw light upon each other, illustrating the genuine and the false.

* The Jews are said to have sat when at breakfast.

Christ, as He sat at that Pharisee's table, was as absolutely a separated man as was His host, but His was the separation of character, of a heart free from all impurity. The astonishment of the company as He began to eat, that morning, with unwashed hands gave a fruitful text for the discourse that followed. Purity was the Master's favorite theme, and here was a fitting occasion to show in what it really consisted. It is worthy of remark that He did not make ritualism his objective point, but that His proof of their religious trivialities was rather implied than direct. He kept on the positive side, and, as always, so now, went straight to the heart. Was there not an interior as well as an exterior, and did not God make that also? Was it of no moment that it be pure? Was it of less consequence that the inside of a cup, and its contents, be clean than that the outside be undefiled? How incisively His logic cut to the centre of the whole question! Everywhere and under whatever figure employed, our Lord treats of the outward life as a manifestation of the inward nature, and represents the conduct as a sequence of the moral state. He does not say, "First make the inside clean and then make the outside clean," but, "Make clean the inside of the cup and the platter, and the outside will become clean." It is much as if we should say, "Don't try to get better fruit from your apple tree by working at the apples, but by bestowing labor upon the tree." This is the soul and marrow of Christian philosophy, but it was a new theory to the Pharisees, and it is an undiscovered truth to multitudes of legalists in our own day.

We know not how many were present at that meal, but evidently all were of the same religious type, and the air must have been dense with the spirit of opposition. Three "woes" had been pronounced upon the Pharisees, and the central thought was cutting like a keen-edged sword into the body of Rabbinic theology, when the lawyers grew restive and ventured a protest in their own behalf. But in vain did they attempt to ward the blows from their own heads, and a three-fold "woe" fell upon them also. Altogether, it was more than wounded pride could bear. They all rose from the table and in mob-like violence "began to urge Him vehemently, and to provoke Him to speech of many things: lying in wait for Him, and seeking to catch something out of His mouth that they might accuse Him." How hard they tried to throw Him off His guard or out of poise, but never for a moment in all His ministry was this incomparable teacher uncentred—never for an instant drawn into a wrangle or betrayed into the least unwisdom of speech. His reserve and His silence were, perhaps, as remarkable as His words. His table discourse that day had burned the conscience and shriveled the pride of His hearers like hot coals, but He had not spoken in the heat of human passion. Our teacher thinks we have the key to His ministry and methods in His testimony before Pilate, when He said, "To this end was I born and for this cause came I into the world, that I should bear witness unto the truth"; and she insists that we cannot too carefully discriminate between His faithfulness of speech and the consciousness of a harsh, unbridled zeal. He was a searchlight, but never a firebrand. Nor may we forget that He who has dealt so unsparingly with these self-righteous sinners was the same that declared Himself to be "meek and lowly in heart." It ought to disabuse our minds of our false ideas of Christian meekness; it ought to show how staunch a thing it is to go forth to moral conflicts, unresisting to personal injuries and undaunted in the face of any foe. This is the true type of heroism and just what is needed on all our moral battlefields. Experimental holiness, where self is burned out, alone can give it, and it is always reproduced in those who are "pure as He is pure."

FRAILITY.

Her hands are too unskilled to seek
The deeds that shine;
But quick are they for light caress
To charm away the mind's distress;
So, though they are so small and weak,
They uphold mine.

The tender feet too soon are tired,
Their pace delayed;
But, helped by love's most watchful eye,
They seize a moment passing by
To bring me aid.

She cannot bear a heavy load
Up life's incline;
But she can best see where the road
Leads quickest to the pure abode
For which we pine.

Though slight the temple which enshrines
Her valiant heart,
Her courage with her trust combines,
Her holy life my faith refines
Till death shall part.

A VAIN STRIVING.

To live merely for the good opinion of others is to feast upon the wind. It is the natural temptation of those who have not come into, or have lost, a sense of sonship to God, and who try to find in this something to replace a belief in his loving approval. It is not wrong to desire and enjoy the praise of our fellow-men when we make no sacrifice of principle to attain this, and do not make it the end of our action. Once it becomes such an end, it is found to be a most unsatisfying diet. We never can have enough of it, for the best abundance of it never contents. Having lost the sound of the one voice, we go through the world listening for echoes of our own voice, reflections of our own actions, and proofs of our importance to other men. The craving grows with exercise until it masters us, and makes us less and less happy in its control. May the last word about us never be that we "loved the glory of men more than the glory of God!"—"Sunday School Times."

Lesson XI.

FIRST QUARTER.

Third month 12, 1899.

CHRIST HEALING THE BLIND MAN.

John 9: 1-11.

GOLDEN TEXT.—One thing I know, that, whereas I was blind, now I see.—
John 9: 25.

DAILY READINGS.

Second-day, Third month 6th. John 9: 1-12. Christ healing the blind man.
Third-day, Third month 7th. John 9: 13-23. Questionings.
Fourth-day, Third month 8th. John 9: 24-38. "Now I see."
Fifth-day, Third month 9th. Mark 10: 46-52. Bartimaeus.
Sixth-day, Third month 10th. Matt. 13: 10-17. Spiritual blindness.
Seventh-day, Third month 11th. Isa. 42: 1-7. Prophecy of Christ.
First-day, Third month 12th. 2 Cor. 4: 1-7. Darkness and light.

The time of the present lesson follows closely upon that of the last. It does not, however, follow the last chapter immediately in time, the opening words having no connection with the closing words of chapter 8.

As is the case with all other miracles related by John, this is made the occasion and the illustration of the discourse which follows.

Blindness is extremely common in the East, particularly in Egypt and in Palestine. The reasons for this are several—intense brightness of the sun, the quantity of fine dust often in the air, the very unsanitary condition of the towns and dwelling-houses, and the general uncleanly habits of the people.

The whole chapter should be read.

1. "And as Jesus passed by." While he was going about the city. "Blind from his birth." Probably the beggar proclaimed this fact as additional reason for receiving alms from the compassionate.

2. "Master." Better, as in Revised Version, "Rabbi." Jesus was to the disciples their Rabbi; the word is a different one from that used in John 13: 13, 14, etc. "Who did sin?" Blindness from birth is as unusual in Palestine as it is elsewhere. There was a very prevalent belief, as there still is among many, that trouble and suffering come necessarily from sin. While it is doubtless true that very much does come from sin, it would be very far from the truth to say that all comes from that source. To the Jewish disciples the condition of this man showed conclusively that there must have been sin somewhere. Many apparently needless questions have been asked about these words. The most obvious meaning is this: This man cannot have been born blind on account of his own sin; was it on account of the sin of his parents?

3. "Jesus answered," etc. As if to say, "This particular calamity was not the result of any particular sin, either of the man or of his parents. Stop speculating in regard to the origin of the calamity; our duty is to supply his present need." There is an important lesson in this. What should we think of a surgeon who, when called to set a broken limb, began by discussing what caused the fracture, meanwhile leaving the sufferer to bear the pain as best he could? Too many are more ready to discuss the origin of evil than to bend their energies to lessen or end evil. "But that," etc. The man furnished an occasion for working the works of God. Through his blindness, he himself was brought to a knowledge of Christ. Pain and sorrow are made the opportunity for revealing God's compassion and power.

4. "We must work the works," etc. Revised Version. This is the better reading. Christ identifies himself with his disciples, and also states a general truth. "Day,"—"night." Life and death. The reference is to work in this life.

5. "When I am in the world." Revised Version. In the original there is no article before "light," and the verse really reads, "Whosoever I am in the world, I am light to the world." Not only in his revelation in the flesh, but at all periods, Christ is light to the world. He also is, in a special sense, the light of the world. See John 8: 12, where the article appears.

6. "He spat on the ground," etc. Saliva and clay were in those days held to have curative properties. See also Mark 7: 33; 8: 23.

7. "Go wash in the pool of Siloam." This specific direction and the one in verse 6, for the use of external means to complete the blind man's cure, are described without explanation. Why did not Christ heal him with a word? Doubtless, it was primarily to help the man's faith. It is much easier to believe when there is something tangible, and the man's case was a most unusual one. No one born blind had, within knowledge, been cured, so means and measures believed to be appropriate were specially helpful. Incidentally there is the example of Christ to warrant the use of medicines, etc. The sending to the pool was a test of the man's faith. The pool of Siloam is a large pool outside of Jerusalem, though lately some doubt has been raised whether the former identification is correct. "Came seeing." Not to Christ, but to his friends.

8. "They which saw him aforetime, that he was a beggar." Revised Version.

9. "Others." Thus there were three classes. "No, but he is like him." Revised Version. The two verses give a most graphic picture.

11. "The man that is called Jesus." Revised Version. This is the better reading. Christ was well known by this time. In answer to their inquiries, the man states without comment the facts as he knows them.

"I know not who this man may be,
Sinner or saint; but as for me,
One thing I know: that I am he
That once was blind, and now I see."

PRACTICAL THOUGHTS.

1. "Not all pains are punishments."
2. "Do the work that lies next and leave the future with God."
3. "Work while it is day, for the night cometh."

Love's secret is to be always doing things for God, and not to mind because they are such very little ones.

FOR THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

LETTER FROM TIMOTHY B. HUSSEY.

On board the S. S. "Derbyshire," from Rangoon to London, Second month 4th, 1899.

My wife and I left the Mission at Ramallah First month 20th; spent a few days making farewell calls in Jerusalem; went to Jaffa by rail, thence to Port Said by a Khedival steamer, arriving there just as the steamer "Derbyshire" came through the Suez Canal, so that our baggage went from one steamer to the other without landing on shore.

The distance by sea from Port Said to London is three thousand five hundred miles.

Although Port Said is a small city of thirty-five thousand inhabitants, it is the largest coaling station in the world, upwards of a million tons being annually supplied to steamers, of which not less than three thousand pass through the canal every year. The place takes its name from Said Pasha, the Viceroy who granted the concessions for making the canal.

While our ship was coaling we called on that devoted man of God, Alexander Locke, who is doing a noble work among the sailors, seamen and travelers. It is estimated that not less than half a million of people call yearly at this half-way house on the highway to the East. While we were waiting a British transport arrived with fifteen hundred young men going to India as soldiers.

Alexander Locke immediately went on board with his arms loaded with excellent tracts, books and papers, among which I noticed numbers of anti-infidel tracts and papers published by H. L. Hastings, of Boston. These were carefully distributed among soldiers and seamen, and opened the way for a word of prayer with several young men who seemed desirous to lead different and better lives. It is very interesting to travel and converse with men "that go down to the sea in ships that do business in great waters."

This is a noble ship that we are on, and although it accommodates only one hundred and fifty first-class passengers, it carries an enormous amount of freight.

Being curious to know just what we had on board, I asked the captain if he would kindly inform me. He replied: "Thirteen hundred tons of Ceylon tea; four thousand tons of rice, one thousand tons of teak-wood, somewhat like mahogany, and three hundred tons of cocoanut oil." One can hardly comprehend these large numbers except by comparison.

To carry the tea alone would require one hundred and thirty cars, each carrying ten tons, and to carry our whole cargo, including the coal, would require a thousand railroad cars of ten tons each, or a train of cars ten miles long.

The toll required for this ship to pass one way through the Suez Canal was eleven thousand dollars.

To-day we are in a rough sea off the coast of Portugal. We passed in plain sight of Alexandria in Egypt, sailed under Crete, passed through the straits of Messina and Bonifacio, touched at Marseilles for coal, and are due in London Second month 6th.

We have had one incident to break the monotony of life on ship-board. One of our passengers, a young man from Rangoon, suffering under temporary aberration of mind, leaped overboard while the ship was making about twelve knots an hour.

A life preserver was immediately thrown him, which he swam to and secured. Boats were lowered, one of which picked him up. The momentum of our ship carried us about three miles before we could stop, but we soon took on the man again, who was then placed under the charge of an officer.

The poor fellow said that he did not mean to commit suicide, but that he thought the ship and all on board were dependent for their preservation upon his throwing himself overboard. He seemed to feel that he had saved the ship and cargo.

If the weather should prove comfortable we hope to make a few social calls upon our friends in England and Ireland before again embarking upon the great waters.

With loving regards,

TIMOTHY B. HUSSEY.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC FOR THIRD MONTH TWELFTH, 1899.

FELLOWSHIP IN CHRISTIAN SERVICE.

Neh. 4: 6, 16-23.

Second-day, Third mo. 6.—Fellowship in worship. Ps. 122: 1-9.

Third-day, Third mo. 7.—Fellowship in prayer. Acts 12: 1-5, 12; Eph. 6: 18-20.

Fourth-day, Third mo. 8.—Fellowship in conversation. 2 John 12, 13.

Fifth-day, Third mo. 9.—Fellowship in service. Rom. 1: 8-12.

Sixth-day, Third mo. 10.—Fellowship in council. Ex. 18: 13-26; Ps. 55: 14.

Seventh-day, Third mo. 11. Fellowship in suffering. Heb. 10: 32-34; 13: 1-3.

"Fellow" from words meaning "a laying together of property," and "ship," meaning "state, dignity, office, profession, or art," together form a word that stands for the highest joys of life. The art of laying together property, each contributing that which he may have in the furtherance of a common end, is one twice blest, not only in the giving and receiving, but also in the reflex influence of a larger capacity to give again and again. He is the great man who has most in common with other men. It has been said that our individuality is that wherein we differ from others, while our personality is that we have in common. Then he is the greater man who has much in common; who has the power to touch most lives. The Pharisee was little because he separated himself. Jesus was great because he had so much in common with men. Even his individuality was subjected to his personality in his incarnation.

Fellowship means putting into a common stock with others. Christian service is the highest form of fellowship, since it is unselfish life for Christ in company with other similar lives. It does not mean uniformity of service, for our gifts may differ, but it is appreciation of the service of others in the same great cause.

The fellowship of two in service does not simply double the service of one, but multiplies it, for "One shall chase a thousand, and two shall put ten thousand to flight." Mutual reaction stimulates to vastly higher possibilities.

Christian fellowship involves the loss of that painful self-consciousness which is the bane of many lives and ever increases by isolation. First of all, fellowship with Christ removes the centre of attraction from ourselves to Himself, and then fellowship with our brethren in service draws us out of ourselves into other lives, transforms us from mere receivers into generous givers.

Christian fellowship is inconsistent with suspicion, envy, jealousy, and self-seeking in all its forms. What many people are pleased to term "sensitiveness" is only wounded self-love, or inordinate love of appreciation. It affords no stable basis for fellowship since it is in its nature so exacting that no one can wholly comply with its demands. He only can find fellowship with others who is ready to give his own best for them. It may be far inferior in worth to that which they give in return, but if it is his best it is of the same eternal quality as the highest gifts in the power of God.

Nehemiah found fellowship in service because he was full of resistless enthusiasm for a great cause. The people had a mind to work because he was an inspiration to them. Anybody could have told them of the ruined walls of Jerusalem, but it took a Nehemiah to inspire them to say, "Let us rise up and build." If you cannot be a Nehemiah to lead you can be a helper to build.

The truest fellowship in service exists only among those who have abandoned the comparative method of service and adopted the rule of service to their highest capacity. A man is to be pitied who is satisfied with only doing his share. The suggestion of such a thought is paralyzing to Christian energy. There is no comparative basis in serving Him who died for us. Such a standard will be found in practice to be on a descending scale. It will injuriously affect others. Just allow one man in comfortable circumstances in any church to begin murmuring about paying more money than "his share" and it will prove as contagious as small pox. Only men inoculated with the divine grace of giving can resist an attack. A Christian Endeavor society whose numbers are gauging their service by that of others is in a ruinous way. The service in which "the love of Christ constraineth us" knows no such scant measure as that. Paul declared he was ambitious to excel in those forms of service that cost most strength, involved most danger, made him most like unto his Lord.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR NEWS.

The Christian Endeavor Union of Baltimore Yearly Meeting have just issued a folder showing the progress of the work during last year. They now have seven societies with a total membership of 267, a gain of 157 last year. Total amount of money raised for all purposes, $74.25, of which $1.00 is reported for foreign missions. But that does not mean that far larger amounts were not given through other channels. It only can mean that the Christian Endeavor machinery has not yet been set in operation in that direction.

Edwin H. Esterling, Treasury Department, Washington, is President, and Mrs. Dora J. Clark, 221 A Street, N. E., Washington, is Secretary.

We gladly welcome this union into the fellowship of our Endeavor hosts. All yearly meetings on the American continent now have similar organizations, except Philadelphia, and it is to be hoped that at no distant day we may welcome into our fellowship societies in that quarter.

The Detroit Convention Committee of 1899 has opened headquarters in the Majestic Building, Detroit, and the committeemen are already hard at work.

Remember the Convention dates,—July 5 to 10. The Convention colors selected by the committee are crimson and white.

The Michigan Passenger Association has authorized a rate of one fare for the "round trip" to the annual Christian Endeavor Convention in Detroit, July 5—10. All tickets good returning until July 15. For those who desire to remain longer than July 15, provision is made for depositing tickets with a joint railroad agent, and the final time limit will then be August 1.

It is expected that all the railroad associations throughout the United States and Canada will agree to the above action, thus giving time after the Convention for everyone to visit Detroit and the beautiful resorts in and near that territory.

A few weeks ago we had the pleasure of announcing the glad tidings of a Christian Endeavor organization in Manila. Now the news comes that Christian Endeavor got into Havana ahead of the United States flag. On Christmas Day a society was organized, by the efforts of Mr. George Leet, who is its president. Mr. Leet, as he has always advocated and practised, wore his Christian Endeavor pin on the lapel of his coat on the voyage to Havana. This identified him as an Endeavorer to a gentleman and his wife who were also on the boat, and the society is the result of their fellowship and enthusiasm. It is Porto Rico's turn next.—"The Christian Endeavor World."

The Christian Endeavorers are reading the Bible through systematically during the year. Since the plan was proposed at the beginning of the year, about one thousand each week have adopted the plan.

Henceforth you are to think of the Christian Endeavor headquarters no longer as at 646 Washington Street, but in the stately and historic Tremont Temple, in the very heart of the fine old city of Boston.

Secretary Baer has been invited to the next annual British convention, which is to meet in Belfast, Ireland, in the middle of May.

The impression was recently made that the money raised at a Christian Endeavor anniversary meeting was to go to Dr. Clark and Secretary Baer, or for the use of the United Society, and several inquiries have been made about this matter. It seems needless, but perhaps it is necessary, to state once more that no collections are taken for the officers of the United Society or for the United Society itself. The collection referred to was solely for the expenses of the local union holding the meeting. Secretary Baer receives a salary which is earned by the United Society by the sale of its publications. Dr. Clark does not receive a penny from the United Society or from any local society, his salary coming wholly from The Golden Rule Company, as also does Mr. Shaw's. The United Society is managed in the most economical manner, and we do not know any organization that accomplishes so much on so small an income, and without making any appeal for funds.—“The Christian Endeavor World.”

NOTES FROM THE FIELD.

The sixth annual convention of Indiana Yearly Meeting Endeavorers was held at Amboy, Ind., Second month 10th—12th. There was a much larger attendance than was anticipated considering the extreme cold weather that week. The program was carried out with a very few slight changes. The Amboy Endeavorers were in readiness and gave the delegates a delightful reception. There had been fears on the part of some that the Amboy Friends would not be able to entertain satisfactorily all the delegates who would be likely to attend the convention, but Amboy surpassed even her own hopes, and agreeably surprised the delegates by the ease with which they managed the convention.

The sessions were all held in the Friends' meeting-house, which was very beautifully and artistically decorated for the occasion. At every session except the sunrise prayer meeting on Seventh-day morning the house was crowded. The convention music was a feature well worthy of mention. It was inspiring and uplifting throughout. There were solos, duets, quartettes and choruses, besides the congregational singing, led by E. Leona Wright, of Fairmount.

On Sixth-day evening the President gave an address in which he outlined the work which he wished to see accomplished by the local societies during the coming year.

1. There should be the equipment for service by (a) the baptism of the Holy Ghost; (b) a more thorough organization of the committees for their work.

2. There should be certain lines of work taken up by each local society.

As a result of this kind of work individuals will be strengthened and the societies enlarged.

He then suggested three lines of work as greatly needed in many places and especially beneficial just now. These were outlined somewhat in detail:

1. The Good Literature Committee at work.
2. The Tenth Legion.
3. The Quiet Hour.

On Seventh-day the forenoon was given up chiefly to missions and the afternoon to the Juniors.

Emma Phillips, who has spent five years in Mexico as a teacher and intends returning to her work some time in Third month, told very explicitly how the “Opportunities for Work” multiply around the one who works with open eyes. She said that the one with a sympathetic heart often has to close his eyes to many things which he would like to do and which need to be done, though he does not have the time nor the strength to do them.

Dr. Clotilde Pretlow, of Fairmount, Ind., read a paper on “Home Work for Foreign Workers,” in which she showed that every one, by prayer, reading missionary literature, and systematic benevolence, can greatly assist the missionaries.

The “Tenth Legion” and “Quiet Hour” were each given some time and Endeavorers urged to observe both.

It was clearly shown that our pledge, if conscientiously kept, will lead us to want to tithe our income and observe the “Quiet Hour” as a means of preparation for better work.

A “Workers’ Exchange,” conducted by E. H. Stranahan, of Jonesboro, brought before the convention many valuable hints for wide-awake committeemen.

The Junior session was both helpful and entertaining. Ella Applegate, Knightstown, Yearly Meeting Junior Superintendent, brought out some valuable suggestions in the open parliament which closed the session. She urged upon all pastors that they attend the Junior meetings regularly and give frequent talks to the children. The Juniors are the hope of the church.

A Junior Christian Endeavor society might be organized and kept up in nearly every meeting if a superintendent could only be found. Too many persons are unwilling to admit that they are called of God to do Junior work.

Seventh-day evening President J. J. Mills, of Earlham College, delivered an address on “The Law of Blessed Service.” It was clear, logical, and forcible. He gave three fundamental principles upon which service is based. First, the hope of reward. It is consistent with the spirit of Christ that we expect a reward for service well done. It is not necessarily a selfish motive.

Second, a responsive heart for the needs of others. In doing this service forget self and have the pity that helps.

Third, the satisfaction of knowing we have done the right thing. It is a man's business to do God's will. God assumes the care of the man. Obedience is the first law of liberty. When self drops out of sight skill in the performance of tasks steps in. We should sink self into oblivion.

On First-day morning the house was crowded before the hour for service, and many were compelled to remain standing during the entire service.

The sermon was preached by J. J. Mills, who took as his text, "The Son of man came to seek and save that which was lost." The sermon showed clearly two things: 1. The awfulness of being lost. 2. The blessedness of being saved and of seeing others saved. The sermon was delivered with great power and was very touching in many places.

The session First-day afternoon was a very instructive one, the subject being "Loyalty." Especially meritorious were the papers and talks on "The Pledge," showing its effects on our daily life, the society and the church.

On First-day evening Dr. Newlin, Pastor of the Friends' Meeting at Kokomo, addressed the convention on "The Spirit of Service." His subject led him to speak not only to the young people but also to the older ones, and in fact to every member of the church of God. He urged that our church services be made more attractive by putting into them more heart service, more thought, and more money.

The consecration service which followed the address was very impressive. Many definite consecrations were made. In response to a call for all to stand who were definitely called of God for some specific work, about twenty arose, seven of whom were called as Junior Superintendents or Assistants. The convention closed with a blessed sense of God's presence and power being manifested among us.

RICHARD HAWORTH.

BOOK REVIEW.

"The Lamb of God; or, The Scriptural Philosophy of the Atonement," is the title for a book recently published by the Cleveland Bible Training School. The author is William P. Pinkham, A.M. The purpose of the book is "to set forth clearly and helpfully the ground of the Christian's hope."

In the introduction the importance of the theme is impressed upon the reader. "The centre and foundation of the true Christian faith is Christ crucified for us. The atonement made by Him is the one great transaction of history. In its light every other transaction is to be judged and every doctrine."

The following is an attempt to state briefly the author's line of argument:

Attention is first called to the universality of sin among men.

Then we are shown that the universal penalty attached to sin is spiritual death, and that this death, because of Adam's transgression, has passed upon all men.

Every man, however, is "responsible for the state of death in which he is as sinner." The great problem then presents itself: How can man escape the penalty and live? "Only God had either the right or wisdom to suggest a proper answer." This He has done by placing before man the plan of salvation by redemption.

That there could be no remission without the shedding of blood (Hebrews 9: 22) was suggested in shadow by the sacrificial system of the law.

"That this should be so is explained by the fact that 'God's plan of redemption was redemption by substitution.'" If man secures exemption from the death penalty it will be because another suffers it in his stead, and thus redeems him from it. "This is the foundation of the Gospel of Jesus Christ." It is clear that a pure and innocent being alone could be accepted by way of substitution. It is impossible for any man even by death to redeem his fellow. Only God then can find a ransom. That God will provide a ransom, and that in the person of his own Son, is clearly foretold in the prophecies of the Old Testament. To this Redeemer point all the types of the law respecting atonement, propitiation, substitution, forgiveness, cleansing, salvation, life from the dead."

The death penalty being absolutely just will not be revoked. "It will be borne by another."

The Son of God to suffer death must come into "this world of sin, temptation, suffering and death." "He was therefore made in the likeness of men."

The problem of how man can be redeemed from the penalty of death as a result of sin, therefore reaches its perfect solution in the voluntary offering Christ made of himself on the cross.

The author then dwells upon the results or benefits of the atonement, prominent among which are: "The gift of life to every child," "forgiveness of sins," "sanctification (complete) of believers," "power to prevail in prayer," "reprieve of believer who sins," "enthronement with Christ," "the revelation of the love of God."

"A few related subjects, which could not properly be introduced into the body of the work, are treated in brief appendices."

We find among these subjects: "Future punishment," "Satan," "Divine wrath," "Immortality," "Three in one," and "Errors about the blood."

In spite of the author's careful argument and clear and forcible style, we still doubt if any exposition of the atonement has ever adequately expressed its meaning. But then we are comforted with the conviction that a philosophical understanding of the atonement—if such a thing be possible—is not essential to an intelligent and well-grounded faith in Christ as a personal Saviour.

IMMORTALITY.

Foiled by our fellow-men, depressed, outworn,
We leave the brutal world to take its way,
And "Patience! in another life," we say,
"The world shall be thrust down, and we upborne."

And will not, then, the immortal armies scorn
The worlds poor routed leavings? Or will they Who failed under the heat of this life's day,
Support the fervors of the heavenly morn?

No, no! The energy of life may be Kept on after the grave, but not begun;
And he who flagged not in the earthly strife—

From strength to strength advancing—only he,
His soul well knit, and all his battles won,
Mounts, and that hardly, to eternal life.

—MATTHEW ARNOLD.

News from the Field.

The first number of the new series of "Present Day Papers," edited by J. Wilhelm Rowntree and Henry B. Binns, York, England, is a great success. It consists of an editorial article of twenty-seven pages on the "Outlook in the Society of Friends." It begins with a concise and well-drawn review of the last two centuries, and closes with a penetrating discussion of the present situation. The article is broad, and deep, and vital. The writer is not satisfied with reviewing a remarkable past, nor is he content with indicating the tendencies of the present age. He believes in the necessity of finding out how this religious body can become an effective instrument and a spiritualizing power in the life and society and thought of this and the coming age. It is a good, wholesome, helpful piece of work, and will be read with profit.

We published in a recent issue of this paper a list of visiting ministers who have died abroad in the service. A Friend writes to say, that the name of Jonathan Taylor should be added to the list. He died in Ireland in the 30's. He was the grandfather of David B. Updegraff.

TO THE FRIENDS OF CUBA :

Friends' Mission, Matehuala, S. L. P., Mexico.

Since Eleventh month 17th, 1898, when I made the first acknowledgement in this paper of money received for the purpose of sending Spanish literature to Cuba, the following amounts have been received :

Previously acknowledged	$6.00
Maryville, Tenn., Auxiliary	5.00
Book and Tract Com., W. Y. M.	5.00
Plainfield, Ind., Friends	3.15
Kokomo, Ind., Friends	12.75

Total $31.90

I sincerely thank all the donors for their kind help on behalf of the Gospel in Cuba. That you may have some idea of how the papers are appreciated, I quote from a letter from Rev. Dr. A. J. Diaz, dated in Havana, Twelfth month 13th, 1898: "I take pleasure in acknowledging receipt of two packages of your well-edited paper. It is distributed in our Sunday School and read with great pleasure. 'El Catolico Convertido' is a well-edited paper, full of interest, and I am glad to have it, as it is evangelical in its doctrine."

The following extract is from a letter from Rev. H. B. Someilan, who has gone to Santiago, but was in Tampa, Florida, at the time of writing under date of Twelfth month 30th, 1898: "When I went to Santiago, about three months ago, I took with me several packages of 'El Catolico Convertido,' and I am sure the splendid reception I met with there was due partly to the reading of the magnificent paper edited by you. I believe that no better propagation of Protestantism and true religion could be made in Cuba than by the circulation of 'El Catolico Convertido.' Give my sincere thanks to the dear brethren for their donations for the free circulation of the paper in Cuba."

We are certainly encouraged by the good success attending the circulation of the paper among the Cubans, and we should pray for a grander achievement in the spreading of the Gospel through the printed page. We are sending large packages every two weeks, and can still do more if Friends feel like helping us a little more in this work. "El Catolico Convertido" has recently made its first visit to Porto Rico and we shall hope in the near future to hear about its free distribution there.

Let us pray and let us work !

E. M. SEIN.

The Woman's Foreign Missionary Union will hold its Triennial Conference at Marion, Indiana, Fifth month 18th to 21st inclusive, 1899.

An interesting program will soon be printed giving topics, to be followed by full discussion, which will prove helpful to the successful carrying on of all our departments of mission work. Let each Yearly Meeting appoint delegates as arranged for in the constitution, and forward names promptly to Sarah J. King, Carmel, Indiana, also to editor of the "Missionary Advocate," Center Valley, Indiana.

Let us make each day a special day of prayer for this conference, and each woman in all these Yearly Meetings, feel it obligatory upon her to make special effort to answer that prayer, in part at least, by her attendance upon its various sessions. We need to come in close touch with each other, that we may receive a fresh inspiration and Holy Ghost baptism for the more effective work needed in accomplishing the evangelization of the world.

We would extend to all returned missionaries a special invitation to attend. Come all and test the generous hospitality of the good women of Marion. Particulars as regards reduced railroad rates will be published later.

OREGON YEARLY MEETING.

Rosedale Monthly Meeting of Friends was organized five years ago with twenty members, now numbers seventy-nine. It is situated six miles south of Salem. Herbert and Sadie Cash have just held a series of meetings at Sunnyside in the vicinity of Rosedale Monthly Meeting; nineteen sessions were held, they were assisted by home workers. Especially would we mention Charles Pearson, who has lately come from Oklahoma to make this his home. Brother Cash preaches a full gospel, a practical Christianity and a salvation that saves now; believers were much built up; several renewed their covenants with God and some made their first start in the way of life. Our Monthly Meeting was held Second month 2d, at which time Charles Pearson accepted the position as pastor of our meeting for the coming year. Seven were received into membership by request, and fifteen others gave in their names and will become members as soon as they receive certificates of membership from their home meetings.

WILMINGTON YEARLY MEETING.

A series of meetings commenced at Beech Grove, near Wilmington, Ohio, on the 22d of First month, conducted by Jesse Hawkins, assisted by our pastor, John Cook. The meetings continued until the evening of the 7th of Second month, meeting every night and nearly every day, twenty-four meetings in all. Brother Hawkins was wonderfully favored in presenting the gospel in such a plain way, that the wayfaring man, though a fool, need not be mistaken about it. The result was ten conversions and renewals, three accessions to the church, eighteen accessions to the Christian Endeavor, and the church revived and built up in most holy faith.

KANSAS YEARLY MEETING.

Rose Hill, Kan.—On First month 29th, Barclay Hampton of Wichita, Kansas, began a series of meetings at this place. The weather was so extremely cold that the attendance was rather small the first week, but as the meetings progressed and the interest increased, the people came out until the house was filled. The Quarterly Meeting came at the end of the first week, and a good meeting it was, but the revival went right on as soon as it closed. Repentance through faith and forgiveness of sins, and the great need of living a justified life to the letter, as laid out by the Scriptures, also entire sanctification as a second definite work apart from conversion, were set forth so clearly that none need be mistaken. As a result of the meeting thirty professed conversion and renewal, and three sanctification, and we believe many more are deeply convicted for a better life that are not yet fully given up to the Master's will. There were twenty-three sessions in all. On Seventh-day night of the Quarterly Meeting, Josiah Dillon, of Iowa, came in and assisted in the revival while he stayed, and had one special appointment Second-day afternoon. The missionary meeting on Seventh-day evening was a very good one. It consisted of speeches from Josiah Dillon, Eliza Carey and others, interspersed with beautiful songs, and the business that must needs come before such a meeting. On First-day afternoon Eliza Carey had a meeting for the workers in the church and discussed the interests in general.

ELIZA J. COX.

BALTIMORE YEARLY MEETING.

Brighton, Md.—Mary E. Hughes lately paid a visit to Ashton, Montgomery County, Md. She held a series of meetings in the evenings, and gave Bible lessons every afternoon for about a week; when the very severe cold and deep snow made it impossible to continue them longer. The meetings were solemn and impressive, and we believe that much good was done. Those of us who were favored to get to the Bible Classes were thankful for the opportunity thus afforded. We trust that the Lord of the harvest will send his dear servant among us again.

E. L. TATUM.

OHIO YEARLY MEETING.

Damascus, Ohio.—The Lord is blessing His work in our midst through the efficient labors of our pastor, W. Mahlon Perry and wife, with the aid of interested members of the church. Lewis I. Hadley held meetings here for three weeks in which the gospel of Christ was preached "in demonstration of the spirit and of power." Although the immediate results were not large, yet we believe the sowing of the seed of the kingdom is bringing forth fruit in daily life on the "victory side," cleansed from sin through faith in Jesus. Very encouraging reports are received from Esther Butler and Isabella French, missionaries from this meeting, who are in China.

U. S. B.

A series of Union Gospel meetings recently closed at Tecumseh, Mich., in which the Presbyterians, Methodists, Baptists, and Friends all united in earnest work for souls. The meetings were conducted by H. M. Morey, a Presbyterian evangelist from Ypsilanti, Mich., assisted by the four pastors of these churches. Brother Morey's plain gospel teaching, and his chalk talks to the children, have been blest to the good of many souls, more than a hundred, mostly young people, confessing that they have accepted Jesus as their Saviour. We pray that the work may prove substantial, and that those who have started to serve the Lord may deepen in their experience, until they know of complete deliverance from the power as well as the guilt of sin.

WESTERN YEARLY MEETING.

During the early part of First month a most successful series of meetings was held in Lapel Meeting by Willis Bond. He began from the first meeting to bear down on sin both in the church and out, and the house soon filled with people drawn, as God's naked truth always draws, by the power of the Holy Spirit. Between ninety-five and one hundred professions were made, many of which were of reclaimed church-members; six claimed to receive baptism with the Holy Ghost, and the work still goes on; five having come into Christian experience and into the Church since Brother Bond's departure. An organization of nearly fifty Junior Endeavorers was effected, and left in the management of one of the young friends. There are thirty-five additions to the Church.

OSCAR E. FOLGER.

Stillwell, Ind.—A series of three weeks' meetings has just closed at Bethel, near Stillwell, Ind., conducted by Martilla Cox and her sister Mary. The meetings began with great interest, and were rapidly increasing, when the mercury dropped to twenty-six degrees below zero, with a strong wind, which swept across the prairie in a terrific manner, almost breaking up the meetings. However, when the weather moderated the house was filled again. The gospel was preached with great boldness and power. There were forty conversions and renewals; mostly conversions. The last day of the meeting, twenty-one came forward and united with Bethel Meeting, and several others are looking toward joining Friends at this place. Many of the Stillwell people attended, and fifteen from that place were converted and perhaps will join the Stillwell Meeting. The entire membership was blessed of the Lord; many,—consecrating themselves to His service,—were filled with the Spirit. A Christian Endeavor was organized on the last evening of the meeting by Martilla Cox.

MAHLON S. GAUSE.

Plainfield, Ind.—John L. Kittrell began a series of meetings at this place on the fifth ult., and closed on the sixteenth.

Much interest was being manifested by a class of people who were not in the habit of attending religious services regularly,—some not having been inside a church for eight years,—and what gave evidence of being one of the greatest revivals Plainfield had known for years, was reluctantly brought to a close on account of the extreme cold weather, there being no place to hold the meetings except in the Yearly Meeting House, which it was impossible to make comfortable. Brother Kittrell greatly endeared himself to the people of this place, and a petition signed by about one hundred unconverted men and boys, requesting his return, was presented to him.

R. V.

Thomas Holding has recently closed a successful series of meetings at North Pleasant Valley, Indiana, where large congregations came to hear the gospel.

Bloomington, Ind.—The Two Hundred and Fifty-third Session of Bloomington Quarterly Meeting was held Second month 17th to 19th, 1899. No visiting ministers were present at the meeting for Ministry and Oversight on Sixth-day. Seventh-day morning at 9 o'clock the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society held an interesting session. An excellent paper on missionary lines was given by Clara Morris, of Coloma. Bertha R. Morrison, a member of Oregon Yearly Meeting, gave a talk on the mission work which Oregon Friends are doing in Alaska. The audience was much interested and received new enthusiasm from her description of that work.

At eleven o'clock the meeting for worship convened. Flora Holliday, of Vermilion Grove, was in attendance.

In the evening the Alumni Association of the Academy met. A pleasing program was rendered. The address "A Man," by Prof. Irving King, was well received by the large audience. On Sabbath morning the Quarterly Conference on Education and Bible Schools was held. A strong program was given. These subjects were discussed in an able manner by different speakers: "Of what value is an education (a) to the Bible student; (b) to the Sabbath School worker; (c) the importance of higher education in Church work." The addresses all showed that an education was not only of great assistance in these lines of work, but a necessity if the most good is to be accomplished. The day has passed (if it ever existed) when a member of Friends' church can afford to boast of his ignorance.

The meeting for worship was largely attended. The pastor, Alice A. Mendenhall, spoke from Matt. 11: 23-30.

The young people's society of Christian Endeavor at this place was never in better condition. Some new lines of work are being planned and the meetings are full of life and interest. The Junior and Intermediate Societies, each with a wide-awake membership, meet on Sabbath afternoons.

INDIANA YEARLY MEETING.

Dalton, Ind.—Nettle Creek Meeting, Ind. Mary Nichols commenced a meeting at this place New Year's Day, which was held two and a half weeks. Our Sister was enabled to preach the gospel of Jesus Christ in the demonstration of the Spirit and of power, proving the deep things of God from the written word. The presence and power of the Holy Ghost was realized in a wonderful manner, I believe a work has been accomplished for much good. We praise the name of the Lord for sending our Sister this way, and let us in the future do more and better work than ever before, thus showing our appreciation of what the Master has done for us in this place.

WILSON REYNOLDS.

Durbin, Ohio.—A revival meeting at Friends' Home commenced on Christmas Day; and was conducted by B. M. Fisher and Brother Fifer one week, without any marked success. But on the First-day, First month, Brother Andue Collins arrived and took charge of the meeting, when it changed to one of the most wonderful displays of power that has been witnessed in this part for a number of years. In fact it was remarkable, inasmuch as there were quite a number of members of our sister churches that came forward for the prayers of the church, and were happily converted. There were twenty-five conversions: two of whom were Roman Catholics. One dear old man that had spent seventy years in sin was (to use his own testimony) for the first time in life made truly happy. By the second week the news of the wonderful meeting was bringing men together that lived twenty miles apart. It was a pentecostal gathering in more than one respect. Besides the general enthusiasm of the church, we heard Newlights, Unitarians, United Brethren, Methodists, Lutherans and Catholics, all speaking, and declaring the wonderful words of God; and they spake in the language of good fellowship and love.

Out of fifty-five, twenty-five were new converts; thirty were reclaimed, or were members of other churches; seventeen united with Friends.

B. M. FISHER.

NEW YORK YEARLY MEETING.

J. Walter and Emma Malone recently held a ten days' meeting at Brooklyn, New York, with gratifying results in the conversion of souls. Many were renewed and the church greatly blessed in many ways.

Monkton Ridge, Vt.—On the 11th and 12th of Second month Ferrisburg Quarterly Meeting was held at this place. The attendance was not large because of sickness, cold weather, etc. Edgar L. Regna of Yorktown, N. Y., was the only visiting minister. His address on the book of Esther was full of fresh and inspiring thought, and was followed by Wm. M. Palmer. On First-day E. L. Requa took up the subject of Christian perfection as presented in Christ's own words, Matt. 5: 48, telling first what it was not and then what it was, and also explaining the text, 1 John 3:9: "He cannot sin because he is born of God." The "cannot" was from the root, the same as power, so it might read: "He that is born of God hath power not to sin." In the evening the theme was "Body Service," Rom. 12: 1-2. The Methodist Episcopal minister was also present. The evening of Seventh-day was devoted to scenes in the life of Christ thrown upon the canvas and illustrated briefly to profit. In the latter part of last summer, Perrin Reynolds, and in the early winter, James C. Adams held many meetings here which attracted much interest. E. L. Requa attended the preparative meeting on the 15th, and then, although almost snow bound, returned to his home. This was his first visit to these parts, but he thinks, and we trust, it will not be the last.

SAMUEL MILES.

IOWA YEARLY MEETING.

John F. Hanson who recently returned from his extended religious visit in England and on the continent, attended New Providence Monthly Meeting on the 18th ult. We understand that he expects to return with his wife for further labor in Great Britain and on the continent.

Earlham, Iowa.—Bear Creek Quarterly Meeting was held at this place Second month 10th, 11th and 12th, and was a time of very great blessing in spite of the extreme cold which kept many from attendance. The work carried on during the past three months has been gratifying in results and the report of the Quarterly Meeting Evangelistic Superintendent, John W. Stribling, indicated that there had been a spirit of earnest effort throughout the limits of the Quarterly Meeting. The meeting at Earlham, with Henry Edwin McGrew as pastor, seems to have been most wonderfully favored. On the First of Twelfth month a series of union meetings was undertaken, conducted by the Friend, Methodist and Presbyterian pastors and the evangelist, George L. Baker. More than a hundred souls were converted or reclaimed during the three weeks' meetings. The meetings were held in the Friends' House, it being the largest in town, and a good percentage of the converts united with Friends. The meeting has during the past two years evidenced genuine life, and has steadily increased in membership, until it stands second in size in the Yearly Meeting.

Earlham is a thriving little town of some 800 people and is surrounded by the best of Iowa. Friends have here an academy, the interests of which are closely connected with those of the church, the pastor of the church being associated with Principal J. C. Perisho in the management of the school. The academy building is probably the finest and best constructed building of its kind among Friends. We believe that the dear Lord has much in store for the people at this place, and that there is much yet to be done in the name of the Christ. There were no ministers in attendance at the Quarterly Meeting, except those within the Quarter, but Charles Sweet, of Des Moines, who attended the Christian Endeavor meeting on Seventh-day evening, and gave a most excellent address to the young people.

New Providence, Iowa.—In Twelfth month last, Friends of New Providence, Iowa, began holding cottage prayer meetings, continuing them for three weeks, then they held meetings at this meeting house for one and one-half weeks. Then they had to discontinue the extra meetings on account of a little diphtheria scare. Honey Creek Quarterly Meeting was held here First month 7th and 8th, we had the acceptable company of R. R. Newby, whose services with that of home ministers was greatly blessed in increasing a desire for salvation. R. R. Newby came back and began meetings on the 22d, continuing four and one-half days, holding nine meetings. There were eleven conversions, twenty-three renewals, fifteen Christians who made a definite consecration of themselves for spirit filling and service. Truly the Lord has remembered us.

S. A. WOOD.

CALIFORNIA YEARLY MEETING.

Los Angeles, Cal.—Los Angeles Monthly Meeting was held Second month 11th, 1899. It was a "time of refreshing from the presence of the Lord," and a tribute of prayer and praise, as sweet incense ascended from many hearts. Our dear brother, Luther B. Gordon, was with us and testified that as his pilgrimage here below was drawing nearer and nearer to the end, the crown of glory grew brighter and brighter. Luther B. Gordon now resides in this city with his daughters.

Gideon Hunt from Hamilton County, Indiana, was also present, as were our home ministers, Irvin G. Tabor and Rhoda M. Hare. Our dear friend, Elvin Reese, from Thorntown, Indiana, is now here spending the winter. Pasadena Quarterly Meeting will be held in Friends' Meeting House in Los Angeles, in Fourth month next. Through the liberality of a few Friends, we now own a beautiful lot—a corner lot on Third Street and Fremont Ave., in less than ten minutes' walk of the very heart of Los Angeles. And by the blessings of Him who supplieth all our wants through Jesus Christ our Lord, we intend to build a house thereon to His name which will be a credit to the Quaker Church and to His cause.

WILLIAM BROWN.

Died.

BELLIS.—Samuel Bellis departed this life at Mineral Springs Sanitarium, Martinsville, Morgan County, Indiana, Twelfth month 20th, 1898, after a lingering illness, at the age of 68 years and 10 months. He was the son of Samuel and Mary Bellis of York, England, and a life long member of the religious Society of Friends. In the year 1848 he came to this country with the late Henry and Grace Dickinson, of Brooklyn, N. Y., and settled in Richmond, Wayne County, Indiana, where in the year 1852 he was united in marriage with Mary, daughter of William and Alice Kenworthy. He was for several years an Overseer in the meeting to which he attached by membership, and until his removal to Indianapolis, which city was his home at the time of his decease. He was of a very cheerful, happy disposition, loving and kind to all, and with an unshaken trust in the merits of the divine atonement made by Jesus Christ for his salvation he triumphantly and calmly passed over into the better and heavenly country to go no more out forever.

BUTLER.—Lucinda P. Butler, wife of Robert Butler, fell asleep in Jesus, First month 22d, 1899, at their home, at Barclay, Kan., aged 51 years 2 months and 3 days.

Her Christian life, and especially the last year of her life, was such that the meeting, in which she was an overseer, the Bible school, in which she was a teacher, and the community, in which she revealed the Christ life, all join with the husband and their only child in mourning the loss of the beloved one.

CARTER.—Amy, wife of Oliver Carter, and member of North Branch Monthly Meeting, Kansas, died suddenly in her fortieth year. She leaves a husband and three children, besides numbers of others to mourn her loss. She was a birthright member and adhered to the doctrines of the church, and gave evidence that her end was peace.

FARQUHAR.—Mary B., wife of Benjamin Farquhar, died at her home in Wilmington, Ohio, First month 22d, 1899, in her 63d year. She was a life-long Friend and an active and efficient worker.

HADLEY.—Lucinda, wife of Thomas T. Hadley, died First month 20th, 1899, aged nearly 85 years. She was kind and loving in her home life, teaching much more by example than by precept. She was a faithful and loyal member and elder of Mill Creek Monthly Meeting of Friends, Hendricks Co., Ind., having stood firmly by the church in its progressive and aggressive work.

HARRIS.—Matilda Harris, widow of James Harris died at Bangor, Iowa, Twelfth month 25th, 1898, of lung fever, in her 78th year. She was sick only two weeks, but she was unconscious the greater part of that time. She was the mother of fourteen children, seven of whom are living. Although she did not talk much about death, yet we believe she was prepared to meet her God, as her daily life showed her to be a consistent Christian trying to live as nearly right as she knew how. She was faithful to attend the place of public worship, and her testimony at times gave evidence of her faith in God.

HENSHAW.—Died, at his home in Mount Vernon, Ohio, First month 22d, 1899, Leland De Forest Henshaw, in the 30th year of his age. He was the son of Nathan and Lydia M. Henshaw, and was a member of Lawrence Monthly Meeting, Kansas. He was a graduate of Kansas State University, as a civil engineer, in 1890. He immediately received a call to a position with the Bridge Company, of Massillon, Ohio, since which time he has filled responsible positions with scarce a vacation. At the time of his death he was chief engineer of the Mt. Vernon Bridge Company.

Giving the comforting assurance that he was "ready to go," he peacefully fell asleep, leaving a wife and two little sons, a father, mother and brother, to mourn his loss.

HULL.—After an acute attack of congestion of the brain, of about one week's duration, Nelson Hull departed this life Twelfth month 29th, 1898, at his home in Hubbard, Iowa. He was born in Warren County, N. Y., First month 12th, 1824. He was converted at the age of 17 and began an active ministry about thirty years ago, and was recorded a minister of the Friends of Glen Falls, N. Y., in 1871. He moved to Iowa in 1885. His ministry in New York and Iowa both in pastoral and evangelistic work has been blessed to the church.

KIVETT.—Died, James Kivett, at his home at Rubens, Kansas, on the 11th of Twelfth month, 1898, aged 42 years. He was a faithful member with Friends, having filled the station of overseer satisfactorily for a number of years, manifesting much interest in the prosperity and welfare of the church of his fathers, as well as of his own choice. He gave ample evidence to the last that the grace of God is sufficient for any emergency, leaving clear evidence in the last moments that all was well.

LINDLEY.—Adella, wife of Gurney Lindley, and daughter of Nathan and Abigail C. Hobson (deceased), died at the age of 43 years 10 months and 13 days, on the 2d of Second month, 1899. She was a birthright member with Friends, and was at the time of her death a member of the meeting at Fairmount, Ind. She was converted in early life, and in maturer years was sanctified wholly. Her voice was often heard in the meetings for worship in prayer and praise "unto Him that loveth us, and loosed us from our sins by His blood." As an efficient member of the W. C. T. U. she was ever alert to strike a blow at the saloon and associated evils. The fallen and unfortunate, the tempted and down-trodden, were ever the objects of her sympathy. She endeavored to throw around these such safeguards as would make it harder for them to do wrong and easier to do right.

OVERMAN.—Delight, the youngest daughter of George B. and Mary J. Overman, died Ninth month 17th, 1898, aged 21 years. She was converted a little more than two years before her death, and led an exemplary Christian life. She was never heard to complain or murmur when anything crossed her pathway.

This dear girl was the only child remaining in the home for several years; she therefore became much attached to her father and mother, and was often heard to express the pleasure it was to her to have their presence.

OVERMAN.—Joseph Overman died at his home, near Amboy, Ind., First month 29th, 1899, aged 72 years, 4 months and 23 days. He had a birthright with Friends, and was a faithful, obedient and trustworthy member. His last illness was at times attended with much bodily pain, which was borne with Christian patience. During his sickness the company of his friends and neighbors afforded him much pleasure and comfort, he often repeating appropriate texts of Scripture and admonishing to faithfulness and a closer walk with the Master. He was a charter member of Amboy Monthly Meeting.

NICHOLSON.—Wm. Nicholson, a minister, of Ashley Monthly Meeting, Ohio, died at his home in Ashley on Second month 3d, 1899, in his sixty-third year, in the full assurance of a blessed immortality. His suffering was severe for the last eight months, yet he was never heard to utter a word of complaint, but would often say it was not to be compared to what Jesus suffered for him.

POPE.—Died at his home, East Vassalboro, Maine, Twelfth month 3d, 1898, James Pope, an esteemed elder and member of Vassalboro Monthly Meeting, aged 90 years, 6 months and 16 days. His was a long life, lived in the fear of the Lord and closed in the triumph of faith.

STANLEY.—Martha Barker Stanley daughter of John and Mary Barker (the former a minister many years), and wife of John T. Stanley, departed this life, First month 20th, 1899, aged 63 years. She had a birthright in the Society of Friends, and was a member of Westfield Meeting. She was a devoted wife and a true friend, always preferring the welfare of others to that of herself. She bore her suffering with great patience, believing for some time that her end was near, and often supplicating the throne of grace that the approving smile of her Heavenly Father might be upon her. When asked if she wished to recover she replied, "The will of the Lord be done."

STAPLES.—May, wife of Isaac B. Staples, of Barclay, Kansas, peacefully fell asleep in Jesus, First month 23d, 1899. She was only sick six days. She leaves a husband and five little girls to mourn her loss. She was a devoted mother and Christian, and a member with Friends, belonging to Cottonwood Quarterly Meeting.

SUTTON.—Died at his home on the 9th of Second month, 1899, Nehemiah M. Sutton, a member of Tecumseh Monthly Meeting of Friends, Michigan, aged nearly 70 years. Having suffered for some time with a complicated affection of the heart, the prevailing epidemic of grippe found him an easy prey, and he passed quietly away, leaving a wife and two married daughters to mourn his loss.

TABER.—On the evening of First month 24th, 1899, Anna L. wife of Silas Taber, and daughter of Aaron and Elizabeth Roberts, quietly fell asleep in Jesus at her home near Hartland, Marshall Co., Iowa, aged 84 years, 5 months and 13 days. She was a birthright Friend and lived a life of devotion to her Master and her church. She had a deep and abiding interest in the young, especially those who were called to public work for the Master, that they might be kept wholly in His hands. Her's was a life of faith and trust, and her death was one of victory. When almost home her words were words of praise to Jesus who was so precious to her.

TERRELL.—Harriet M. Terrell, wife of Hampton W. Terrell and daughter of Joseph C. and Hannah S. Painter, died at her home Twelfth month 29th, 1898. She was an elder and member of Clear Creek Monthly Meeting, Ohio; aged 55 years. As she neared her close, she said, "all is bright," and quietly fell to sleep to wake where there is no more pain or sorrow.

TOWNSEND.—Alpheus Townsend son of Wm. and Ann Townsend, and a member of Timber Hills Monthly Meeting, Kansas, died at his home near Tehema, Kansas, Second month 10th, 1899. Our esteemed friend was a birthright member of Friends, and for fifteen years an elder. He had by example and precept faithfully labored to build up the church, and advance the kingdom of Christ here on earth. During the last year his religious interest had shown a marked increase.

UNTHANK.—Deborah Unthank died at Spiceland, Indiana, Second month 9th, 1899, aged nearly 89 years. She was born in Randolph County, N. C., in 1810, and with her parents moved to Washington County, Indiana, in 1812. For the first few years some of their neighbors were hostile Indians. Blue River Meeting was afterward established near their home. When Hannah Backhouse, of England, established at Blue River what was probably the first Friends' Sabbath School in the United States, she was one of its first students. She was all her life an active church worker, and had been an elder for almost half a century. She was married to John Nixon, of Salem, Indiana, in 1840, he dying a few years afterward. She was married in 1854 to William B. Unthank, and moved to Spiceland, where she spent the balance of her life, her husband dying in 1886. Besides her own children she assisted in raising several orphan children, and spent her life in working for the good of humanity. For the past few years, in full possession to the last of her mind, memory, and always sound judgment, she calmly awaited her departure, and passed away as she desired, quickly and without suffering. Her last words were "Peace—Rest." She was the last survivor of a large family of children, the late Barnabas C. Hobbs being the youngest. Her father, William Hobbs, was a minister, and one of the leading members and burden bearers of Indiana Yearly Meeting during the first half of the present century.

News and Events.

The fifty-fifth Congress is upon the last week of its history. In many particulars it has been epoch making. It has declared war against Spain, has witnessed the successful termination of that conflict, and has ratified the treaty prepared by the Spanish-American Commission. It has launched the country upon a new policy of expansion, or colonial acquisition. Hawaii has been annexed to the United States. Porto Rico is now ours, and we are contending with the Filipinos for undisputed possession of the Philippine archipelago. The Arbitration Treaty with Great Britain has been rejected,—let it be said to our shame!—the enactment of a national bankruptcy law has more firmly established the relations of debtors and creditors, and provision has been made for taking the twelfth census. There are now pending the important subjects of army reorganization, the Nicaragua Canal, the Hawaiian bill, and the anti-scalping measure. An extra session of Congress has been threatened unless a satisfactory increase in the army can be determined upon. The Hull-Hawley bill, at this writing, is under consideration in the Senate. This increases the army to approximately 100,000 men. A compromise is likely to be effected authorizing the President until Seventh month 1st, 1901, to maintain the regular army at 65,000, and to raise a force of not more than 35,000 volunteer infantry.

The Miles Court of Inquiry, which began on the 21st, continued throughout the week. There was abundant testimony to show that the canned beef furnished the troops in the late war was unpalatable and nauseating in many instances, though several officers testified that the beef which came under their observation was perfectly satisfactory. Very little evidence has been adduced to prove that the meat was chemically treated.

General Eagan appeared before the Court in full uniform, and spoke very urgently in his attempt to disprove the charges of corruption. It seems that there is much yet to be learned regarding this subject, the evidence at present not being conclusive on either side. Several officers have expressed their opinion that beef on the hoof would have been preferable to the canned or refrigerated beef. It is an interesting fact that recently an investigation of army canned beef at Savannah resulted in the rejection of 2,500 pounds as unfit for use. This was about four per cent. of the entire amount inspected.

Last week was an important one in our contest with the Filipinos. Negros, the fourth largest island in the group, sent a delegation to General Otis, on the 21st, offering allegiance to the United States. This is one of the richest of the Philippine Islands and is the principal producer of sugar. Negros was followed by Cebu, the latter being seized on Washington's birthday by a force of men landed from the gunboat Petrel. No resistance was met with, the rebels fleeing to the hills. Manila was the scene of incendiarism on the 22d. The fires were started by insurgents and accomplished great damage. It is said that 1,000 houses were destroyed and $500,000 worth of property lost. The insurgents about Manila were particularly bold and defiant. They succeeded once in breaking through the American lines, but not without being repulsed afterward with great loss. Diligent efforts are being made to prevent any outbreak or further disorder in the city. There has been a great deal of comment over Admiral Dewey's message to send the Oregon at once to Manila "for political reasons." It has been conjectured that the vessel is needed to overcome any possible opposition by a foreign power. The Oregon is now due at Honolulu.

The funeral of Felix Faure, the late President of France, took place on the 23d. The riots which had been threatened amounted to little more than an abortive protest against the new regime, led by Deputies Deroulede and Habert. The latter are in prison and are likely to remain there for some time. There now appears to be but little disposition to foment trouble. Serious riots have been anticipated, but President Loubet is acting with a firm hand, and is in full control of the situation. France has again survived an apparent crisis.

The American-Canadian Joint High Commission, which has been meeting in Washington for several weeks, adjourned on the 20th to meet in Quebec on August 2d of this year. Though satisfactory progress has been made in many directions, a deadlock has resulted from the inability of the two bodies to agree regarding the Alaska boundary. It appears that Canada asks for submission to arbitration of certain claims which the United States is disinclined to entertain.

President McKinley has made an excellent selection in the appointment of S. J. Barrows, a Congressman from Massachusetts, to the position of Librarian of Congress. Though lacking technical knowledge for the conduct of a large library, Representative Barrows possesses in an eminent degree the essential qualifications for such a position.

I pray for peace; upon my bended knee

I pray that there may come a gracious calm;
After the storm has broken over me,

Give me of holy peace the saving balm,
On mountain height, or in valley deep,

On the broad upland, or the woodland wide,
In forest glen or on the rocky steep.

Of craggy cliff, by ocean's tumbling tide—
These peace that passeth understanding bear;

Yet not as the world giveth me these,
Scene-shifting world! Above thy miseries

Great Nature's voice gives answer to my prayer.

A PORTRAIT OF CHRIST.

For centuries past the physiognomy of Christ has been the subject of speculation and, it may be said, of hot discussion. In the early times it was considered that He would have regarded it as unworthy of Him to use the vain seductions of form to assist Him in His mission. The beauty of His doctrine was, it was urged, alone suitable for God in the accomplishment of His mission of self-sacrifice. Others later on contended that the irradiation of divinity must have prevented Jesus from being ugly. The dispute has continued for centuries, and our Saviour has been depicted with a different physiognomy by various masters of the art. The Christ of Velasquez does not resemble that of Rembrandt and others; but now a new image is forthcoming. A Frenchman named Boyer d'Agen, who, I believe, is the author of a work on Lourdes, discovered a curious bronze medal among a number of old coins for sale in a curiosity shop in Rome. He bought it for ten centimes, because he thought he discovered on it Hebrew characters dating back from the primitive time of the Christian era. On close examination it has been declared that it bears the effigy of Jesus. The portrait is a profile, with the head slightly inclined forward. The forehead is high, the nose rather long, slightly pointed at the tip; the moustaches are slightly marked, and the beard is pointed. As for the hair, it is long and

HULDA:

The Pentecostal Prophetess.

BY BYRON J. REES.

152 Pages. Bound in Cloth. Price, 50c., postpaid.

A short life story and seventeen of the sermons of Hulda A. Rees, together with her portrait and picture of her early church. This book needs no other introduction than for the reader to know that seventeen of her sermons, which Sister Rees preached with such accompaniments of power and blessing, are for the most part to compose it. The life-story is short yet comprehensive, the writer of it avoiding anything of a eulogistic nature and making the facts of the life serve as an appropriate introduction to the character back of the sermons.

Mrs. E. E. Williams, in a beautiful poem, which is also a part of the book, gives some refreshing glimpses into the character of Sister Rees.

Esther T. Pritchard also contributes a "Tribute," glowing with fervor and truth.

Better be sitting in idleness than to spend unnecessary time washing with soap, doing unhealthy and wearying work. But almost every woman has something or other that she talks of doing "when I get time for it." Washing with Pearline will save time for it.

curly. The physiognomy, taken as a whole, cannot be called regular, but it is extremely fascinating. On returning to Paris with his purchase, M. Boyer d'Agen showed the medal to numerous numismatists, who pronounced it to be at least of the greatest antiquity, though, of course, it would have been too much to expect they should guarantee its authenticity. The Hebrew inscription it bears on the reverse, translated into English, is, 'The Messiah, the King, will come in peace. He is the light of men, incarnate and living.' Replicas of this medal, in bronze and silver, are being struck.—Paris correspondence of "London Standard."

A WOMAN'S LIFE WORK.

Including Thirty Year's Service on the Underground Railroad and in the War.

BY LAURA HAVILAND.

This is a story of a wonderful life. The author was an active Anti-Slavery agitator and through her underground railroad work assisted hundreds of slaves to escape from bondage. During the war she spent about two years taking care of the sick and wounded. Through her efforts more than 2,000 Union Soldiers were liberated. She accomplished a great work in providing for the Freedmen of Kansas after the close of the war. She was the founder of the State Public School, at Coldwater, Mich., an institution which was the first of its kind in the world. The Industrial School for Girls at Adrian Mich., almost utterly owes its first existence, and especially its name to her efforts. Haviland Academy at Haviland, Kansas, was named in her honor, as also the town in which it is located. At the World's Fair she was introduced by President Palmer as "The Mother of Philanthropy," and well she deserves the title. Her experience as told in this book will be read with thrilling interest.

This book is printed on good paper and contains 625 pages. It is bound in cloth with red edges. The retail price of the book is $1.50. We will send it postpaid, for $1.00. Address,

GREAT MEN'S WIVES.

Byron married Miss Millbank to get money to pay his debts. It turned out a bad shift.

Robert Burns married a farm girl, with whom he fell in love while they worked together in the plow-field.

Milton married the daughter of a country squire. He was an austere recluse, while she was a rosy, romping country lass that could not endure the restraint imposed upon her; so they separated, she returned, and they lived tolerably happy together.

Queen Victoria and Prince Albert were cousins, and about the only examples in the long life of English monarchs wherein sincere affection existed.

Shakespeare loved and wedded a farmer's daughter.

Washington married a woman with two children. It is enough to say that she was worthy of him, and they lived as married folks should—in perfect harmony.

John Adams married the daughter of a Presbyterian clergyman. Her father objected on account of John's being a lawyer—he had a bad opinion of the morals of the profession.

John Howard, the great philanthropist, married his nurse. She was altogether beneath him in social life and intellectual capacity, and besides this was fifty-two years old, while he was twenty-five. He would not take "No" for an answer, and they were married and lived happily together until she died, which occurred two years afterward.

Peter the Great, of Russia, married a peasant girl. She made an excellent wife and a sagacious empress.

Humboldt married a poor girl because he loved her. Of course, they were happy.

Edward Lytton Bulwer, the English statesman and novelist, married a girl much his inferior in position, and got a shrew for a wife. Of course, he was unhappy.

"Your wife is somewhat strong-minded, isn't she, Littlejohn?"

"Strong-minded! Well, a furniture polish peddler came here yesterday, and in five minutes' talk she sold him some polish she had made herself."—"Congregationalist."

MOVEMENTS OF TALL TOWERS.

It is announced that the Eiffel Tower has been vibrating to such an extent that many of the excitable Parisian public have become alarmed lest it come about their ears. Colonel Bassot has found that the expansion and contraction of the iron in the tower causes it to describe a torsion movement between sunrise and sunset, which traverses a curve of four inches. A backward movement equally as great occurs during the night. But in spite of this movement the tower could not fall. It is quite as rigid as though constructed of a solid piece of steel, and, if anything, more so. Our own Washington Monument moves backward and forward several inches every day, yet nothing short of a convulsion of nature could displace it. The tall tower on the Philadelphia City Hall is also noted for its capacity to lean to one side. The great dome on the Capitol building in Washington, D. C., moves quite a distance every day, and in this connection a curious experiment was tried to show how far out of plumb it usually goes. A thin wire was hung from the inner topmost point of the dome. On the lower end of the wire was a plumb-bob, in the lower point of which was inserted a lead pencil. It just touched the floor of the rotunda, on which a large sheet of white paper was laid. As the dome moved it dragged the pencil with it, and consequently left the tracing of its course on the paper. An oval fully a foot in length was marked out every day, showing that the apex of the dome of the Capitol moves that much in twenty-four hours.—"Pittsburg Leader."

ELEPHANTS' TEETH.

Whoever has looked inside an elephant's mouth has seen a strange sight. Elephants have no iron teeth, and they never eat flesh or any food that requires tearing apart. Eight teeth are all they have, two above and below on each side, huge yellow molars as wide as a man's hand, and a couple of inches thick. Over these hay or fodder is shifted by the queerest, ugliest tongue in the whole animal kingdom, a tongue that is literally hung at both ends, having no power or movement except in the middle, where it shifts back and forth from side to side, arching up against the roof of the big mouth like an immense wrinkled pink serpent. There is nothing stranger than the working of an elephant's tongue, unless it be the working of his breathing apparatus when he sleeps. Elephants, like human beings, have two sets of teeth—the milk teeth, which are smaller than the permanent molars, fall out when the animals are about fourteen years old. These baby teeth, which are nevertheless enormous, are occasionally picked up by circus men among the fodder and preserved as curiosities.—Poughkeepsie "News-Press."

"Wanted: A room for two gentlemen about thirty feet long and twenty feet broad."

"Lost: A collie dog by a man on Saturday evening answering to Jim with a brass collar round his neck and muzzle."

"Wanted: By a respectable girl, her passage to New York; willing to take care of children and a good sailor."

"Mr. Brown, furrier, begs to announce that he will make up gowns, capes, etc., for ladies out of their own skins."

HOW MARK TWAIN GATHERED MATERIAL FOR A STORY.

A fresh illustration of Mark Twain's ability to bring success out of seeming misfortune is given in the following paragraph from the New York "World:"

"The corporation controlling the street cars of Berlin in order to guard against being beaten out an occasional fare, require the conductor to give each passenger a ticket which is afterward collected by an inspector who boards the car at fixed points. The system struck Mark Twain, who chanced to be in Berlin recently, as funny, and, in order to test its efficiency, he paid his fare fifteen times in one day, throwing the ticket out of the window every time as soon as he had paid his fare. Each time he handed the conductor his fare he received one of the tickets, and when he had destroyed this he was each time required to pay his fare again to the inspector. The conductor watched this performance with unrestrained amazement, and the other occupants of the car seemed to think the foreigner well punished for his carelessness. The joke was not on the victim, however, for Mark Twain in this way collected material for a story for which he received $500."

Samuel Dickie will resign the chairmanship of the National Prohibition Committee, which he has held for twelve years. THOUGHTS FROM WILLIAM PENN.

"I desire that an example may be set up to the nations; there may be room there [in Pennsylvania] though not here, for such an holy experiment."

"Let the Lord guide me by His wisdom, and preserve me to honor His name, and serve His truth and people, that an example and standard may be set up to the nations."

"Any government is free to the people under it, whatever be the frame, where the laws rule and the people are a party to those laws."

"Governments rather depend upon men, than men upon governments. Let men be good and the government cannot be bad. If it be ill they will cure it. But if men are bad, let the government be never so good, they will endeavor to warp and spoil it to their turn."

ALLELUIA!

For all the saints, who from their labors rest,
Who thee by faith before the world confessed,
Thy name, O Jesus, be forever blest.

Alleluia.

Thou wast their Rock, their Fortress and their Might;
Thou, Lord, their Captain in their well-fought fight—
Thou, in the darkness drear, the one true Light.

Alleluia.

Oh, may Thy soldiers, faithful, true and bold,
Fight as the saints who nobly fought of old,
And win, with them, the victor's crown of gold.

Alleluia.

O blest communion, fellowship divine!
We feebly struggle, they in glory shine;
Yet all are one in Thee, for all are Thine.

Alleluia.

And when the strife is fierce, the warfare long,
Steals on the ear the distant trumpet song,
And hearts are brave again, and arms are strong.

Alleluia.

A POSTPONED HEAVEN.

It is not easy to talk or write on the "doctrine" or "experience" of holiness so that anybody else shall be satisfied with what we say. In fact it is very much like trying to give a good definition of "Love," or of "Life." Whenever we approach these supreme subjects the best we can do is to stammer out our meaning, and we either say too little or too much.

There surely has been a good deal of unwise teaching on this subject, as there has on almost every phase of spiritual experience, but that ought not to blind our eyes to the real fact—the mighty truth—that Jesus Christ expects us to be complete in Him, and that the burden of His prayer,—which Christians of all ages have used,—is that God's will may be done in earth EVEN AS it is in heaven.

It is certainly true that the Christian standard has been kept too low rather than too high. Most Christians apparently never imagine that they are expected to be "perfect." They quote the old proverbs glibly: "To err is human," "man is as prone to err as the sparks to fly upward," and they conclude that the line of life is bound to be a wavy one, full of bends and curves—never straight onward. They believe that this world is a vale of sin; it is no place for white robes and palm branches, and triumphant songs. These will come only when we get to the heaven beyond the stars, and temptations no more assail us. Heaven is always postponed; it is a place always hoped for, never realized.

It is our personal opinion that this "easy creed," this low standard, this postponement of heavenly joys, is just the reason why the church has no more spiritual power in this present world. He who expects little, gets little; he who thinks that Christian life is bound to be streaked with black and white like a checker board, will of course never rise beyond that kind of life, and he who never realizes that Christ's purpose is to make a "new creature," can only testify that "the kingdom of heaven is at hand," he can never say, "the kingdom of heaven HAS COME!"

There are dangers of course when mortal, human beings go around declaring themselves to be "above sin," "free from law," and "perfect," but all this comes from misunderstanding what holiness is. Holiness is perfect love of God's will, and a perfect determination to live in His will. It does not take the Christian out of this world, it does not make him infallible, it does not relieve him of temptation, it does not make him a law unto himself, it does not allow him to boast of his sinlessness or his spiritual power.

It is simply a condition of heart into which Christ brings His disciples, where sin is hated and God's will is chosen, so far as it is known, above everything else. Love becomes the law of life, and the soul realizes that heaven is not a remote place, but a present fact. The kingdom of heaven has come wherever the King holds sway. This is no impossible doctrine, it is no experience reserved for a few rare saints. It is the privilege and should be the attainment of us all.

THE EDUCATIONAL CONFERENCE FOR 1899.

THE first "Conference on Education in the Society of Friends" was held in Baltimore in 1878. Three such Conferences have since been held and all of them have proved to be profitable occasions. The last one, held at Oskaloosa, Iowa, in the summer of 1894, was attended by delegates from nearly all the American Yearly Meetings, and though not a large gathering, was felt by all present to be a valuable and interesting Conference. The meeting place this year is at Friends' School, Providence, Rhode Island, and the sessions will begin on Fourth-day, the 28th of Sixth month. A good program is being prepared and there are indications that educators from all parts of the country will come together at this time. It ought to be regarded as a rare opportunity by all Friends everywhere, who are interested in the cause of education. Every school, academy, seminary and college should have one or more representatives at this Conference. It should be regarded as an opportunity for bringing together our educational forces and for taking account of stock. It is an occasion for linking our various interests, and so of binding our scattered institutions together in a common purpose and for a common aim. The whole body will be strengthened if the thoughtful members from the different yearly meetings can come together and talk over the problems and issues which have to be met along the whole line from Pickering in Canada to Whittier in California. Nobody now of any consequence doubts the value of denominational institutions, and nobody can believe that we could accomplish our mission without maintaining institutions of learning. The Friends' schools and colleges have gone wherever Friends have gone.

The school house soon follows the meeting house, and this has characterized us for nearly two hundred years. But the intercourse and relationship between these numerous centres of learning are for the most part slight. Each institution tills its own local field, and knows little of what the others are doing. There is no way of transmitting enthusiasm and energy from one to another, and no way of interchanging ideas or ideals. This is precisely the function of these "Five-year" Conferences. They "complete the circuit," and they enable every man (or woman) to do his work better for having touched elbows with his fellow-workers who are meeting similar problems and who are lifting at the same burdens.

It is not enough for appointed delegates to come. It is a general Conference for all who can get there. Quarterly Meetings would do well to help some of their interested members to go, particularly so if there is an institution of learning in the Quarterly Meeting. School teachers are not likely to find it financially easy to go thousands of miles to a Conference, but if the interest gets kindled throughout the church, some way will be made for those who ought to go. No like opportunity will come for five years.

FRIENDS AND THE RUSSIAN CZAR.

WE published last week an account of a meeting in Philadelphia, held to arouse an interest in the movement towards disarmament and to endorse the great practical proposition of the Czar of Russia. An address to the Czar was prepared at that time and will be forwarded to him after a sufficient number of signatures have been secured. We hope readers of THE AMERICAN FRIEND in every meeting in America will cut out this address and attach it to a blank paper and have it signed by the neighborhood. As soon as the sheet is full of names it should be sent to the Editor of this paper. We ought to have every Friend's name to this address.

The Czars of Russia have for more than a hundred years been brought in contact with members of the Society of Friends. At least two of the Czars have sat and worshipped in Friends' meetings, and Alexander II. had a personal friendship with William Allen, Stephen Grellet and Daniel Wheeler. The present Czar should be made to feel that he has the support of the whole body of Friends in the world in his noble effort to free the nations of their military burdens. From the days of William Penn until now Friends have labored, under all kinds of discouragements and disappointments, to hasten the era of peace. Their voice has often been drowned by war drums and booming cannons and they have seen their "fair weather" supporters volunteering when the war came, or writing articles glorifying war. Still they kept on their straight course, and now with good conscience they can come to the support of the Russian monarch in his attempt to realize in a measure that for which they have prayed so long.

Just fifty years ago a Philadelphia Friend sent a barrel of flour to the sufferers in the Irish famine, accompanied with the following inscription: "A donation for the Irish sufferers, given freely, and accompanied with a heartfelt desire and petition to the British Parliament to remove one of the real causes of distress among the laboring and perishing classes by abolishing the existing aggressive and unchristian system of national defense by fortifications and armed soldiery and a navy; and directing that all vessels now belonging to the naval establishment of Great Britain shall henceforth be engaged in righteous and useful commerce, and that the trained warriors, disciplined enemies of God and man, shall hereafter be employed in useful and productive industry, and instead of being a drain upon the resources and means of subsistence of laboring British subjects and a reproach upon the Christian name, they may contribute by the honest use of their faculties to the supply of their own wants and comforts as well as to the relief of perishing thousands." It is the Czar's purpose to help bring that very thing to pass. The following is the proposed Address for signatures:

"We, the undersigned, sovereign citizens of the United States of America, without regard to race, creed, or political affinity, desire to express our hearty sympathy with the Czar's noble effort for the cause of God and humanity. Appreciating the difficulties which confront him at home and abroad, we admire the high moral courage with which he dares to face them, in the faith which, in all ages, has removed mountains. We think no more fitting place can be found from which to start an American crusade, than this city of Philadelphia (Brotherly Love), and this State of Pennsylvania, whose founder, in 1693, published an appeal for arbitration to the nations of Europe, while war was raging among them, and practically gave them an illustrious example of what a colony can be whose chief defenses are arbitration and justice extended to all men. Here, from the cradle of liberty, where later we proclaimed that not only ourselves, but all the world, had a right to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, we stretch forth the helping hand to Russia, our friend, when she bringeth good tidings, when she publisheth peace."

EDITORIAL NOTE.

WE have heard with regret of the death of Dr. William Nicholson, which occurred at Pasadena, California, on the first inst. He was one of a family of brothers who have been prominent and very useful in the church. Born in North Carolina, he early removed to the West, and resided for some years in Kansas before he sought a restoration of health in the milder climate of California. He was a man of vigorous intellect and spiritual power, and was the clerk of Kansas Yearly Meeting for several years.

GENERAL CHURCH NOTES.

While the Church of England is busying itself concerning the threatened clash with the state, and is parrying the attacks of Sir William Harcourt, the new Free Church Catechism continues to meet with the approval of dissenters. It is true that some exception has been taken to it, but its popularity is unquestionable. Edition after edition has been exhausted, and the demand continues unabated. It marks a signal advance for toleration, and promises to be the starting point for at least a measure of unification of the various denominations.

The Pope has addressed a letter on "Americanism" to Cardinal Gibbons. This was inspired, undoubtedly, by a late publication of the Life of Father Hecker. Father Hecker, who died in 1888, was the founder of the order of Paulists, and as one of this order made a most aggressive effort to secure converts. He, as well as the members of his order, was eminently successful. His services are said to have equalled in interest even those of Moody. The Paulists, however, have been attacked most uncompromisingly by the Jesuits and others who are jealous of the old customs of the church, which they pretend to fear are being jeopardized by the new methods and freedom tolerated by Father Hecker. This adaptation of the Catholic church to the needs of the people in the United States, now revealed to all in the biography of Father Hecker, is known as "Americanism," as distinguished from the uncompromising condition of Catholicism in other countries. The Pope diplomatically warns the church in America to keep close to the tenets and practices of Rome, but he is careful to avoid casting blame upon any person or set of persons in the church. He refers, however, to the life of Isaac Thomas Hecker as having excited not a little controversy, and he leaves in the mind of the reader no uncertain feeling that he, too, fears the independence of American institutions upon Catholicism.

The Pope has been suffering for some time from a cyst on his thigh. The presence of the growth at length became so dangerous to his health that last week it was necessary to perform an operation. This was entirely successful, and Leo XIII. now gives promise of realizing the advanced age of ninety. He has just completed his eighty-eighth year, and with his strong constitution he should weather the storm yet a little longer. Now that Gladstone and Bismarck are dead, he stands out pre-eminently among those prominent characters whose lives have shaped so conspicuously, during the present century, the course of the world's history.

The Jewish Colonial Bank, the purpose of which is the propagation of the Zionist movement, will shortly be founded. Subscriptions will be invited on the 28th, 29th and 30th of the present month.

The Sirdar, Sir Herbert Kitchener, gives as his reasons for refusing to allow missionary work to go forward in the Soudan the fact that he wished to secure absolute order before any possible disturbing influences can enter the country.

It has been pointed out that for the thorough evangelization of the Philippines the Bible will have to be translated into more than a score of languages and dialects.

Dr. Van Dyke, the well-known New York minister, after refusing a call to the chair of literature in Johns Hopkins University, is now invited to fill a similar but newly created position in his alma mater, Princeton University.

TRUE SAYINGS.

There is but one failure, and that is, not to be true to the best one knows.—Canon Farrar.

When thou wouldst help another, study to please, not thyself, in the doing, but him thou servest. So shalt thou be unselfish indeed—Selected.

The man who consciously abides in God is superior to every other environment, master of every other force that comes against his life.—G. Campbell Morgan.

The mere hatred of evil in a particular form is no evidence of piety. Men have hated the Devil who had made little progress toward loving God. Jehu, the furious driver, in a burst of zeal swept his kingdom of Baal worshippers; but "Jehu took no heed to walk in the law of the Lord God of Israel with all his heart."—"Sunday School Times."

The moral maxims of the Egyptians, we are told, were definite and lofty, their "thou shalt not" being much the same as the prohibitions of the Decalogue. In a papyrus of antiquity occurs the maxim, "The son who hearkens to the word of his father, he shall grow old thereby." "The man who having received much, giveth little, is one who committeth an injury," and "Be watchful to keep silence," have not an unfamiliar sound.—"Westminster Review."

Spain, without the Bible, has bull-fights; and in America men who do not read the Bible have bully-fights. The moving spring in such performances is brutality and covetousness. A champion bully wins thousands in an hour, and his friends who bet on him win tens of thousands. But it is all the price of blood, and brings ruin on the winners. The money if won is often spent in vice and sin, in drunkenness and debauchery. And those who win to-day are quite sure to lose to-morrow, and end worse off than they began.—"The Christian."

FOR THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

FRIENDS DURING THE REVOLUTION.

THE VIRGINIA EXILES.

BY PRESIDENT ISAAC SHARPLESS.

The death of two of the exiles and the sickness of others renewed the efforts of their friends at home for their release, and seems also to have touched the hearts of the Executive Council. A committee from Chester County went to Lancaster to attempt to influence the Assembly, then sitting there, to aid in the cause. Before hearing them that body propounded two questions, to which they demanded formal answers:

"Whether you acknowledge the present Assembly to be the representatives of the people of this State, chosen for the purpose of legislation?"

"Whether you believe the people of this State are bound to a due observance of the laws made by this Assembly."

Their answers were cautious and probably did not aid in the immediate object they had in view.

"We believe the present assembly to be representatives of a body of the people of Pennsylvania chosen for the purpose of legislation.

"We believe it our duty to obey the principle of Grace and Truth in our own hearts, which is the fulfilling of all laws established on justice and righteousness. Where any decrees are made not having their foundation thereon they operate against the virtuous and give liberty to the licentious which unavoidably brings on general calamity. Although we think it our duty to bear a testimony against all unrighteousness yet it hath ever been our principle and practice either actively or passively to submit to the power which in the course of Providence we live under."

More effective proved to be the visit of four of the wives of the exiles to Lancaster. The result was the minute of Congress, sent by Charles Thomson to James Pemberton:

"In Congress 16 March 1778.

"Resolved that the Board of War be directed to deliver over to the President and Council of Pennsylvania the prisoners sent from that State to Virginia."

After a leisurely consideration of twenty-three days the Council ordered that the prisoners should be released. The orders, when they came, were couched in most respectful language:

"It is reported that several of these gentlemen are in a bad state of health and unfit to travel; if you find this to be the case, they must be left where they are for the present. Those of them who are in health you are to bring with you treating them on the road with that polite attention and care which is due to men who act on the purest motives, to gentlemen whose stations in life entitle them to respect however they may differ in political sentiments from those in whose power they are. You will please to give them every aid in your power by procuring the necessary means of traveling in wagons or otherwise, with such baggage as may be convenient for them on the road."

Here was a long-delayed acknowledgment of the honesty and sincerity of the motives of the prisoners, and a practical withdrawal of the charges against them.

The prisoners' wives had sent a preliminary letter to General Washington, dated Third month 31st:

"Esteemed Friend

"The pressing necessity of an application to thee when perhaps thy other engagements of importance may by it be interrupted I hope will plead my excuse. It is on behalf of myself and the rest of the suffering and afflicted parents wives and near connections of our beloved husbands now in banishment at Winchester. What adds to our distress in this sorrowful circumstance is the word we have lately received of the removal of one of them by death and that divers of them are much indisposed; and as we find they are in want of necessities for sick people we desire the favor of General Washington to grant a protection to one or more wagons, and for the persons we may employ to go with them, in order that they may be accommodated with what is suitable for which we shall be much obliged.

"Signed on behalf of the whole,

"MARY PEMBERTON."

Washington sent the letter to Governor Wharton, at Lancaster, with a favorable recommendation, and followed it the next day with another letter, passing on the four wives of the prisoners, who had called on him at Valley Forge for permission to pass the lines.

"You will judge of the propriety of permitting them to proceed further than Lancaster but from appearances I imagine their request may safely be granted, as they seem much distressed—humanity pleads strongly in their behalf."

When the prisoners reached the neighborhood of Philadelphia, General Washington kindly sent them a pass to go through his lines, and they reached their homes without further mishap. In all the relations of the General with the Friends we find the greatest courtesy on his part, and the most respectful language, whether in minutes of meetings or in private letters on theirs. He understood their scruples and respected them, and they felt the reality of his politeness and sense of justice. When some Friends from Virginia, about this time, were arrested for not entering the army—had their muskets tied to them and were otherwise severely treated—when they reached Washington's camp he immediately had them discharged.

As further illustrating the courtesy shown by Washington to Friends, his treatment of a committee sent to convey to him and General Howe their testimony against war, is abundant proof. It was just after the Battle of Germantown, when the American cause was not in the least promising, and needed all the positive aid it could possibly receive. Their brethren had gone off to Virginia under a serious cloud, and many a military commander would have treated them with scant forbearance. His own consideration, and their reciprocal care to give neither party any advantage by the visit, are strikingly shown by their report:

We, the committee appointed by our last yearly meeting to visit the generals of the two contending armies on the second day of the week following our said meeting proceeded to General Howe's head quarters near Germantown and had a seasonable opportunity of a conference with him and delivered him one of the testimonies issued by the yearly meeting and then proceeded on our way to General Washington's camp at which we arrived the next day without meeting with any interruption, and being conducted to headquarters where the principal officers were assembled in Council after waiting some time we were admitted and had a very full opportunity of clearing the society from the aspersions which had been invidiously raised against them and distributed a number of the testimonies amongst the officers, who received and read them and made no objections.

We were much favored and mercifully helped with the seasoning virtue of truth and the presence of the master was very sensibly felt who made way for us beyond expectation, it being a critical and dangerous season. We may further add that we were kindly entertained by General Washington and his officers, but lest on our return, we should be examined as to intelligence, we were desired to go to Pottsgrove for a few days within which time such alterations might take place as to render our return less exceptionable to them, where we were accordingly sent under the guard or care of a single officer & hospitably entertained by Thomas Rutter a very kind man and others of our friends; in this town we had some good service for truth. Two of the committee were discharged on sixth day afternoon and the other four on seventh day having been detained between 3 and 4 days. Two of the Friends upon coming within the English lines were stopped and questioned respecting intelligence about the Americans, which they declined to give. They were sent under a guard to the Hessian Colonel who commanded at that post, and he proposed several questions respecting the American Army, which the friends declining to answer, he grew very angry rough and uncivil using some harsh reflecting language and ordered a guard to conduct them to the Hessian General Kniphausen who appeared more friendly, but he not understanding the English language sent them under the conduct of a light horseman or trooper to General Howe's head quarters at Germantown but upon the two friends informing of his aide de camps who they were, they were dismissed without being further interrogated, so that no kind of intelligence was obtained from them, nor any departure from the language of the testimony they had delivered. We believe the Lord's hand was in it guarding us from improper compliances & his bringing us through this weighty service though it was a time of close humbling baptism.

As to the charge respecting the intelligence said to have been given by Spank Town yearly meeting, we believe General Washington and all the officers there present, being a pretty many were fully satisfied as to Friends' clearness and we hope and believe through the Lords blessing, the opportunity we had was useful many ways, there having been great openness and many observations upon various subjects to edification and tending to remove and clear up some prejudices which had been imbibed.

Samuel Emlen, Jr, Joshua Morris, Warner Mifflin, Wm. Brown, James Thornton, Nicholas Waln.

Phila 1, 10th mo. 1778.

An interesting sequel to this visit is related. When Washington was President one of the committee—Warner Mifflin, a cousin of the General's—called upon him. The President remembered him and adverted to their former interview. "Mr. Mifflin," he said, "will you now please tell me on what principle you were opposed to the Revolution?" "Yes, Friend Washington, upon the principle that I should be opposed to a change in the present government. All that was ever secured by revolution is not an adequate compensation for the poor mangled soldiers and for the loss of life and limb." "I honor your sentiments," replied the President, "for there is more in that than mankind has generally considered."

Grape juice kills more than grape-shot.—C. H. Spurgeon. Drink kills more than all our newest weapons of war.—Lord Wolseley. Intemperance is the egg out of which all vices may be hatched.—St. Augustine. Every moderate drinker could abandon the intoxicating cup if he would; but the drunkard would if he could.—J. B. Gough. I know how to abstain, but I do not know how to be moderate.—Dr. Johnson.

FOR THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

STELLA, OKLAHOMA.

In a recent visit to Friends in Oklahoma, I visited all the meetings belonging to Stella Quarterly Meeting, except two or three preaching stations where there are no established meetings.

Friends' meetings are located all along the south Fork of the Arkansas River, from twelve miles south of Kiowa, Kan., a hundred and twenty-five miles east to Pawnee, with two monthly meetings thirty and forty miles south of Stella and Coldwater.

At Liberty Monthly Meeting the most westerly meeting, they have a membership of from fifty to seventy-five, but no minister, except as they are supplied with one from Stella, seventeen miles east. They meet for worship in a sod house, but then the hungry souls are fed on the bread of life from our loving heavenly Father's hand, and are not only living, but growing thereby. There fourteen names were given to pay one cent a day each for a year for Foreign Mission work. A resident minister is very much wanted and needed at Liberty.

As Stella Monthly Meeting and the Academy there have so recently been alluded to in THE AMERICAN FRIEND, it needs no special mention by me, only to just say that there they have one of the most live and interesting meetings among the meetings of the nine Quarterly Meetings of the Kansas Yearly Meeting that I have visited since the Yearly Meeting. There twenty pledges were given for one cent a day for mission work.

Square Cedar Monthly Meeting—twenty-two miles south of Stella—is composed of two or three small meetings, at which place Lodi Bonser, the Quarterly Meeting Superintendent, preaches, besides attending to the superintendent work. The Friends at these meetings are all new members—nearly all converted in the last four years. At one of these meetings—Prairie Valley—five pledges were given for mission work.

Ringwood Monthly Meeting is twenty miles or more southeast of Square Cedar, in what is known as the black jack country, so called from the black jack oak timber that extends about forty miles northeast and southwest, and twelve miles wide, over a sandy plain more or less broken by hills and interspersed with small prairies called glades. There is considerable cotton and peanuts produced here. Here the Friends have a good meeting-house—about thirty by forty feet—used part of the time by the Presbyterians. Friends here have been and are yet a good deal troubled by what is known as "comeouters." But I think Friends are well holding their own against them. Brother Cox is the minister there. Eleven mission pledges were given.

Next we come forty miles northeast toward the river again to Coldwater Monthly Meeting. Here there is a small body of Friends newly converted from the sinful world, crude and undisciplined in their experience as Christians and Friends, but earnest and teachable in the doctrines of the Gospel.

They have no meeting-house here, but meet in the school house which we had to give up one night to a literary society. I think they will take steps soon to build a meeting-house. The location is already agreed upon, and I believe all are satisfied with it. William F. Lewis, a minister formerly of Iowa, is teaching school twelve miles south of this place and is a member here. Alvin Coppock, from Stella, preaches here. Six mission pledges were given.

East of this, twenty miles, is Friends' Valley Monthly Meeting, of which Enterprise, eight miles southeast, forms a part. They have a good meeting house at the valley, and the meeting is attended by some good, earnest Friends, working to build up the Lord's kingdom in this part of Oklahoma. John W. Newkirk is laboring at the Valley. Six missionary pledges were given at Friends' Valley and seven at Enterprise.

Fifty miles or more east of Enterprise is Harmony Monthly Meeting, the extreme eastern meeting of Stella Quarterly Meeting. It is composed of about eighty members and without Elders or Overseers, but is under the care of a committee of the Quarterly Meeting. Irene Hester, from Stella, is the minister here. I find some earnest, devout Christians here, as there are in all the meetings. But Stella Quarterly Meeting being composed mostly of new members, nearly all of whom have been converted in the last four years, there is a good deal of unsettlement and need of Gospel teaching with many. But upon the whole, I believe there is as much loyalty to the doctrines of Friends, to the kingdom of heaven, and to a consecrated life of a Christian as there is generally manifested in our older meetings. Harmony Meeting gave fourteen missionary pledges, making eighty-three in all in the Quarterly Meeting, amounting to $302.95 for one year. These pledges are to be paid monthly, to go into the treasury of the Foreign Mission Board of Kansas Yearly Meeting to support one missionary in the foreign field for one year. The Friends of Stella Quarterly Meeting hope they may be able to furnish or suggest some one to the Board that they may support with their own means. Why cannot the other Quarterly Meetings of the Yearly Meetings do the same thing—raise money enough to support one missionary or more, and so increase the workers in the field several-fold? I believe they might, if it was gone at in a systematic way. And so with all the departments of Christian work. Some one—a temperance worker—said to me she wished they would do as well for home work. Well, go at it in a systematic way and they will. I entered Oklahoma Twelfth month 31st and left Second month 4th.

More I can neither wish nor pray nor desire for you than Christ, singled and chosen out from all things, even though wearing a crown of thorns. I am sure the saints are at best but strangers to the might and worth of the incomparable excellence of Christ. We know not half of what we love, when we love Christ.

CHRIST THE GOOD SHEPHERD.

John 10: 1-16.

GOLDEN TEXT.—I am the good shepherd: the good shepherd giveth his life for the sheep.—John 10: 11.

DAILY READINGS.

Second-day, Third mo. 13.—Christ, the Good Shepherd. John 10: 1-10.
Third-day, Third mo. 14.—Christ, the Good Shepherd. John 10: 11-18.
Fourth-day, Third mo. 15.—Safety of the sheep. John 10: 19-31.
Fifth-day, Third mo. 16.—Hiring sheep. Ezek. 34: 1-10.
Sixth-day, Third mo. 17.—Seeking and feeding. Ezek. 34: 11-16.
Seventh-day, Third mo. 18.—Safe folding. Ezek. 34: 22-31.
First-day, Third mo. 19.—My Shepherd. Psalm 23.

The allegory of The Good Shepherd is so familiar and lends itself so readily to quotations, that the close connection which it has with the preceding chapter is apt to be overlooked. The chief priests and Pharisees, who were the recognized leaders of the people—known as the shepherds of the people—cast out the man who had received sight through Christ. Jesus found the man who had been cast out, declared himself, and was believed in by the man. Some of the Pharisees who heard the words of Jesus, entered into conversation with him, and called forth the discourse of Chapter 10.

Christ's discourse, though resembling a parable, is more strictly an allegory. It contains three similitudes: (1) He shows the difference between false and true teachers or shepherds; (2) He describes the relation between the door and the fold, claiming to be himself the door; (3) He describes and illustrates the character and work of the true shepherd, declaring himself to be the "Good Shepherd."

1. "Sheepfold." The sheepfolds of the east were, and still are, walled enclosures with thorn branches placed on top of the walls, over which wild animals will rarely climb. The only entrance to the fold is through a doorway, which is heavily barred at night. These enclosures will accommodate several flocks. The shepherd takes his flock to the fold and leaves it in charge of the keeper or "porter," and comes for it again in the morning. "Thief." One who robs stealthily. "Robber." One who uses violence when he robs.

2. "But he that entereth in by the door is a shepherd of the sheep." This marginal reading is better than the Revised Version. The allegory so far is general; all true shepherds enter through the door.

3. "The porter openeth." Again a general statement. There have been many suggestions as to whom the porter is intended to represent. Some say John the Baptist, some the Holy Spirit, some God himself. There is always a risk in pushing analogies too far. It would seem that the porter, like the walls, is a necessary part of the picture, but is not intended to be taken figuratively, as in such a case the porter would hardly have been given a place subordinate to the shepherds. "The sheep hear his voice." The flocks in the East are small and the personal relation between the shepherd and the sheep is very close. In the morning the shepherd stands at the gate and calls his sheep; they come to him and he leads them forth.

"By name." Each sheep has his own name.

4. "When he hath put forth all his own." Revised Version. None are left. Only the true sheep are mentioned—it is the ideal church. "He goeth before them." He is their leader and their example; he leads them into the green pastures, and protects them from the dangers of the way. "Know his voice." They had learned to distinguish his voice.

5. This verse is very strong in the original. "But a stranger will they by no means follow, for they know not the voice of strangers."

6. "This parable." Better, "This allegory." The word is not the one usually translated parable. "Understand not." Did not see his meaning.

7. "Jesus therefore said unto them again." Revised Version. Because they did not understand the allegory he went on to explain himself more fully. "Verily, verily." These words mark the important point. "The door of the sheep." He does not repeat his words, but takes up another thought. It is now the "door of the sheep," not of the fold. He emphasizes the personal relations between himself and his sheep. His sheep are those who recognize him to be the entrance into life, and who enter through him. The fold is meaningless without the sheep.

8. "All that come before me are thieves and robbers." Revised Version. Even the new translations do not remove all difficulties from this verse. Taking the whole circumstances (including Chapter 9) into consideration the meaning seems to be something like this: All who have ever claimed to be the door, and have claimed to have power to open or shut according to their own will, have been, and are thieves and robbers. A man who claims to stand between Christ and a human soul is a thief and a robber. Compare Luke 11: 39-52. "Did not hear them." Compare Matt. 7: 29.

9. "I am the door." An emphatic repetition. "By me." Again emphatic. "Any man." Either shepherd or sheep. "Shall be saved." Compare verses 28, 29. "Go in and out." Shall live. It is a Hebrew phrase meaning one's daily life. Compare Deut. 28: 6; 31: 2; Acts 1: 21.

10. The thief comes to seize for his own advantage, the shepherd to give to others. The similitude of the door is now laid aside and that of the good shepherd is taken up. "May have" (in both places). Revised Version. Omit "More." Revised Version. Christ's desire is that we should have abundant life—Titus 3:6.

11. "Good." This is not the usual word—it means beautiful, good, noble. "It sums up the chief attributes of ideal perfection." The image of the Good Shepherd is that which has come closest home to the minds of men in all the Christian ages. Painting, statuary, and literature have again and again portrayed the Saviour as the Good Shepherd. Compare Ps. 23; Isa. 40: 11; Jer. 33, etc. "Layeth down his life." Revised Version. More than to die; it is a voluntary consecration of one's whole life—death is but a feature of it.

12-13. In these verses the contrast is strongly drawn. The "hireling" is one who cares only for himself, and who, when danger comes, runs away; he cares not for the sheep, but for the pay. "Wolf." Any danger or evil which threatens the sheep. At this time it was the Pharisees.

14-15. Christ now almost drops allegory and speaks plainly. The reading and punctuation of the Revised Version makes these verses perfectly clear. "I am the good shepherd; and I know mine own, and mine own know me, even as the Father knoweth me and I know the Father." The relation between Christ and the true disciple is like that between Christ and his Father—a perfect union.

16. "Other sheep." Gentiles. Possibly alluding to John 7: 35. Compare also John 11: 52; Acts 10: 34, 35. "There shall be one fold." This wrong translation has done great injury to the truth. It should read as in Revised Version. "They shall become one flock, one shepherd." There may be many folds, there can be but one flock and one shepherd.

PRACTICAL THOUGHTS.

1. Christ is the door.
2. The church universal is the flock of Christ.
3. Abundant life is the gift of God through Jesus Christ our Lord.

FOR THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

STILL A SANCTUARY.

The old Friends' meeting-house up in the pines, Closed and forsaken this many a year—
How it haunteth a memory that plainly defines
Every bench, every window, the door in the rear!

There the knot-holes and marks are distinct in the board,
And I see the white clouds and the pines through the pane,
While the sounds of the tree-tops I jealously hoard
As I would a musician's undying refrain.

In the yard, 'neath the blackened and long-weathered shed,
I hear a horse stamp, with its whinney or neigh,
And the flies, buzzing loudly, an influence shed
That reaches me now, at this long-distant day.

And good men kneeled down in the silence for prayer,
Or spoke, with long pauses filled up by the pines,— Noble thoughts, kindly words, of an utterance rare
To a heart that reflects on God's ways and designs.

And though fewer the ones that were gathered there
As the years left behind the old house on the hill,
Yet the calmness of age was no calm of despair,
And the peace of those meetings remains with me still.

Not in vain is the word to the few, cast aside
By the hurrying crowd in its strife and its stress,
For e'en Nature gives voices that ever abide
To the stone and the tree to preach righteousness.

Barred the door, closed the eyes of the old meeting-place,
And as buried it seems to the work-a-day world,
But its spirit I see, with a beautiful face,
And its pinions of goodness and mercy unfurled.

(A Temperance Meeting.)

Our Scripture lesson carries us back to ancient times on the Achaian peninsula, when from far and near the Greeks gathered for the famous Isthmian games;—when the racers, trained by months of self-denial, tests of endurance, and constant practice, had at last reached the day when before assembled thousands they were to appear in the race course to contend for a simple crown of laurel that carried with it a glory greater than that of the golden crown of a king. The successful contestant won for himself a triumphal entry into his native city, often through a new entrance broken through the city walls, and was led to the temples of the gods amid songs and shouts of triumph. For such a corruptible crown men were willing to undergo for long seasons the most rigid self-denial and arduous training, yet only one could receive the crown. But we may so run that all may receive the prize. They do it for a corruptible crown, but we for an incorruptible. If they attain self-mastery for the crown that perishes even when won upon such uncertainty, how much more we should attain the victory over every foolish and hurtful lust, over every enervating indulgence and mere self-seeking enjoyment, who strive for the imperishable, heavenly crown.

But who can attain to self-mastery? Once more we are carried back to ancient times and see a devout, earnest young Pharisee, trained at the feet of Gamaliel, approving in his conscience the law of God, resolving and re-resolving to obey it, struggling to arise above his baser self, yet defeated again and again, until, hating the sin that mastered him as if it were a dead body chained to him, he cries out, "Who shall deliver me?" One can read in every line of the seventh chapter of Romans the intensity of the struggle. It was no ordinary man who was there contending for the mastery. The royalty of life never sent an abler champion into the lists. But he confesses to absolute, abject failure. Who of us can tell the truth about ourselves and say less than he? Unaided self-mastery is an inaccessible mountain-peak upon whose summit no flag of human victory ever yet waved. No doubt but that many a man,—thousands of men, have achieved victories over self-life where weaker men have failed; victories that have been rewarded with success in life in every sphere, but in all such there yet remain fatal forms of self-life destructive of true spiritual life until they learn that only Christ can give the true victory. Such men indeed, rarely recognize how much they owe to him for victories won seemingly without him. Our Christian environment, training and inheritance, the very moral atmosphere we breathe, is all a part of his method of lifting the souls of men to higher life. Still less do such men recognize that all good and generous impulses of the heart spring from that ever-present Spirit of God, without which every man would live a wholly sensual life. Between the seventh and eighth chapters of Romans is a great gulf that no man ever yet passed save through Jesus Christ his Lord. But self-mastery won through Jesus Christ is not maintained in idleness and carelessness. There is ample field for the use of all our energies. His method of mastery is by possessing all our powers and sanctifying them to his service. As once we yielded our members servants into iniquity, so now we yield them as instruments unto righteousness. Christ keeps men by keeping them busy. He brings to an end our self-life in the sense of self-seeking, so that we are free to live for him. He sets men free from sin by employing them under the higher law of the activities of a Spirit-filled life. It is not simple self-possession that men want. It is Christ-possession. "I live yet not I, for Christ liveth in me." Emptied of sin and self, filled with Himself, employed in His service. Praise the Lord!

THE DETROIT INTERNATIONAL CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR CONVENTION.

Ho for Detroit! Unfurl your banners! Begin definite plans for our annual "field-day." The program committee has had several meetings; let me tell you something of our hopes for the "best Convention yet."

Wednesday morning, at ten o'clock, the annual business meeting of the United Society of Christian Endeavor will be called to order. The business is important and interesting. Are you a member of the corporation? Why not? Send to me for a copy of our by-laws, and join us heartily.

That afternoon will be given up to the annual meeting of the board of trustees.

The opening session of the Convention will be held Wednesday night in one of the great tents. The mayor of Detroit, and Rev. C. B. Newnan, representing the city pastors, and Chairman Strong, of the local committee of arrangements, will each voice a word of welcome. Then we shall have representatives from England, Canada, and our own land respond for us. After that the officers and trustees are to hold an immense informal reception. We want to meet you face to face, and to take the delegates by the hand. Fall in line, and speak as you pass by.

You see, this is quite a change in our programs of late. The meetings we have held in churches on Wednesday night will now be transferred to Sunday night; and this arrangement also permits us to meet and greet one another as well. I like the idea; don't you?

Upon Thursday morning will come President Clark's annual address, the general secretary's annual report, and the sermon. Another change, you see; the sermon coming early in the Convention proceedings, instead of among its last. What about the consecration meetings? All changed. I will tell you about them a little further on.

The denominational rallies or conferences will be held Thursday afternoon in the churches. These will bristle with new features, but I have not room this time to tell you about them.

Thursday night there will be two great tent meetings, with two speakers in each, handling the problems of the day. Who are the speakers? Wait awhile, and I will make your fingers tingle with enthusiasm when it is time to announce them. It is all I can do to keep some of the names back. Get ready to be pleased; I will guarantee that you will be. Thursday will be a great day.

And so will Friday. In the morning two tent meetings. In the afternoon (and here is another change) we will hold two great schools of methods in the tents; these instead of the usual committee conferences in churches. In this way you can "get to all the committee conferences." You will applaud this change when you learn more of the plans in detail.

Friday night will be another opportunity for two great popular mass-meetings. We have the men, and the topics too, that are worthy of the occasion.

Upon Saturday morning you will be invited to the tents for an attractive discussion of Christian Endeavor principles, and in the afternoon we are to have a grand outing, down the river to Belle Isle. I might say "to fairy-land." But you would say I was extravagant. Never fear; if you have never been to Detroit and to Belle Isle, you will then have the same use for superlative adjectives that I have now.

Saturday evening, the old-time reunions by States in the church headquarters. We can make some changes in the program with a view to improvement, but we all want our annual Saturday-night socials and receptions. State officers, please do not make final arrangements for these until you let me put a f—no, a suggestion—in your ear.

Then Sunday. What with sermons in the churches in the morning, Sunday schools and Christian Endeavor prayer meetings at their regular hours, we will rally, expecting a great blessing in the afternoon for a Sabbath-observance meeting, and for separate evangelistic meetings for men and for women.

In the evening we are to hold twenty or thirty, maybe more, consecration meetings. Each meeting will open with a suitable address by some Spirit-filled man, and then we will close them with seasons of quiet and consecration. This, you see, makes a decided change. I believe you will get great blessing from these meetings. God will give us a great day upon Sunday.

Upon Monday, the closing day, our interest will be sustained by meetings in the tent in the morning.

This year there will be two Junior rallies, one in each tent upon Monday afternoon.

Then we propose for the evening at least two great farewell meetings. After one address in each of these meetings we are to give the States an opportunity, by singing their State songs and in other ways, to bring our great annual feast-day to a close by appropriate exercises. Be prepared for surprises.

So much for the outline, the "bones" of a program, so to speak. Of course there will be the daily Quiet Hour. Led by Dr. Chapman? We hope so. We are also to have two daily Bible-study hours, one conducted by Professor Morehead, of Xenia, O., and the other by Professor Willett, of Chicago. There will be other practical conferences in churches. New ideas, new features; in fact, our meeting this year will give a greater variety of meetings than ever before, making the occasion, all in all, one great Christian workers' conference as well as an International Christian Endeavor Convention.

Remember the dates, July 5-10. Detroit the place.

MISSIONARY NOTES.

Appropos of recent statements in this department relative to the "Zionist Movement," we add this extract from a recent article by Joseph Rabinowitz in the "Missionary Review." Rabinowitz, as is well known, is the leader of a great movement among the Jews in Southern Russia in the acceptance of Jesus of Nazareth as the Messiah.

"Zionism is a combination of modern Jewish ungodly literature with old Talmudical hypothesis, mingled with some portions of mammon interest. Every sensible man can already observe the influence of it. Discord and derangement are prevailing in every place where two or three Zionists begin to lift up the voice, seeing the orthodox Jews, together with their rabbis, are against the plans and devices of Dr. Herzl. The whole uproar of Zionism is carried on only by the young people, boys and girls who never mind or care about all that is holy and dear to the heart of their nation. The authors of the flaming articles for the newspapers about the unmeasurable growth of Zionism are chiefly by young people, who care not about responsibility for the truth. In these days one can mark great disappointments and loss of courage in the Zionist world. The reasons are: first, because of the strict forbidding of the Sultan to let Jews enter Palestine, where there ought to be the state which Dr. Herzl is planning; second, because of the journey of the German Emperor, William III, to Jerusalem—especially the fact, that the German evangelical emperor, when ascending the hill of Zion, made a breach there for Roman Catholicism—this pricks the heart of the Zionists badly. As the Jews were pleased and rejoicing over the first Zionist Congress at Basle, which opened for them the hope of a new Jewish state in Palestine, so in the same measure the Jews are now crushed down with grief by the unexpected events which have followed the second Zionist Congress. What a strange sight before our eyes! representatives of the Jewish nation sitting at Basle, caring for its rest and peace at Jerusalem, from one side; and representatives of the German nation, standing at Jerusalem caring for the interests of German Catholics there, from the other side. Both these mentioned representatives are ignoring the thoughts of Jehovah about Jerusalem, expressed by his prophets."

AMERICAN FRIENDS' WORK IN CHINA.

BY ESTHER H. BUTLER.

A review from the first conception that comes to us of God's plan for this mission brings to mind so many instances of His faithfulness that we feel we are placed in the midst of riches so great that the difficulty will be to rightly select that you may see His plan in it all.

At the time God called the first worker to this mission there was no organized mission among Friends in the empire, though we were preceded on the field by the founders of the English mission. There was no circumstantial connection either with the board or with myself that led us to select this country or this city. In the year 1885 the W. F. M. S. of Ohio Yearly Meeting were earnestly asking to know the Lord's will for them, both as to work and plans. And while they prayed, my call came to me. It read like a telegram—"Hospital Nurse, Nanking, China." I was at that time in no way connected with foreign mission work; knew practically nothing of any field, and had only a passing acquaintance with our board. But "His power is made perfect in weakness." At the same time the Holy Spirit touched the hearts of two of his servants in Nanking, Dr. and Mrs. Bube, of the Methodist Mission, to ask, when writing to E. T. Pritchard, if among the Friends there was not some one who could come as evangelistic nurse to their hospital. This, in a word, gives you the beginnings of the mission in the home land. And I pass on without stopping to speak of many things that strengthened our faith as we followed on to know the Lord's will. I reached the field Twelfth month 14th, 1887, and found the home and work to which I had been called waiting and ready. I remained in the Methodist Mission in charge of the hospital wards for two and a half years.

In the fall of 1888 Amanda Kirkpatrick, of Kansas Yearly Meeting, was accepted and sent out by the board to prepare for the anticipated opening of our mission. As we still had no home of our own, a home was given her with the ladies of the W. F. M. S. of the Methodist Church.

We submitted plans and estimates for buying land, building and opening work to the Yearly Meeting in 1889. We had but little faith that they would be able to undertake so much, but promptly came back the word: Buy and build, substantiating it with a draft for the amount needed.

The land, almost two acres, was bought in First month, 1890. It was walled in, and the home built during the summer. Eleventh month of that year found the home completed and occupied by the two workers. In a very few weeks Miss Kirkpatrick was compelled to return to America on account of failing health. The orphanage building, the gift of A. H. Hussey, was soon completed, and on Third month 24th, 1891, was opened for the Woman's Training School. These were the days of very small things—only one worker and a few ignorant Chinese women within our walls. Our neighbors knew nothing of Christ, and but very little of foreigners. But withal they were not unkind, but positively friendly. However, they were very diligent every night to form in companies, marching round our compound a number of times, beating gongs or anything else that would make a noise, shouting and screaming, finally building bonfires at the four corners of our grounds, and worshipping—all this that the spirits might not torment or bring any sorrow upon them because the foreigners had built houses and were living among them. All these had their ministry. We knew better from what Christ saves. In Fifth month, 1891, came the riots in the Yang-tsi valley, and we were compelled to leave our work and give over the mission compound to the care of the Chinese soldiery for six months. It was then our neighbors gave us proof of their friendliness.

That a woman should live alone, and, what was worse, one that had never been married, and not having even the prestige of widowhood to protect her, appealed to them. After we had gone the violence of the mob increased, until it seemed inevitable that the buildings would be looted and burned. Then came the neighbors, helping to remove everything from the house, storing them in their own homes, and when the danger had passed, all was returned without the loss of any thing.

We returned to our work in Eleventh month. As the board has sent out their calls for help, and one by one the workers have reached us, some from Ohio Yearly Meeting, some from others, some from Friends, some from other churches, each has brought her own new strong history of God's leading, both for herself and for the board, so the Lord has kept himself in the midst to strengthen and to establish.

Laura M. Stanley, the first of these to come to the new home, reached here Twelfth month 12th, 1891. The Women's School was opened for the second time on Second month 12th, 1892, and a day school for girls in Third month. But we were still practically with but one worker, as time for the study of the language must be given to all.

Having decided to open medical work as one branch, the need for a physician to take charge was responded to with the same characteristic promptness that has supplied all our needs.

Lucy A. Gaynor was then in Woman's Medical College, Chicago, and already an accepted candidate in her own church board. But when the Lord brought this need to her notice, she at once recognized it as his call to her. Her board kindly released her, and she was received as a member among Friends. She reached the field Ninth month 21st, 1892. The medical work of the mission dates from her arrival. A small room was given in the orphanage building, which served the purpose of dispensary until the hospital was opened, more than three years later. It was the intention, as indicated by the name of the building, to open an orphanage, and for a time it was considered a department of the work. During the years from 1892 to 1896, inclusive, six different children were adopted. Two of these died, leaving four that are still with us. For the time being this work is abandoned in so far as any extension. While any enlargement of the work, and every new worker sent was a decided step of faith, still the board courageously and constantly kept up the call for help. The next to come to our aid was the Christian Endeavor Society of New York Yearly Meeting. They not only gave us a worker, but also pledged her support. Margaret A. Holme was accepted by the Ohio Board the summer of 1894. She reached the field Tenth month 7th of that year.

Early in 1895 a chapel and dispensary was opened on one of the busy streets of the city in a rented building, and also during the year two day schools, one for boys and one for girls.

The contract for the Women's and Children's Hospital was given in Fifth month, 1895. It was completed early in 1896, but we did not receive any in-patients until in Tenth month. Our next recruit was from the Presbyterian Church. Effie Murray, formerly a member of the Christian Alliance, having had three years' experience on the field, was received as a member of this mission, Sixth month, 1896. The Woman's School, which up to this time had been conducted in connection with the Girls' Boarding School, now took possession of their new quarters in the hospital annex, and the Girls' School became an established and separate work. Up to this time our little band of Christians had worshipped with the Methodists, but we now began holding services in the hospital chapel; until now we had had no chapel of our own.

At the close of 1894 M. Isabella French, a member of Ohio Yearly Meeting, was accepted as medical missionary, and at once began her preparation, under the care of the board. She graduated from the Ohio Wesleyan University in 1897, and reached Nanking, Twelfth month 22d of that year.

As a mission we had for some time been impressed that the time was near when our forces should be scattered, carrying light to some of the many cities and villages that are still lying in almost utter darkness. Early in the year 1898 a number of itinerating visits were made in Luh-hoh, a city of 30,000, situated north of the Yang-tsi River, twenty-five miles from Nanking. The Lord graciously went before, making it possible for us to rent a house in a pleasant part of the city, and among a class of people that are proving most friendly.

The building was rented in Fourth month. From that time until Tenth month regular trips twice each month were made, clinics held, and the Gospel preached. The latter part of Tenth month of this year two of our number, Margaret Holme and Dr. French, removed to this place to make it their permanent home, and at present medical and women's work are opening as fast as study of the language and the newness of the place will permit.

To resume briefly: The mission just entering its eighth year enrolls two medical and four evangelistic missionaries, two native evangelists (men), five Bible women, one nurse, one druggist, two medical students, and four teachers—all of these Christians. Our evangelistic workers have been trained in the Woman's School; indeed, the active members of the church have almost all of them spent more or less time in the Training School.

The average yearly attendance in this school has been about fifteen, eighty per cent. of whom have been converted.

The Girls' Boarding School enrolls twenty. The instruction and discipline is almost entirely in charge of two native young women, with a missionary in general charge. All the older girls are Christians, and many of the younger ones. The healing, helping and evangelistic power of the medical work has grown from 1,000 patients the first year to 5,500 last year. From the day of small things, in a room 12x14, to a large hospital having accommodations for 40 patients on the upper floor alone. In the two years since it was opened for in-patients there have been 510 received. Nine clinics a week have regularly been held. At all of these the Gospel has been preached, and portions of Scriptures distributed. The ward work is under the personal care of a missionary. There have been many souls saved in this work, but it would be impossible to give numbers. It may be of interest to note that notwithstanding the increase and extension of this branch, the amount asked from the Society for running expenses every year grows less. A number of children have been converted in the day schools. Some are now in our own and other boarding schools. At present there are fifty scholars in these schools. There are both Junior and Senior Christian Endeavor Societies. The former has twenty members; the later numbering forty, includes a large per cent. of the church members—indeed, it is the working missionary department of the church. A large proportion of them are very poor, not having enough to obtain even the few comforts that Chinese life demands. However, they have pledged $60 for the coming year; have a good proportion of it already in hand, and are now renting a building, expecting to open a preaching place, a school, and perhaps a clinic on their own account. The actual membership (50) of the church does not increase correspondingly with the general advance of the work. The main reason is the work is so largely women for women, which is very decidedly the side of lesser influence in any heathen country. Very many of the women who are converted are not allowed to join church, because the father has not been reached. From Luh-hoh, the new station, two persons, a man and wife, have already been received into membership. A number of others are inquiring. Faith for great blessing is in the hearts of both the foreign and native workers, for He hath said unto us, "My grace is sufficient for you; for my strength is made perfect in weakness. Most gladly therefor will we rather glory in our infirmities, that the power of Christ may rest upon us."

OUR CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR SUPERINTENDENT OF MISSION WORK.

A short time ago our Christian Endeavorers had an opportunity to become better acquainted with our Christian Endeavor Union President. If you will come with me to Penn College, Oskaloosa, Iowa, we will all get acquainted with our Missionary Superintendent, Gilbert Bowles. During the day we can usually find him in the class-room of the Biblical Department of the college, as he has charge of this work during the temporary absence of Dr. William L. Pearson. Our questions soon bring out the fact that our Superintendent was born in Iowa, but spent the most of his boyhood days on a farm in Jewell County, Kansas. From 1888 to 1894 he spent the greater part of his time in North Branch Academy, teaching school between times to pay expenses.

During the summer of 1894 he went to Tunassasa, N. Y., where he was engaged as a teacher in the Indian School.

The fall of 1895 he entered Penn College, and was soon identified with the active Y. M. C. A. and Christian Endeavor work of the institution. Although he completed the Biblical Course in three years, and supported himself, he always had time for outside literary and Christian work. He was editor of the "Penn Chronicle" one year, and while chairman of the Y. M. C. A. Missionary Committee he gave especial attention to the missionary literature, mission study classes, and plans for the college to support a missionary. Thus we see that during his active college work he always had plenty of time for missionary work.

Since becoming an assistant professor his work has been redoubled. He has had general supervision of the missionary work in the college, leader of a noon-day mission class, and leader of the faculty class.

During the fall term four study classes were conducted, one of which was made up of the professors and their wives. The most of the students in these four classes are active Christian Endeavor workers. They also have a regular Christian Endeavor study class, and forty books were ordered for last term's work.

From the above we see that our Superintendent is not only a theoretical missionary enthusiast, but also a practical worker. He believes in missions so much that during the holidays he married an ex-missionary from Japan, Minnie Pickett. They are now very pleasantly located at 630 North B Street.

Below we give a full outline of the scope of the mission work:

MISSIONARY DEPARTMENT OF THE FRIENDS' INTERNATIONAL C. E. UNION.

Purpose—The purpose is: (1) To act as a bureau of information, (2) to increase the interest in missions, and (3) to suggest methods for transforming awakened interest into practical results.

Methods—The means of accomplishing these ends are the Endeavor Column in THE AMERICAN FRIEND, notices in other papers, personal correspondence and visits, where practicable. Much of the success of these efforts depends upon the freedom and promptness of missionary superintendents and committees. Each Yearly Meeting Superintendent is urged to send in reports of the conditions and work done.

Suggestions—To missionary committees and superintendents: Besides planning for public meetings, increasing the interest in giving, and circulating tracts and papers, there are two things which ought to be done. First, start a missionary library and keep adding to it. Send to Fleming H. Revell Co., Chicago, Ill., for a catalogue of missionary books and ask for special terms for starting a library. Also send to Flora P. Mills, Knightstown, Ind., for a list of our W. F. M. A. publications. Get a list of missionary books in each home and find out if any of these can be placed in the library for exchange. Second, organize and maintain a mission study class. The Friends' Union is now following the Student Volunteer course. It has been selected because of its excellence and its thorough supervision. It is supplemented by articles in THE AMERICAN FRIEND on our denominational work. Methods of organizing classes will vary with conditions. Present the subject publicly, giving a chance for questions, then take names and follow up with personal work. Let time and place of meeting be left to the members. Weekly meetings in private houses are best. A good leader (with the mission committee as advisory), by careful preparation, will do good work with a class of two, but personal invitations will bring in a class of six or eight in almost any society. The best results are obtained where each person studies the entire lesson and comes prepared to recite as in school. The next best is to assign sub-topics to be reported at class, supplementing them by questions and discussions. A map of the country studied should always be at hand. It is well to have a questioner appointed at the beginning of each meeting. The last five minutes may be given to this review, each one being held responsible for everything said during the hour. The ideal mission class is a combination of Bible study, devotion, sociability, curiosity, intellectual pleasure, intercessory prayer, and holy resolutions.

Personal correspondence is earnestly solicited by the superintendent, Gilbert Bowles, 630 North B Street, Oskaloosa, Iowa.

LINES WRITTEN IN ILLNESS.

Throw back the curtain wide, and fold the screen,
And let the light of day stream o'er my bed of sickness.
Long have mine eyes been hid, in darkness and in pain,
And as they open, thoughts will steal across my mind,
I fain would write.
Bring now my paper and my pen, that I may write with Trembling hand the thoughts I may not speak.
Not of the long and weary days and nights of pain;
Not of weeks that seem to come and go unchanging,
These have been mine: but more than these have come to me.
Dear kind, beloved friends, who through these darksome days
Have been as ministering Angels at my bed.
Of you I speak (of gentle Mother's care), you who have helped To lull the raging pain, and bathed my aching brow with Watchful care. Dear friends who here in my absence Offered prayer for me, I speak of you. When it was said to me
That prayer was made in my behalf, mine eyes were filled with Grateful, hopeful tears. "I will lift up mine eyes unto the Hills, from whence cometh my help." Our prayers shall thus Unite, for God hath said, "Where two or three agree, it Shall be done." Such prayer hath healed the sick and caused
The lame to walk. So I rejoice in hope, that I might Rise and walk, and work, as in the other days. Then came
The message from the Meeting, sent by voice and vote, all Pregnant with fraternal sympathy, and writ by friendship's
Well-known faithful hand (letters from friends, with kindest wish Expressed, in thoughtful, hopeful words, in hours of pain, Are helps almost divine). Beloved, you did not wait until Mine eyes were closed to all earth's beauty, before you brought
The flowers. Mine is the joy in life, to know of your Esteem. Mine to have, to hold, to see the things of beauty Sent to me. How exquisite they seemed, what joy they brought Within the same four walls, on which I had to look,
With eyes all dull with pain, for many weeks. Too weak
With pain I was, too full my heart, to justly thank you then,
And now too weak my words. So much to tempt my appetite,
To make me well. Husband and children sweet beguile me into Smiles; more than my heart could ask has come to me.
Friends and Physicians both have faithful been. No wish
Been unfulfilled. My words shall be of praise and not complaint;
I'm trusting Him who does all things well, and "Though He Slay me, I will trust in Him." And so I bide my time, dear Friends, to know His will, if I may walk again. Meanwhile,
I thank Him for your works of love, and Ask His richest blessing on you all.

News from the Field.

KANSAS YEARLY MEETING.

Independence, Kansas.—Anna Z. Strange of Tonganoxie Monthly Meeting, began a series of meetings at Bolton, in the limits of Elk River Quarterly Meeting, First month, 30th, and closed Second month 12th, 1899. Twenty-one sessions in all were held. There were nine renewals. The church was strengthened and built up, and outsiders wonderfully awakened in regard to the religion of Jesus Christ.

ELIZABETH LINDLY.

Edson, Sherman County Kansas.—Revival services were begun here first month 14th, 1899, by D. H. Dillon, of North Branch, Jewel County, Kansas, assisted by our pastor, R. C. Smith, and continued three weeks, resulting in eight conversions and twenty renewals, and the church was strengthened and built up. Sherman Monthly Meeting is held at Edson the second Seventh-day in each month. A visit from any Friends would be highly appreciated.

WILLIAM F. DUBRE.

Haviland, Kansas.—Edward Woodard, a minister of Bloomingdale Monthly Meeting, Indiana, arrived at this place Monthly Meeting morn, Second month 4th, 1899. He attended the business session of that meeting, which in reality was the beginning of a series of meetings at this place, twenty-five sessions in all. It can truly be said this was a time of refreshing from the Lord. Our Brother was highly favored in declaring the plain Gospel truths as they were presented to him. Saint and sinner each received his portion, and we are glad to note that many heeded the admonition given, and sixty or more were converted or reclaimed. A few made application for membership. Brother Woodard has been suffering from la grippe for several days past. As soon as he is able he will go to Emporia, Kansas, for revival work.

M. M. W.

Ottawa Mission.—Immediately following Grand River Quarterly Meeting held at Lowell, Kansas, Second month 4th and 5th, Fred L. and Olive Ryon came to Ottawa to hold some special meetings. Weather was very cold on their arrival and continued to grow more severe until it was thought advisable to discontinue the meetings after the middle of the week. The cold continued something over ten days; the mercury registering at 24 to 28 degrees below zero at one time, the coldest known in the Indian Territory since it was settled by white men. Brother and Sister Ryon were much worn from continued evangelistic labor in the Territory for the past two months, and received by reason of the storm a much needed rest. On the return of milder weather the next week they went to Hillside (formerly Skiatook) to engage in gospel work.

W. P. HAWORTH.

WESTERN YEARLY MEETING.

Sheridan, Ind.—John L. Kittrell, the noted evangelist of Tennessee, accompanied by J. W. Brann, of Wilmington, Ohio, has just closed a two weeks' series of Gospel meetings at this place. Much interest was manifest at the beginning of the meetings, which increased throughout the series, there being twenty-seven meetings in all. The church was greatly strengthened and many took a more decided stand for God; backsliders were reclaimed and sinners converted. Brother Kittrell's strong preaching on the line of repentance and conversion, and the baptism of the Holy Spirit, was Scriptural and unquestionable. These Friends won the love of many whose prayers will follow them for their preservation and success in other fields of labor.

SAMUEL BARKER.

Coloma, Ind.—Flora Holiday and Calvin Schoate, of Vermilion Grove, Ill., commenced a protracted meeting at Coloma, Parke County, Ind., on the 5th of Second month, which held for two weeks, closing on the 19th, and it is safe to say that in many respects it was the most remarkable religious awakening that has ever taken place in our vicinity, or as a local paper states, "In the history of Parke County." The evangelists were assisted by Ruth Barrett, Ida Heller, and Mrs. Thompson, of Ohio, whose loving words and service of song was greatly appreciated and blest in the salvation of souls. The preaching and praying of the evangelists brought conviction and contrition on sinners, professors and non-professors alike, and many open confessions were made on the Bible line, many men and women falling down and crying for mercy, and acknowledging their sins and transgressions against God and man; reconciliations were made between neighbors, and restitution for financial wrongs (in some cases reaching backward many years). Judgment upon evil doers seemed manifest, as in apostolic times, and later as in the days of Fox and Wesley, and Whitfield and Finney. There were a number of true conversions and renewals, and also a goodly number received the witness of the Spirit of entire cleansing and anointing.

There are a great many false reports in circulation about the meeting and the workers, a Kansas City paper, "The World," printing an article from a correspondent at Terre Haute, signed "S. M. T.," in which there are greatly exaggerated statements made of what did occur, and positive falsehoods about the evangelists and converts. No one has gone insane on account of the meetings (as stated in the paper referred to), nor are they in any danger of it by submitting to the mind of Christ. There was no "hypnotic power" used, as stated by this correspondent, but the power of the Holy Spirit caused sinners to fall like Saul of Tarsus did, and like the Philippian jailor did, and cry for mercy and ask what they should do to be saved. We think nothing was done at these meetings but that would tend to make men and women better citizens, better Christians, and better members of the church. A loving interest in each other's welfare is abundantly more manifest. New joys and new strength have come to the church, and the standard of purity in life is being exalted in its beauty. Nine free-will offerings were made to the Monthly Meeting asking forgiveness for offences committed, some of them many years ago, and all were accepted and pardon freely given. Bloomingdale Quarterly was held on the 18th and 19th inst., and our dear Sister, Flora Holiday, was enabled to preach a powerful sermon on the prevailing sins of the day, which was backed by the power of the Spirit, and the testimony of many witnesses who have recently received new light. Praise the Lord; to him be all the glory.

S. B. WOODARD.

Superintendent Evangelistic and Pastoral Work.

INDIANA YEARLY MEETING.

On First month 24th, Margaret Ann Craig, of Mercer County, Ohio, came to Portland, Ind., and began a series of meetings which continued thirty-four days—forty-four sessions in all. A week later A. J. Collins came and stayed one week. Many members had prepared themselves for a revival and it had already begun. The meetings were at no time large, but the power of the Lord was greatly manifest at most of the sessions. There were eighteen professed conversions, and four renewals; so far there are six requests for membership; six were already members; two of the remaining six are Lutherans. At Monthly meeting in First month six persons in Portland were received into membership, one of whom died on his way to meeting two days later.

Some weeks ago a Ladies' Aid Society was formed to help in the finances of the church.

At the close of the series of meetings steps were taken to organize a Christian Endeavor Society, beginning with sixteen members, with more to come.

We ask for the prayers and sympathy of the whole church that our meeting may become a great power for good in the community.

CALIFORNIA YEARLY MEETING.

Whittier, California.—Whittier Quarterly Meeting was held at Whittier, Second month 17th, 18th and 19th. We had in attendance Professor Charles E. Tebbetts, of Pasadena, Irvin G. Tabor, of El Modena, and Rhoda M. Hare, of Los Angeles. The sessions throughout were well attended and abounded in harmony, Christian fellowship, and intense spiritual interest. On Seventh-day the meeting listened to a very practical sermon on the "Parable of the Lost Coin," by Professor Tebbetts.

The Quarterly Christian Endeavor Meeting was held on the evening of the 18th, at 7 o'clock. This is a large and flourishing society with a membership of about one hundred. Miriam Harrison is the local president, and they not only hold a large enthusiastic meeting on Sabbath evening, but remain for the preaching service which follows, and add much interest by their presence and help.

This Quarterly Meeting occasion was rendered especially interesting and profitable by an excellent address by the Pastor, Andrew F. Mitchell, on the text: "And the leaves of the tree were for the healing of the nations." He gave a clear scientific description of the development of the leaf in the vegetable world, and then drew a practical parallel in spiritual life.

The usually large congregation on Sabbath morning was increased by visitors from other meetings, so that the college auditorium was well filled. The meeting was conducted by the pastor, Rhoda Hare, John Bond, and others taking part in the devotional exercises. The theme of the sermon was that of the morning Bible lesson, "I am the bread of life." The services of Andrew F. Mitchell are greatly appreciated by the Friends of Whittier Meeting and by others as well, so the attendance is always good. He is very much in sympathy with the younger as well as the older members of the congregation, and his gentle spirit appeals to all.

A wave of sadness passed over the entire community at the news of the death of David Lewis, of Long Beach, on the 16th. During the series of meetings held at Whittier just a year ago, which continued four weeks, he greatly endeared himself to the hearts of the many who heard him. He seemed to possess the power of the Holy Spirit to a remarkable degree. Though frail physically, and suffering from a disease that was the cause of his early death, his energy never relaxed in God's work. He was an indefatigable reader, and his sermons revealed the vast store of information, grasped and held by a keen intellect. His burning words will remain indelibly fixed on the lives of the many helped to a higher life by his influence. The funeral services held at Whittier, at Friends' Church on Sabbath afternoon, conducted by Thomas Armstrong, were very impressive, and so many were present that there was not room inside for all. The interment followed at Whittier cemetery.

The closing services on Sabbath evening were conducted by the pastor, followed by Mary V. Brown, of Long Beach, and Thomas Armstrong, of Alimitos. The feeling was universal that the Spirit of the Lord was with us and that He had given us a good Quarterly Meeting.

We may say also that Whittier College is doing excellent work under the efficient management of Professor J. J. Jessup, assisted by Susan Johnson, Anna Moore, and the Misses Morgan.

The College is well equipped in its various departments for the work that is being done; the building is paid for, the teachers are popular and efficient in their departments, and accomplishing much good. Whittier and her churches, schools, and people are up to date in character, enterprise, and all that makes it desirable for home life.

IOWA YEARLY MEETING.

B. B. Hiatt is engaged in pastoral work in Spring Bank and Elk Valley Meetings in Northeastern Nebraska. It is a very interesting field of labor and there are many young people in each meeting. They are situated about six miles apart.

BALTIMORE YEARLY MEETING.

Eli G. and Mary V. Parker, of Iowa, spent about a week in Richmond, Va., and held several meetings both at the meeting house and at the Friends' Chapel, a building recently rented by Friends in Richmond, at 611 S. Belvidere Street, for Gospel work. It is situated in a needy section of the city, and work has opened there with great interest, eighty-three being already enrolled in the Bible School. Mary Parker, owing to an accident to her knee, was unable to go about much, and the severe weather prevented a large attendance at the meetings, but a Friend from Richmond writes that it was felt that their coming was of the Lord, and that their work was much blessed.

They went forward to Baltimore, on Second month 11th, and remained there a week. This was the week of the blizzard, and, besides attending the regular meetings in course, it was possible to hold but one appointed meeting in South Baltimore, and to make a few family visits. They left for the north on the 27th, having been laboring almost constantly in this Yearly Meeting since early in Eleventh month. Their work has been felt to be timely and helpful.

Dunnings' Creek Quarterly Meeting was held in Bellefonte, Pa., on First month 27th. Samuel R. Neave, Richard H. and Anna B. Thomas were in attendance from a distance. In addition to the regular meeting, four parlor meetings were held at the house of a member, at two of which the subject of Baptism and the Supper were helpfully considered. The most important business that was transacted was the establishment of a new Monthly Meeting at Curwensville, Pa., where, during the past few years, there has been an increase both in membership and activity. The distance between this place and Bellefonte is such that the division of the Monthly Meeting seemed to promise increased efficiency in the work.

WILMINGTON YEARLY MEETING.

Olive Branch, Ohio.—Our pastor, R. H. Luttrell, closed a twelve days' meeting at this place First month 31st, holding twenty-one meetings and visiting ten families. The Gospel was preached with great power and under the direction of the Holy Spirit, that resulted in building up of the church and uniting believers; thirty-one were converted, twenty gave their names to become members of our meeting. Our pastor is also pastor at Cuba, Ohio, at which place he is commencing a series of meetings. O. C.

PHILADELPHIA YEARLY MEETING.

On the evening of the 1st, Dr. M. Mesropian, an Armenian, spoke to the Friends in Haddonfield, N. J., on his native country and the customs of the people. His bird's-eye view of the Armenians and their present condition was vivid and graphic. His direct and entertaining manner kept the interest and sympathy of the audience throughout. While not pessimistic of the outcome, Dr. Mesropian feels that the cause of Armenia is almost hopeless. With the present jealousy of the Powers, and the consequent hesitation to intervene on the part of any one of them, there can be no permanent amelioration of the condition of the stricken country.

On Second-day, the 27th ult., very interesting Tea meetings were held both at Germantown and Twelfth Street meeting houses. The former was addressed by James Wood, whose subject was, "Reformation in the Christian Church." Isaac Sharpless spoke to the members and attenders at Twelfth Street upon "The Discipline of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting." Both meetings were well attended and were very profitable occasions.

FOREIGN MISSION.

Thinking the readers of THE AMERICAN FRIEND would like to hear something of the mission work at Doug's Island, Alaska, I send some extracts from letters recently received:

C. N. Repogle writes: "The snow is piled half way up against the back doors, and we have to tunnel our way out. The two precious boxes sent by the Yearly Meeting, arrived last night. We are truly thankful for all the things sent, everything so nice and durable, just suitable for this country: new dishes, new carpets, blankets, comforts, window-shades, curtains and aprons, children's playthings; knives and neck-ties for boys; dolls, pin-cushions, handkerchiefs and ribbons for girls. All the things were so thoughtfully prepared! Our meetings have been a source of comfort to us since our return. They have gradually increased in numbers and spirituality. We are much encouraged with the present prospect of the new church being built in the spring. Freight rates are so cheap now, and the snow is so deep that I wish we could purchase the lumber at Seattle now, so we could haul it on a sled from the wharf to the church site, which would save about one-half of the cost that it will take later on when the snow is gone, when we should have to carry it on our shoulders. Then we would be ready when spring opens to begin work on the buildings. We have the promise of some work on the church the coming summer from two men, if they are successful in their mining claims located on Pine Creek. I hope they may be.

"Now that there are but two children boarded in the home, we have re-modeled the house, making it much more comfortable and convenient for a small family.

May Replogle also writes under the same date: "We are all excited over the arrival of the boxes. We have expected them so long. And everything is so nice. The carpet is just a beauty. I think we appreciate things up here a great deal more than we do at home, I know I do. Erne jumped up and down when the pink fascinator was brought from the box and given to her. As to that, we all acted likewise. I know it would have done the donors good to have seen us unpacking the nice things."

Jennie Lawrence writes in reference to the work: "Sabbath School averaged for the last quarter eighty-six. The meetings all held regularly, with twelve extra meetings. The average attendance of the latter being fifty. Sunday School teachers' meetings held weekly. The families have all been visited by Charles, since their return in November, besides daily visits to the homes in the interest of the day school."

The boxes referred to in these letters were conveyed to the mission from the wharf in a very different way from the ones carried from Jerusalem to the Ramallah Mission, as per the account in the Second month, second number of THE AMERICAN FRIEND. The one on camels, the other on sleds drawn by men, as the snow was deep; otherwise they would have been carried on the shoulders of the men.

The Woman's Foreign Missionary Association of Knightstown and Raysville, Indiana, held its regular meeting First month 12th, at the home of Mary Charles. The parlors were well filled with women, who listened to an address by Mahalah Jay, of Richmond, on "Mexico and Her People." It was very instructive and added to our interest in the work. She showed samples of beautiful needlework done by Mexican women. This work proves that the Mexicans, in spite of their degradation, are capable of much improvement and refinement if they are only given an opportunity. Phariba W. Stephens, President of the Yearly Meeting's Board, was also present. She has organized a number of societies in the past three months.

"The Missionary Advocate" of First month, contains a concise history of the work of Indiana Yearly Meeting's Committee on Foreign Missions.

Died.

ALLEN.—At West Newton, Ind., Solomon Allen, aged 78 years, 11 months and 9 days. For fifty years he was afflicted with rheumatism, and although a great sufferer, he was diligent in attendance at meeting until a few weeks before his death. He was an elder and member of Fairfield Monthly Meeting.

BRAY.—John Milton Bray fell asleep in Jesus after a little over two weeks of very painful sickness, which was borne with much Christian fortitude, Second month 8th, 1899, aged 54 years 4 months and 21 days. He was a member and elder of Westfield Meeting, Ind. He was converted to Christ in early manhood, and in addition to being naturally of an amiable disposition, he manifested the Christian graces of tenderness and love to a remarkable degree, so that his life was a living epistle, known and read of all who knew him. He was very much attached to the vital principles as held by his church, especially those of peace and temperance. He was a great lover of the Bible school, and faithful attendant of the same.

His friends have the comforting evidence that their loss is his eternal gain.

DAVIS.—Ada J. Davis, daughter of Arvine and Phebe Beck, and wife of Alfred Davis, died Second month 16th, 1899, aged 48 years and 6 months. She was a member of Bangor Monthly Meeting, Iowa, and a member of the W. C. T. U. She took a lively interest in Christian work.

DAVIS.—Thomas C. Davis, son of Henry and Huldah Davis, died at his home near Leesburg, Kansas, First month 18th, 1899, aged 75 years. He was a man of good judgment, very helpful in the affairs of the church. He was given to hospitality. He was a member of Pleasant Valley Monthly Meeting. He was a consistent Christian, having the assurance that our loss is only his gain.

News and Events.

The Fifty-fifth Congress adjourned at noon on the 4th inst. The last week of the session was crowded with business; many bills and nominations were of necessity left unconsidered, notwithstanding an all-night session on the 3d. The most important bills, which were passed only a short time prior to adjournment, were those relating to naval appropriations, the army reorganization, and the river and harbor appropriations. All opponents of militarism will rejoice that the army is to remain practically on a peace footing. The final bill, which passed both House and Senate and which is a distinct compromise of all others, provides for an army of 100,000 men until July 1, 1901; this army to be composed of 65,000 regulars, and 35,000 men to be enlisted at the discretion of the President from the natives of the islands or elsewhere. After this date the army is to be reduced to a peace basis. The Navy Personnel Bill provides that the limit of cost of armor plate shall be $300 per ton. Twelve battleships are to be constructed at a cost of $43,000,000. The grading of officers has been changed and the rank of Admiral created. George Dewey, it is unnecessary to say, is the first to hold this new honor. Tremendous expenditures have characterized this last Congress, the excess over the appropriations of the previous Congress being due almost wholly to the war. Yet our government is run, without doubt, on an expensive and oftentimes extravagant system. The total appropriations of the retiring Congress amounted to about $1,500,000,000. This is vastly in excess of the cost of the English government, whose expenses would properly be supposed much heavier than ours.

The Miles Court of Inquiry continued throughout the past week. Evidence is accumulating to prove that the beef furnished the army has been wholly unsuitable and nauseating. One witness stated that he had condemned 42,000 pounds of the canned roast beef at Jacksonville. The evidence further shows that the beef killed on the islands and then refrigerated was superior to any other. The Court is now expecting to devote some time to an inspection of the meat concerns which furnished the beef to the army. It will begin its investigations in Chicago this week.

The Filipinos, it has been asserted, are showing signs of wavering. Many of the rebels are dissatisfied—and, in fact, 8,000 in front of Manila have expressed a desire to surrender. For the most part, however, events in the Philippines last week were remarkably quiet. Our casualties to date amount to about 85 killed and 350 wounded. The Filipinos have circulated a false report that they hold 600 of our soldiers as prisoners, but this is utterly false. Not more than a half a dozen of the United States troops are in their possession, if there are even this many.

Germany has shown a remarkable spirit in withdrawing from the Philippine waters all her war vessels and placing under the care of the United States the property and lives of her subjects in the islands. This is a signal manifestation of good-will and removes a fertile source of suspicion of Germany's designs. Her supposed unfriendly attitude toward this country now becomes one of marked cordiality. The troubles in Samoa, however, remain to be settled, but there is no doubt the outcome will be satisfactory to all concerned. It is generally recognized that the tripartite government of Samoa has for a long time been unsatisfactory, and a new regime will perhaps replace the present system.

SHORT PARAGRAPHS.

An antique ledger has been discovered belonging to an old Edinburgh merchant living in the sixteenth century. It was similarly solid and heavy to those used to-day, but in the top corner of the inside board were inscribed these words, "God blis this Buik, and keip me and it honest."

An old Arab proverb hath it thus: "Men are four. He that doesn't know, and doesn't know that he doesn't know, he is a fool; leave him. He that doesn't know, and knows that he doesn't know, he is simple; teach him. He that knows and doesn't know that he knows, he is asleep; awake him. He that knows and knows that he knows, he is wise; follow him."

The Belfast (Me.) "Journal" says: "During the recent heavy snowstorm a flock of sheep, owned by David Young, was left on the mountain. After the storm was over he went to gather in his flock, and, finding one missing, began a search. After five days he succeeded in finding her under five feet of snow, alive and not in bad condition. She had traveled around under the snow until there was a beaten track on several feet."

Elmwood is saved, and the home of James Russell Lowell will be turned into a memorial park. The enthusiastic men and women who had the matter in hand had to raise a good many thousand dollars within a given time, and the money came in so slowly that they were in despair; but now they have the full amount and a little over.

A knowledge of the Abstract.—"What is an abstract noun, Nellie?" asked the teacher of a bright little girl. "Don't know!" was the answer. "You don't know!" exclaimed the teacher. "Well, it's the name of something you can think of, but can't touch. Now can you give an example?" "A red-hot poker," was the surprising and prompt reply.

Praying for Him.—The following is from the autobiography of Dr. Newman Hall: "Dr. Enoch Mellor, one of Dr. Hall's chief friends, was constantly invited to preach in distant places. His people at home loved him dearly, but felt that his popularity elsewhere was somewhat of a drawback. In praying for him one day, a good man said: 'O Lord, bless our Enoch! We love him dearly. But, O Lord, tie him by the leg, tie him by the leg!'"

At the time of the discovery of the Philippines, in 1521, there were found in the islands the brown Malaysians, who are now in the great majority, and the small black Negritos, of whom only about 10,000 survive. Dr. Brinton, of the University of Pennsylvania, believes that these two races are ethnographically distinct, and that their ethnic and historic relations offer some interesting problems in anthropology.

THE TRAMP'S PRAYER.

There had been a railroad wreck; two passengers were killed and five or six injured, and among the latter was a professional tramp who had been stealing a ride. To the doctor who examined his injuries he said, smiling feebly, and with that manner peculiar to his class, "Well, pard, what's the verdict of the jury?"
"You are very badly hurt," was the reply.
"Are my legs off?" "No; you are fatally injured, however." "That means I'm a goner. My pard was on the car ahead.
Is he hurt?" "No; here he is." At that moment a ragged, unkempt and typical vagabond came forward, and, bending over the victim, said: "Well, Jim, they say you

Enameline

is perfectly ODORLESS, and that is another reason why it is the Modern Stove Polish. You will not have to move out of the house until it "burns off," if you have to go. How are you feeling over it?"

"Sorter! No use to kick, Tom." Kin I do anything for you?" The dying man gazed at him a moment in silence, and then whispered: "Tom, you are the only pardner I ever has as knowed the Lord's Prayer. Just say it over to me." The old tramp pulled off his cap and knelt down, and, as the bystanders uncovered and bowed their heads, he repeated the prayer word for word, and with such feeling as astonished everybody. When he had finished, he rose up, and said, "That's it, Jim; and kin I do anything more?" "Nothing more for him," answered the doctor, as he looked down upon the pale face.
"Your partner is dead."

Who will say, after reading this incident, that there is no hope for the tramp, and that it is useless to work for him? Why, the very tramps themselves would put us to shame if we did,—as in this instance.

For our part, we would rather be the ragged wretch kneeling by the side of his dying partner, and holding just before him the faintest rush-light of a hope to illumine the darkness that was settling down upon him, than to stand in the pulpit of the near-by church and preach a gospel of good taste to a congregation of a hundred and fifty pious souls who had made their calling and election sure.—"The Missionary."

Baron Farrer Herschell, the eminent English publicist, died suddenly in Washington on the evening of the 1st. He was president of the Joint High Commission appointed to settle the points of difference between this country and Canada, and was one of England's most prominent jurists.

"Is it true," asked an acquaintance of a girl who returned from Boston, "that there is an air of culture and educational refinement plainly noticeable in the speech of Boston residents?" "My dear," she replied impressively, "even owls around Boston hoot 'To whom!' instead of 'To whoo!'
as in the west."

A WOMAN'S LIFE WORK.

Including Thirty Year's Service on the Underground Railroad and in the War.

BY LAURA HAVILAND.

This is a story of a wonderful life. The author was an active Anti-Slavery agitator and through her underground railroad work assisted hundreds of slaves to escape from bondage. During the war she spent about two years taking care of the sick and wounded. Through her efforts more than 2,000 Union Soldiers were liberated. She accomplished a great work in providing for the Freedmen of Kansas after the close of the war. She was the founder of the State Public School, at Coldwater, Mich., an institution which was the first of its kind in the world. The Industrial School for Girls at Adrian Mich., almost utterly owes its first existence, and especially its name to her efforts. Haviland Academy at Haviland, Kansas, was named in her honor, as also the town in which it is located. At the World's Fair she was introduced by President Palmer as "The Mother of Philanthropy," and well she deserves the title. Her experience as told in this book will be read with thrilling interest.

This book is printed on good paper and contains 625 pages. It is bound in cloth with red edges. The retail price of the book is $1.50. We will send it postpaid, for $1.00. Address,

HULDA:

The Pentecostal Prophetess.

BY BYRON J. REES.

152 Pages. Bound in Cloth. Price, 50c., postpaid.

A short life story and seventeen of the sermons of Hulda A. Rees, together with her portrait and picture of her early church. This book needs no other introduction than for the reader to know that seventeen of her sermons, which Sister Rees preached with such accompaniments of power and blessing, are for the most part to compose it. The life-story is short yet comprehensive, the writer of it avoiding anything of a eulogistic nature and making the facts of the life serve as an appropriate introduction to the character back of the sermons.

Mrs. E. E. Williams, in a beautiful poem, which is also a part of the book, gives some refreshing glimpses into the character of Sister Rees.

Esther T. Pritchard also contributes a "Tribute," glowing with fervor and truth.

The Bluefields revolution in Nicaragua has been virtually terminated by the capture of Chili Mountain and Agua Calientes by President Zelaya's troops.

The Senate has confirmed the nomination of Wm. R. Merriam, ex-Governor of Minnesota, for the position of Director of the coming census.

Alarming reports have lately been sent out regarding the health of the Czar. These appear to be without foundation. For years Nicholas has suffered from fits, but the attacks are now much less severe than formerly.

A frightful explosion of a naval powder magazine near Toulon in France, on the 5th, resulted in the death of sixty soldiers and many more wounded. The country was shaken for miles around.

Richard Croker, in a burst of patriotism, announces his determination to celebrate Jefferson's birthday with a grand banquet. It will emulate the Home Market Club banquet in Boston, and will cost $16,000. "Expansion" will be the motto of the occasion.

The Illinois legislature has passed a bill appropriating $9,000 for the purpose of placing a statue of Frances E. Willard in the rotunda of the Capitol Building at Washington. This will be first statue of a woman thus honored.

A reunion of the alumni of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology was recently held in Chicago. Telephonic communication was established in a remarkable manner between this gathering and similar ones in Boston, New York, St. Louis and other cities, so that each was aware of what was transpiring in all the others.

Rudyard Kipling, who has been prostrated in New York City with pneumonia, is now improving. For a time his life was almost despaired of and his expected recovery is a source of satisfaction to the whole English-speaking world.

It is reported that the American capitalist, J. Pierpont Morgan, has arranged to light St. Paul's cathedral, in London, with electricity at a cost of $25,000. The innovation of electricity in this ancient shrine and the friendly gift to such an English institution by an American are equally worthy of note.

The Queen of England starts to-day for the Riviera on her outing. Her monthly expenses at the Riviera for hotel accommodations only amount to $15,000. The Paris papers blame Victoria for the Fashoda incident and do not look upon her sojourn in their country with complacency.

Popular Physicians

"If not feeling well, let these three be your doctors: Dr. Diet, Dr. Quiet and Dr. Merryman." Dr. Diet should be consulted first, as he can do most for you. Diet, indeed, is the all-important thing in gaining and retaining health.

A prudent diet should always include Quaker Oats. It is best.

Making it Worth While.—An Irishman walking over a plank sidewalk, in counting some money, accidentally dropped a nickel, which rolled down a crack between two of the boards. The Irishman was much put out by his loss, trifling though it was, and continued on his way swearing audibly.

Early the next day a friend, while walking by the spot, discovered the Irishman in the act of deliberately dropping a dollar down the same crack through which he had lost his nickel. The friend was, of course, much astonished at what he saw, and, desiring to learn why Pat should deliberately, to all appearances, throw away money, inquired his reasons, and was fairly taken off his feet by the following lucid (?) explanation:

"It was this way," said Pat. "It's yesterday I was for passin' this way when I lost a nickel down that hole. Now I reasoned that it wasn't worth me while to pull up thot sidewalk for a nickel, but last night a scheme struck me, and I am dropping down the dollar to make it worth me while."

THE WRONG SIDE.

You have heard that old story of the gentleman who went into the Gobelin tapestry works in Paris, and, standing behind the scenes, saw the skilled workman busy making a splendid piece of tapestry. He saw them with threads of all colors in their hands weaving what seemed to him a great, ugly piece of patchwork, and he said, "I do not detect much beauty in that yet." The director of the loom replied, "No, not yet, but come again in a month and see it when it is finished." The man came back and saw the great piece of tapestry stretched out on the loom just as the finishing touches were being put to it. He said, "I do not see any great artistic beauty in that." "No," said the master workman, "I dare say you do not, but come with me." He then took him round to the other side of the loom. Oh, how wonderful, what a mingling of colors, what beauty of light and shade, what an exquisite design! To-day we are looking on the wrong side of the loom, but "in the morning" the Master will take us round and show us the completed design from the divine side. Do you not see that to-day the Master has hold of the threads and is weaving in the warp and the woof according to the pattern which he alone knows? The dark and awkward patches that we see in our life, which seem to mar its beauty, will, in that morning, be seen in their true light, and we shall find them all to be a part of a divine plan and purpose.—"The Commonwealth."

ADVANTAGES OF DIRECT BUYING.

New innovations do not as a rule meet with prompt public approval. While the American people are famous all around the world for their business acumen and general aptitude to think out and bring into action new inventions and new methods, we often show a disposition of positive lethargy when it comes to changing so-called fixed principles and methods.

Certain manufacturing institutions have in recent years inaugurated a new system of disposing of their products which is unqualifiedly to the advantage of the consumer. It took courage to make the change but they did it. Among the pioneers in this new method of doing business was the Elkhart Carriage & Harness Mfg. Co., of Elkhart, Indiana, whose ad. appears in this issue of our paper. These people began this plan of doing business twenty-six years ago and have adhered to it strictly ever since. The result has been so entirely successful that they are to day the largest manufacturers of carriages and harness in the world selling to the consumer exclusively.

The advantages to the consumer are almost beyond estimate. He gets better goods; better and larger selection; better styles and finish and finally he buys at a much more equitable and advantageous price. In dealing with the Elkhart people there is no risk to assume as they ship either vehicles or harness anywhere for examination and guarantee every article they manufacture and sell. Then, too, one may deal satisfactorily from any distance. The Elkhart Carriage & Harness Mfg. Co. publish an extended illustrated catalogue, which they will take pleasure in mailing to all our readers who request it.

A youngster of eight was taken to a service in a Roman Catholic church, having previously been warned to leave all his playthings at home and be very quiet while in church. As they left the building he said, in an injured tone: "Mamma, you told me I musn't play in church. What was that lady next to me doing with marbles, then? She had a whole string of white alleys."

Drudgery is essential in all good work. Some drudgery must precede high effort and attainment in any and every sphere. Mixing colors is the drudgery in the greatest artist's painting, as surely as in that of the young beginner in his profession. He who is not willing to do the needful drudgery in the work he undertakes will never be a success in any high realm of his aspiration. No man who is not ready first to tread the lower rounds of a ladder can ever hope to stand by and by at the top.—"Sunday School Times."

MEASURING CHRISTIANITY BY MUSCLE.

Two elders of the same Scottish church, meeting one day, began discussing the merits of a clergyman who had lately been appointed pastor of the congregation.

"Weel, Tammas," said one, "what dae ye think o' oor new minister?"

"Ah, weel, Geordie," replied the other, "he daes no sae bad, but he's no up to the mark o' the aye we haed afore."

THE CRESCENT.

Just over the gates of the gold and blow
Where the sunset spirits are,
She floats in the nebulous amber, low,
Luminous, languorous, moving slow,
Away from the evening star.

A golden cloud drifts back from her face
Like the tress of her yellow hair;
And the stars come out of their hiding-
place
To bask in her beauty and feel her grace—
To woo her, she is so fair.

Her answers are soft as adagios,
Yet wayward and coy as she;
When the petals close of the western rose,
Evading them all, she silently goes
Over the edge of the sea!

Hayes and the Farmer.—It is told of ex-President Rutherford B. Hayes that, while attending school at Kenyon College, he was in the habit of taking daily walks into the country. These trips were shared by two intimate companions, who were of a fun-loving disposition, which frequently got them into trouble. On one occasion they more than met their match at repartee in an old farmer, whom they met on the highway. The long, white beard of the farmer gave him a patriarchal appearance, and while he was approaching the students, they arranged to give him a "jollying," which eventually terminated in the discomfiture of the youths.

One of them doffed his hat with great reverence and respect as he said, "Good morning, Father Abraham!"

The second saluted the old farmer and said, "Good morning, Father Isaac!"

Mr. Hayes, not to be outdone in affability and politeness, extended his hand as he said, "Good morning, Father Jacob!"

Ignoring the outstretched hand of Mr. Hayes, the old farmer replied, "Gentlemen, you are mistaken in the man. I am neither Abraham, Isaac nor Jacob, but Saul the son of Kish, who was sent out to seek his father's asses, and lo! I have found them."

A little girl who is the happy possessor of a doll and a cat was asked which of these two friends she loved the better. The answer was not forthcoming directly. She reflected for at least thirty seconds;

" HERE is a vast difference between an unsupported assertion and a demonstrated fact."

Our assertion that Pure White Lead made by the "old Dutch process" of slow corrosion is far superior to White Lead made by patent or quick processes, has been demonstrated by the experience of competent, practical painters everywhere. then she said, with an air of great seriousness: "I am afraid I like Tabby better than Jane, but I must beg of you not to mention it to Jane; it would make her sad."

A teacher in one of the Cleveland public schools said to the class in English composition: "I wish every member of the class would write out a conversation between a grocer and one of his customers, introducing some pathetic incident or reference." Among the compositions handed in was the following by a sweet little girl: "What do you want?" asked the merchant. The lady replied, "A pound of tea." "Green or black?" asked the merchant. I think I'll take black," she said: "its for a funeral." —Exchange.

Among the crowned heads Louis XI. of France was one of the firmest believers in superstition. He it was who had an unfortunate astrologer brought before him who told him that a beautiful woman, a friend of the King's, would die, and Louis, enraged at the verification of the prediction, sent for the astrologer, and when he was brought before him ordered his couriers to throw him out of a window of the palace. Before the order was obeyed he asked the astrologer with a sneer if he could tell him (the King) the hour of his own death. "Sire," replied the quick-witted astrologer, bowing low, "I shall have the honor of dying just three days before your Majesty."

Not only did the astrologer save his life then, but he was treated with the greatest care that his valuable life might be indefinitely prolonged.

IMPRESSION OF SIBYL JONES' PREACHING.

At the first word she loosed the fastenings of her bonnet, and as she spoke handed it down to her husband with a grace indescribable. There was something very impressive in the act, as well as the manner in which it was performed, as if she uncovered her head involuntarily in reverence to that vision of divine truth unsealed to her waiting eyes. And in her eyes it seemed to beam with a heavenly light serene, and in her heart to burn with holy inspiration and meekness, and to touch her lips and every gentle movement of her person with an expression eloquent, solemn, beautiful as her words fell upon the rapt assembly from the heaven of tremulous, flute-like music with which her voice filled the building. Like a stream welling from Mount Hermon, and winding its way to the sea, so flowed the melodious current of her message, now meandering among the unopened flowers of rhymeless poetry, now through green pastures of salvation, where the Good Shepherd was bearing in his bosom the tender lambs of his flock; next it took the force of lofty diction, and fell, as it were, in cascades of silvery eloquence, but solemn, slow, and searching, adown the rocks and ravines of Sinai; then out, like a sweet-rolling river of music, into the wilderness, where the Prodigal Son, with the husks of his poverty clutched in his lean hands, sat in tearful meditation upon his father's home and his father's love. More than a thousand persons seemed to hold their breath as they listened to that meek, delicate woman, whose lips appeared to be touched to an utterance almost divine. I never saw an assembly so moved, but so subdued into motionless meditation.—Diary of Elihu Burritt, London, May 21, 1852.

BEATITUDES IN THE GOSPEL.

THERE is a great spiritual law, that it is impossible to get something for nothing. This seems at first to contradict the teaching that "grace is free," that "whosoever will, may come," and that salvation is "without money and without price." But the moment we look a little below the surface, we find that there is no contradiction here.

In many of our institutions of learning in America "education is free," but that does not mean that education is conferred upon the student without effort and co-operation on his part, or that he can sit with folded hands and "receive" an education. In the same way character is free—i.e., it does not cost a man any money-fee to have a good character; but, nevertheless, no man can "receive" a character ready made, or have it supplied to him, without moral effort and a struggle with, and victory over, temptations.

All the beatitudes of the Gospel are of this same nature. In one sense the "blessings" are as free as air and sunshine, but we see at once that they come only when a certain spiritual state, or condition of life, has been realized. In other words, it is impossible to have the wider view until the mountain is climbed, though the view above is just as "free" as it is below, on the ground level. Look at the beatitudes and see how they all illustrate that spiritual law of which we spoke at first.

There is the beatitude of seeing God, but it is granted only to "the pure in heart," which means, of course, that seeing God is the normal result of getting the heart pure; it becomes then "second nature" to see God. God does not confer this beatitude as a free gift. What He does give freely is the opportunity of making the heart pure; and the spiritual eyes open to see God, just as fast as we climb up into the life where such vision is possible. The blessedness comes with the quality of life.

There is again the beatitude of being filled, but it comes only to those who have been feeling the sorrows of emptiness and the pangs of hunger and thirst. It is the passion for righteousness which God blesses, and without the passion, the beatitude which attaches to it cannot be received. There is the beatitude of "having the kingdom of heaven," but there is a spiritual state required first which is called "being poor in spirit." You get the blessing only as you enter the state. "Poor in spirit" does not mean being depressed, or despondent, or of no account in the earth; but it does mean coming to the condition where we realize our poverty of soul and our need of God and His riches. It is the sense of incompleteness and worthlessness, followed by the incoming flood of God's completeness and fulness. When God comes, of course the kingdom of heaven comes.

Then, too, there is the beatitude of being "comforted," but it comes only to those who have gone down into the baptism of some hard experience. It is "light after darkness, peace after pain." It is not too much to say, that God never could be fully known or enjoyed by one who had never been in a furnace of trial. Love is never fully revealed, so long as its "course runs smooth." It is when Love comes to comfort that we catch its real heart and meaning. It is when God comes in to heal and bind up our wounds and to fill a great void in our lives that we learn the meaning of this beatitude. Every experience has its own beatitude. At each point on the slopes of Pisgah we get the vision according to our height.

"THE BEST GIFTS."

THERE have always been some persons in the Christian Church who have shown an ambition for "gifts" of rather doubtful value. In Corinth there was an undue craving for the "gift of tongues," as it was called, which was the ability to fall into an ecstatic state in which unintelligible words came from the lips—a flood of speech which had no meaning either to the speaker or to the listeners, until some other man with a gift of interpretation "translated" it into sense. This proved to be rather a dangerous luxury in the infant church, and Paul had to tell his friends in Corinth that the best gifts are the ones that edify the church, and not merely the speaker; and he adds that five words which make sense are better than ten thousand words, from an ecstatic tongue, which make no sense (1 Cor. 14: 19).

There are some among us to-day who covet the gift of astonishing, rather than the gift of edifying. They want the unusual to happen. They are not satisfied with the ordinary gift of speaking the truth, and with building up the church by the slow methods of spiritual life and growth. They want to make saints by some short cut, and get the victory without the battle.

We hear almost every winter of a meeting or of meetings in which astonishing things have taken place, such as persons falling down on the floor as though they were dead, or of suspended animation, or trances. Such things have happened in almost every age. They occurred under the preaching of Tauler, at Bristol during the first meetings which Friends had there, and they were not uncommon in the days of the Wesleys. Such things occur still more frequently during the exercises of so-called heatthen religions. It is no indication of great spiritual power, but it is a physical state which some persons fall into under high emotion, and it is always a condition to be regretted. In fact, everything which is abnormal and leaves a disastrous after-effect is cause for regret, and weakens rather than edifies in the end. The true "sign" of spiritual power is not to be sought in astonishing physical phenomena, but rather in changed, redeemed lives, and in the upbuilding and solidifying of the church. If, in the course of proclaiming the message of truth and life, unusual events do occur, and some person of abnormal nervous condition is strangely affected, let it be cause for regret and care rather than for glorying, and let every effort be made to avoid the spectacular and all that tends to bring religion into disrepute. What we condemn in the "seance" of the spiritualist does not become holy when it occurs in a religious meeting.

There is one question to be asked regarding the exercise of every "gift." Does it edify? Does it build up individuals in the holy faith, and does it increase the power and weight of the whole church? If it does, it ought to be coveted as one of the "best gifts"; but a gift which brings satisfaction only to the possessor of it, which runs into the abnormal, which merely astonishes or startles, is hardly to be coveted or desired. We do not expect the victories of God to be without some powerful overturnings, nor can the work be done without some unusual displays; but let us not make the mistake of supposing that there is more power in hysterics than there is in calm, spiritual expression of the Love and Truth of God in Jesus Christ.

EDITORIAL NOTE.

THE editor of THE AMERICAN FRIEND has been deeply touched by the many expressions of sympathy which have come to him from the readers of this paper, and though he cannot answer them personally, he wishes to express his appreciation. It is impossible to speak much of such deep experiences, but every human soul loves to feel the comfort of human sympathy, and it is Christlike to help another bear his hard trial.

It is useless to pray for a forgiving spirit while cultivating a memory for injuries. God never quenches a fire for a man who persists in feeding it with oil. He that really desires to keep malice out of his heart will try to keep inflaming thoughts out of his head.

The only final comfort is God; and He relieves the soul always in its suffering, not from its suffering—nay, He relieves the soul by its suffering—by the new knowledge and possession of Himself which could only come through that atmosphere of pain.—Phillips Brooks.

GENERAL CHURCH NOTES.

Dr. Henry Van Dyke, of New York, seems to be firm in his determination to remain in the pulpit. He has just refused the call to a chair of literature in Princeton University.

In one of the smaller islands of the Philippine group, Sula, there is a fierce and warlike tribe known as the Moros. These people are Mohammedans, and are governed by a sultan who has paid but little regard to the Spaniards. Their beliefs are similar to their co-religionists, though they hold to many grotesque and unique opinions. They hate the Christians, and are as ready as any of the Mohammedans to inflict injury upon the followers of Christ.

The eighth annual Tuskegee conference was held on Washington's birthday, at Tuskegee, Alabama. These conferences, which have been brought about by Booker T. Washington, are true missionary enterprises. They bring together the colored people of the state for the consideration of practical means for the betterment of their lot and for the report of progress during the year. Over 1000 farmers were present. The statement was made during the conference that there are at least 5,000,000 negroes in the South unable to read and write. Recommendations were urged advising radical reforms, and the adjustment of standards to higher ideals and insisting upon more useful and self-supporting lives.

A letter has recently been circulated among ministers and laymen of New York State canvassing the advisability of holding biennial religious conferences of the different denominations. It may be said to be an outgrowth of the World's Parliament of Religions, and seeks "reciprocation in religion and of inter-religious co-operation." The letter has been signed by W. S. Rainsford, of the Episcopal Church; A. P. Gifford, of the Baptist; J. Emendorf, of the Dutch Reformed; James R. Day, of the Methodist, and Josiah Strong, of the Congregational Church.

There has been in existence in England for some time an institution known as the "Labor Church," which has aimed particularly at meeting the needs of the workingman. On the assumption that the evangelical churches fail in their mission to the masses, John Trevor, of the Unitarian church, a few years ago, established a church in Manchester along the lines of what is called natural religion in opposition to revealed. He believes that the religious instincts in man are deeply rooted, but that the religion of the orthodox churches is hostile to the best interests of the laboring man. There are now eighteen "labor churches" in Great Britain. It is significant, however, that the latest reports are not encouraging, and there still appears to be much more good accomplished by the evangelical churches in improving the condition of the working classes than by any other organization.

FOR THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

"LETTING THE LIGHT SHINE."

BY BISHOP E. R. HENDRIX.

The best commentary on the Bible the world has ever seen is a holy life—it even illuminates and beautifies the sacred text.

Said John, the Golden-Mouthed [Chrysostom], "Nothing makes a man so illustrious as the manifestation of virtue; for he shines as if clad with sunbeams." But one cannot shine unless he be luminous. All theories of light require a luminous body. Light is part of that kind of energy known as radiant energy and possesses a marvelous velocity where the conditions are favorable, but there must be a luminous body whence this radiant energy comes. The light must first be in the body before it can be transmitted. The Christian's light is alike constant and far-reaching according to the graces which make him luminous.

He who said, "I am the Light of the World" also said "Ye are the light of the world." The source of the world's light in either case is the same; for ours is a derived, a reflected light. Our graces of character are like the rays which illumined the face of Moses when he came down from the mount of God; they are but a reflection of the light of the knowledge of the glory of God shining in the face of Jesus Christ. Our graces come from His grace. Like the stars [planets] our light comes from looking upon the glorious face of the sun. If we have any power to illumine the pathway of life, it is because the Son of Righteousness hath risen upon us with healing in His rays.

We grow in grace, in all graces, as we grow in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ. He that hath the Son hath light as well as life, for in Him was life and the life was the light of men. Beholding as in a glass the glory or character of the Lord we are changed from glory into glory. A Christian shining on earth tells of a Saviour reigning in Heaven and filling all things.

The light which shines from Christian character reaches the heavens whence it came. We are a spectacle unto angels as well as unto men. "To the extent that now unto principalities and powers in Heavenly places might be made known by the Church the manifold wisdom of God." The Church is God's prism, which shows the manifold grace no less than the manifold wisdom of God.

Our Lord never bade His disciples to let their light shine until He had shown them the sevenfold rays which make the white light of Christian character: Humility, Contrition, Meekness, Mercy, Purity, Peace, Endurance. Each is "blessed." Peter, who heard the Sermon on the Mount, reproduced it in a sentence when he said, "Finally, be ye all like-minded, compassionate, loving as brethren, tender-hearted, humble-minded; not rendering evil for evil, or reviling for reviling; but contrariwise, blessing; for hereunto were ye called, that ye might inherit a blessing."

It is this inherited blessing which we are to share with the world and which blesses him that gives it as well as him that receives. Truth first embodied in a personal Saviour and then in saved persons saves others.

The unanswerable argument against unbelief is the life of the believer. "Ye are our epistle, written in our hearts, known and read of all men; being made manifest that ye are an epistle of Christ, ministered by us, written not with ink, but with the spirit of the living God; not in tables of stone, but in tables that are hearts of flesh." The stars [planets] no more tell us that the sun is shining somewhere than these "living epistles" tell of "a light that never was on sea or land" save as it shines in the face of Jesus Christ. No marvel that city hath no need of the sun or of the moon to shine upon it, for the Lamb is the light thereof. There can be no night there where each face is bright with the joy of the Lord. Nor can there be any night here if we obey our Lord's command to let the light shine and are ourselves luminous with His presence, the power that worketh in us mightily.

The influence and responsibility of believers were as clearly taught by our Lord as were their characteristics and privileges. The sea and the sun—the one the great reservoir of salt and the other of light—are no more important to the earth than are believers who have beheld His glory, the glory as of the only begotten of the Father, full of grace and truth.

"I am no longer in the world, but these are in the world." To find suitable receptacles and vehicles of the words which the Father gave Him was the consuming thought of the Saviour during the last year of His ministry. "I pray for them."

Our Lord's first and last command, given alike on the Mount of Beatitudes and on the Mount of Ascension, was to let the light shine. "The hope of the world's salvation is that the salt lose not its witness unto me." It is by letting the light shine that the world is to know the truth of Christianity as well as the possibility and enjoyableness of a Christian life. This is the very purpose, and not simply the result, of the command to let the light shine.

The last time our Lord was ever seen by mortal eye was when He was walking amid the golden candlesticks to see if this command were obeyed. The churches are His golden candlesticks, whose office it is to send afar the light, the beautiful light of God. This is serving the Lord in "the beauty of holiness," when piety in both natural and appropriate ways—the light on the candlestick and not under a bushel, as if in very shame—gives light unto all in the house.

It was because the Pharisees were not luminous with the graces of character that they were incapable of good works. All their attempts to do their works before men to be seen of them received our Lord's just rebuke. They were willing to be esteemed for what they did not possess, a true righteousness or beauty of character. It was a saying in our Lord's day, "If only two persons entered Heaven one would be a scribe and the other a Pharisee." Jesus said, "Except your righteousness exceed the righteousness of the scribes and Pharisees ye can in no wise enter into the Kingdom of Heaven."

Good works which being seen of men may cause them to glorify our Father in Heaven are morally beautiful as well as morally good. The very language of Jesus was kala erga, "beautiful works." Deeds thus becoming to a believer and inspired by love to God and man become as natural and common as breathing.

The surprises of "that day" will be in having recounted in our hearing countless beautiful works, radiant with comfort and love, of which the believer has no recollection because it had become second nature to do good to all men, especially to them of the household of faith. Equally surprising will be the command, "Depart from Me, ye workers of iniquity," given to those whose supposed good works were their passport to the skies, but whose righteousness was simply that of the Pharisees. Moses, the meekest of men, knew not that his face shone even when he had spent forty days and nights with God, but the beauty of the Lord God was upon him. It was what he was that made him God's spokesman to the nations, although, like Paul, he deemed himself "Less than the least of all saints," or with the Baptist, "I am not that Light, but am sent to bear witness of the Light."

Kansas City, Mo.

LORENZO DOW.

During pioneer days in East Tennessee, while protestant bodies were banding themselves together that they might organize churches and erect buildings in which to worship, and where the Baptist and Methodist clergy and officials were speaking with a great deal of certainty upon the subject of "falling from grace," Lorenzo Dow, a minister noted for wit as well as wisdom, gave out that he would preach on that subject at a certain time and place. The day came; the people were there irrespective of prejudices or rigid creeds. "We must hear Dow, no matter how." The hour had come; piercing eyes were bent that if possible they might catch a glimpse of him who would dispel the disappointment settling down upon them. Presently a whisper went the rounds—"He's coming; he's coming." Drawing his reins in the shade of a spreading oak, hitching his horse, the parson climbed into the tree, and swinging from a limb, cried, "Shall I fall! Shall I fall! Shall I fall! Presently some one remarked, "If you let go you will." "Yes," said Dow, "But I'm not going to let go." Climbing back, he got down into his saddle, announced his next appointment, pronounced the benediction, then quietly rode away.

More I can neither wish nor pray nor desire for you than Christ, singled and chosen out from all things, even though wearing a crown of thorns. I am sure the saints are at best but strangers to the might and worth of the incomparable excellence of Christ. We know not half of what we love when we love Christ.—Samuel Rutherford.

FOR THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

THE UNIVERSAL BROTHERHOOD OF DOUKHOBORS.

BY JOSEPH ELKINTON.

So much has appeared recently concerning these spirit-wrestlers of Russia—4,000 of whom are now on this continent—that it might seem unnecessary to offer anything about their past history, but as some readers of THE AMERICAN FRIEND may not be familiar with their rise and characteristics during the one hundred and fifty years or more of their existence as a sect, the few facts herewith submitted may be of interest.

GROUP OF DOUKHOBOR WOMEN AND CHILDREN, AT HALIFAX, SECOND MO. 17.

"Early in last century three Cossacks of the Don obtained a copy of the Scriptures, and from reading it came to the conviction that the doctrines and practices of the Greek Church did not represent those of the New Testament. They refused military service and their followers underwent persecution."—John Bellows, a Friend, of Gloucester, England, who visited them in 1893.

In 1816 Alexander I said: "All the measures of severity exhausted upon the spirit-wrestlers during the thirty years up to 1801 not only did not destroy this sect, but more and more multiplied the number of its adherents."

Nicholas I had less patience with them and had their colonies removed from the Crimea to the Trans-Caucasus, especially to parts southwest of Tiflis. This was in the years 1840 and 1850, and it was thought between the Turks and the climate their extinction would be the more rapid and certain; but during the last half century they have spent in the Wet Hills, continually subject to the cruel treatment of wild and warlike tribes, they have transformed that wilderness into flourishing colonies.

Being very thrifty, they accumulated considerable property, and, as has frequently happened, wealth proved a greater enemy than either the hillsmen or disease, and their moral force was somewhat abated, so that when universal military service was introduced in the Caucasus, in 1887, they submitted to it for a time, but presently, through the exhortations and faithfulness of some of their own community and the encouragement of Prince A. D. Hilkoff, who was banished to that country in 1892, they became more loyal to their ancient testimony against all war, and also renounced tobacco, wine, meat, and every kind of excess, dividing up all their property, and so supplying the needs of those who were then in want. In 1895 they burnt their firearms, which precipitated a general attack on the part of the government.

Four hundred families of these inoffensive peasants in one district were torn from their prosperous holdings, and after a forced sale for a mere trifle banished and separated among the Georgian villages; and so, abandoned to their fate, innumerable outrages followed, so that during the past three years 10,000 out of 20,000 have perished, and, as we know, about half of the survivors are now beyond the reach of Russian tyranny.

As to their faith. It consists primarily in the belief that the Spirit of God is present in the soul of man and directs him by its word within him. They lay stress upon the inward Christ, whose coming, teaching and sufferings is fulfilled in and through them by living out the gospel of divine love.

Worship in spirit cannot be dependent upon an outward organization, and so they discard all church forms and requirements.

"They pray inwardly at all times and assemble frequently for prayer-meetings, at which they read prayers and sing hymns or Psalms, as they call them, and greet each other fraternally with low bows, thereby acknowledging every man as a bearer of the Divine Spirit. Their teaching is founded on tradition. This is called among them 'The Book of Life,' because it lives in their memory and hearts. It consists of Psalms, partly formed out of the contents of the Old and New Testaments, partly composed independently."—"Christian Martyrdom in Russia," pp. 3, 4.

The hymn of gratitude sung upon arrival at Halifax, in which a thousand voices rang out the melody of their hearts upon sea and sky:

"Know all men, God is with us. He has carried us through.
We uplift our voices and sing His praises.
Let all people hear and join us in our praises of the Almighty.
They that planned our ruin did not succeed.
We never feared them, for God was with us and gave us strength.

Our Lord had strength to save us. Why should we fear?
They that put their trust in Him are never forsaken.
They that do not know Him now shall know Him hereafter.
The light shines in the darkness and will dispel it."

They confess their sins in prayer to the heavenly God, good and merciful, who forgives all our sins. If they sin against their brethren, they confess before all, and ask their brethren to forgive them. When a man has fallen he should immediately recover himself, ask God's forgiveness with a humbled heart, and with all his might strive not to fall again into a similar sin.

As to the communion, they partake at all times of the sacred, life-giving, eternal sacrament, in the forgiveness of their sins spiritually, through the inward acceptance of the Word of God, which is Christ; and such a communion, they say, penetrates the understanding of man, as it were, to the marrow of his bones. The communion of the body and blood of Christ in the form of bread and wine they do not accept, saying that bread and wine enter into the mouth like ordinary food, and are of no avail to the soul.

Concerning baptism, they say that they are baptized into the Word through the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit. This baptism takes place when a man repents with a pure and willing heart, and calls upon God, and then his sins are remitted and he turns to God and not to the world. This is the only baptism for the remission of sins which they profess.

Their industrious, abstemious manner of living has made them a remarkably robust looking people. Many of the men are six feet six inches in height and well proportioned.

They are distinctly "a peculiar people"—in living apart from the popular vices and amusements of the vast majority of their fellow-men. Their cleanliness and courtesy among themselves and to all is proverbial.

They are perhaps the most striking illustration of what the apostles intended to introduce into the world of believers when each sold his possessions and distributed the proceeds among their fellows. Their educational advantages have been meagre, so comparatively few can read or write, but another generation, under Canadian freedom and schooling, will doubtless be better educated.

The New Testament in Russian and Greek is being distributed among them by those who have taken the most active interest in their coming to America.

Their response to the welcome extended to them by Friends was most cordial, and somewhat on this wise: "We thank Christ and your brethren for sending you to greet us." A conference with forty of their leading men in the cabin of the "Lake Superior" en route from Halifax to St. John, gave them opportunity to ask many questions about our Society, and the reverent spiritual character of their remarks was very gratifying. While no "ordained" or "acknowledged" ministry obtains among them, both men and women speak in their assemblies and under the influence of the Spirit of Truth.

The severe test of their principles during the last decade has doubtless strengthened the best life among them, and any one who will come into sympathetic touch with them will be well assured of their genuine Christian faith and devotion.

The un-Christian conduct of the "Orthodox" Greek Church has driven these disciples of Jesus Christ to an extreme, but with the opportunity to learn and see the blessing of the Saviour coming outwardly as well as inwardly in the lives of those who illustrate His teachings, we believe there will be no hesitation on their part in recognizing and accepting in its entirety the gospel of love, peace and salvation.

GROUP OF DOUKHOBOR WOMEN, AT HALIFAX, SECOND MO. 17.
GATHERING SNOW (WATER WAS SCARCE).

One word as to their Society and domestic discipline. No officers are appointed to rule in their community, neither are there any written regulations, and yet order prevails to an extent rarely equalled.

Marriage, while not regarded as sacred, is kept inviolate, and performed without ceremony. The education of the children is provided for by a simple and uniform system of instructing them in their religious tenets and such trades as are practiced among them. The spirit of the parent, together with his way of thinking, soon passes into the rising generation and is strongly encouraged by good example. The father cares for the needs of his family, watches the conduct of his children, corrects their faults and teaches them the law of God, and in the event of his death the older brother takes his place.—Vladimir Schertkoff, in "Christian Martyrdom in Russia."

"Each one, when considering any question, is guided exclusively by his own spiritual understanding. That is why they are so energetic, joyful and free. Their conduct is looked upon by them only as the outward manifestation, as the result of continual inward spiritual force. . . . Therefore there are no vain actions, as nobody will praise them; there are no actions from fear of censure on the part of the brethren, as no one will blame them; there are no actions out of blind submission to the majority, as none either expects or demands anything from another."

If this description shall hold good, there appears on earth one illustration of the saying, "If the truth make you free, ye shall be free indeed." And now the word seems going forth for them: "As for thee also, because of the blood of thy covenant. I have sent forth thy prisoners out of the pit wherein there is no water. Turn you to the stronghold, ye prison-

SELF-CONTROL.

To see his life as he might make it, man must go up alone into the mountains of spiritual thought as Christ went alone into the Garden, leaving the world to get strength to live in the world. He must there breathe the fresh, pure air of recognition of his divine importance as an individual, and with mind purified and tingling with new strength approach the problems of his daily living.

Man needs less of the "I am a feeble worm of the dust" idea in his theology, and more of the conception "I am a great human soul with marvelous posers of hope." May neither Cyprus nor America spoil them of their simplicity, as worldly success and maxims have given degeneracy to another once spiritual people, of whom we might say, Quakerism made their wealth, and their wealth unmade their Quakerism, or that of their posterity. The worldliness of mammon will continue to do this, save where we hearken unto the Lord, both in all other things and in His saying, "Make to yourselves friends by means of the mammon of righteousness, that when it shall fail, they may receive you into the eternal tabernacles."

The purest lives I have known have not been those carefully screened from the world, but which, coming up in it, have kept themselves unspotted. The sweetest and truest have grown and ripened under conditions, you would say, most hostile, but which have been wrought into the means of a grandly elevated faith and life.—J. F. W. Ware.

sibilities" as a vital element in his daily, working religion. With this broadening, stimulating view of life, he sees how he may attain his kingship through self-control. And the self-control that is seen in the most spectacular instances in history, and in the simplest phases of daily life is precisely the same in kind and quality, differing only in degree. This control man can attain, if he will; it is but a matter of paying the price.

The power of self-control is one of the great qualities that differentiates man from the lower animals.

Every step in the progress of the world has been a new "control." It has been escaping from the tyranny of a fact, to the understanding and mastery of that fact. For ages man looked in terror at the lightning flash; to-day he has begun to understand it as electricity—a force he has mastered and made his slave. The million phases of electrical invention are but manifestations of our control over a great force. But the greatest of all "control" is self-control.—

FRIENDS' WORK IN MANITOBA.

The writer of the following letter is a valued minister of Canada Yearly Meeting, well known to many Friends, who will be interested in hearing of her work.

During the past few years many members of Canada Yearly Meeting moved from the older settled Province of Ontario to make homes for themselves and families in our great Northwest Territory.

This isolated position, scattered over the prairie Province of Manitoba, away from fellowship with those of like faith, brought the Yearly Meeting into close sympathy with them. Way did not open to extend much help till the summer of 1897, when William I. Moore, chairman of the Home Mission Committee, spent two months visiting and holding meetings among the Friends in Manitoba. Alma G. Dale went later, their visits encouraging our members to retain their membership among Friends.

As a result of this visit, Alma G. Dale removed from her home in Ontario, Fourth month, 1898, settling at Hartney, Manitoba, devoting her time entirely to the Lord's work in that land in the interests of the Friends' Church. In entering upon this service our sister had the full unity of the Home Mission Committee, which pledged her support in the work.

The Yearly Meeting of 1898 endorsed their action and granted her liberty to establish monthly meetings as she saw best in the interests of the Friends.

H. A. DALE,
Home Mission Secretary,
Canada Yearly Meeting.

"Hartney, Manitoba, First month 20th, 1899.

"To the Friends of Canada Yearly Meeting: —

"Dear Friends:—Grace, Mercy and Peace from God our Father and Jesus Christ our Lord be with you all.

Since writing my last quarterly letter to you the Lord has encouraged my heart and strengthened my courage and faith. It is not all sunshine in the Lord's work even in Manitoba, with its days of brightness and clear blue skies. One must be here for a time to appreciate this beautiful climate. The very air we breathe puts life and courage into the heart as well as the body. The last letter was written on a lovely fall day and the doors and windows were all open to let in the cool air. Now all that is changed. We shut close to the door, put a rug up close to the bottom, and sit with our feet up on the lounge or stove to keep them warm. In our room—for we are forced to live in one room now—we have a huge coal stove which throws out a great heat, but it is scarcely perceptible in the room. On the floor we have a thick oilcloth, and over that a heavy carpet, and yet it is almost impossible to put our feet on the floor, it is so cold. Everything freezes up at night. Nothing but a furnace will keep the floors warm in this country. Through all this our hearts go up to God in glad rejoicing and songs of thanksgiving, because He has kept us in health and given strength to do the work which lies all around our door.

"Shortly after writing my last letter, I drove out to visit families in the neighborhood of Chain Lakes, where our meetings are held. About noon I drove up to the door of a small house and was invited to stay for dinner. I might say here, that you are always sure of an invitation to stay for dinner at any place in Manitoba if you are there at dinner hour. A more generous people cannot be found outside this province. After dinner the lady of the house said she had long wanted to talk with me about my visit to this country in Ninth month, 1897. Before that time Sabbath at their house was the day they took to do the odd jobs that were left undone through press of work during the week. In 1897 they came to a meeting I held in Chain Lake schoolhouse, and heard me speak from the words, 'Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy.' 'Now,' said she, 'all that is changed, and thanks to that sermon, backed by the Holy Spirit, we endeavor to keep the day holy unto God and to His service.' I need not try to tell you, dear friends, how my heart and lips thanked God for that visible result of my visit. At times I have feared that the results of that visit would not equal the outlay of time and money. One soweth and another reapeth, but God granted me both the sowing and the reaping. To Him be all the glory.

"In Eleventh month I visited Carberry and was entertained by George Rogers, who is the son of Stephen Rogers, of Newmarket Meeting. Here I found some fruit of the trip taken in Ninth month, 1897. I went from there to Douglass. Here I found what should have been a strong settlement of Friends. James Muir and his dear wife (since gone to her reward) came to the province in 1880 or 1881. Their first act, after being settled in their home, was to gather in the children and hold a Bible School. This was carried on for some time, and then a Methodist minister came and held meetings there, and eventually all our people joined that church. We have been too slow in looking after our people in the past. I trust it is not wrong for me to say I covet these people for our Society. I cannot tell the exact number of Friends at this point, but there are sufficient to have had a good meeting.

"In Twelfth month we had a very successful entertainment in connection with our school, which is a Union school.

"During one of my house to house visiting trips, I came to the home of a dear old couple by the name of Moore. During the warm weather these people were regular attendants at our meetings. Now the cold weather has come they are housed in for the winter. After an hour's talk on the things of God, and after a time of sweet communion with the old people, I read a chapter and prayed. When we rose from our knees I noticed the daughter's eyes were filled with tears. While waiting for my horses to be hitched, I asked her if she loved Jesus and was serving Him. With a choking voice she said, 'No, but I want to do so.' I pointed her to the Lamb of God and had the joy of seeing her trusting in Christ before I left the home. My next three visits were to homes where the inmates do not attend any place of worship. The mothers are shut in from the middle of October until the middle of April. The little children would not come near me, as they are unused to seeing a woman in their homes. To these hungry hearts God helped me to break the bread of life, and in every case the prayer was, 'Come again soon; oh, do come soon.'

"Hurrying home from one of these visits, I noticed a shanty across the prairie and said to myself, 'Next time I must visit that home.' The Holy Spirit said, 'Do it now.' The sun was rapidly sinking in the west, and I was a mile away from the shanty and eight miles from home, but I turned the heads of the horses and drove up to the door. A lad came and held the horses for me, and as I went up to the door the woman opened it and said, 'Come in; I am so glad to see you; all day I have been wanting some one to pray with me.' Fifteen minutes in that home comforted that poor woman who had lost her only little girl a few months before. And in the darkness, as I drove home, I felt that God was guiding my faithful team in the right trail. It is so easy to lose one's way here, for in the fall there are tracks crossing and recrossing each other in every direction. There are many such homes in this land, and reading matter is very scarce. One Friend, Martha Walker, of Beaconsfield, has sent me two packages of tracts, which are very acceptable to the people. If I had such papers as "Zion's Watchman" and "Gospel News," I could place them to good advantage.

"On First-day 8th, I hitched my team, and, in the face of a strong wind, and with the glass showing 35 degrees below zero, I started for meeting. The house was very cold when I got there—ten at meeting. In the afternoon I drove seven miles—thirteen out. Home another seven miles and thirty out. By the time I had attended to my horses for the night, I had to confess I was tired, and that is something I am unwilling to confess.

"On the first Third-day of this month eleven Friends met at my house to talk over the advisability of establishing a Monthly Meeting. We first had an hour for worship. It was a solemn time to all present. We waited in silence upon God, which, after fifteen minutes, was broken by vocal prayer. Then our dear friend, Henry James, preached a powerful sermon on 'Abiding in Christ,' founding his remarks on the fifteenth chapter of John. To all present it was a time of precious memories. Our thoughts went back to the monthly meetings in the old home places, and the tears overflowed our eyes. I would say to the Friends at home, be faithful in attendance upon your meetings. The time will come when, situated far from them, as we are, you will look back with longing looks upon the past neglected duties and wish for the privileges so often lightly thought of.

"After looking at the difficulties and the reasons for encouragement, we were united in heart and judgment and proceeded to establish a monthly meeting by reading the yearly meeting minute, No. 29, signed by John R. Harris. We next appointed a clerk for the day, and committees to bring forward names to fill the different positions in the monthly meeting. Pray for us, all ye who read this letter. Now, what we need and must have, if we are to maintain our foothold here, is a meeting-house. The schoolhouse is seated with very small desks, and grown people cannot sit in them with any degree of comfort. It is too small, in warm weather, to hold the people, and in visiting I have found several who attended for a few times and had ceased coming when they could not get inside. Others sat under the windows which were open. The building, in the winter, is not warm enough to sit in. Very often we find it below the freezing point. Friends in their warm meeting-houses should not forget to thank God for them. Think of us here, and come to our help in this matter. Ask God what you can do to help us.

"I would like to write more, but my letter is already too long and I must not trespass on your time any further. I would like to hear from all of the meetings—a few lines. I have had but one communication which has spoken of the Quarterly letter and thanking God for our work and faith here. Send a line, Friends. A word of encouragement to Friends here would be appreciated.

"In the love of the Gospel,
"ALMA G. DALE."

LIFE.

Oh, Life!—mysterious thing—
The slender thread that binds
To earth—and yet again to heaven,
Canst thou reveal thy source?
"I am the gift of God," it said,
"And Christ has come, that thou might Know the better way, the rich,
Abundant life,—and Christ Himself
Is everlasting life."

A THOUGHT FOR THE HOUR.

In all spheres of life—the political, the social and the ecclesiastical alike—our prominent questions are not those of individualism, but of socialism in the true sense of the word. Society is contemplated in its corporate life; in its rights over the individual; in the great eternal principles which it truly embodies and partially represents; and, moreover, this contemplation has a breadth of scope which refuses to be confined within the limits of family, or nation, or age. Humanity itself, both historically and philosophically, is only the highest element in the order of the universe, which is itself bound together in a unity of unbroken connection and continuous. It is asked, What has Christianity to declare as a Gospel to society at large and as a key to the mysterious relation of humanity with creation, and so with Him who created it?.....We need a real and living unity; but it must be such as will preserve the equally sacred individuality of freedom.....the unity of all with God in the Lord Jesus Christ.—Bishop Ellicott.

Lesson XIII.

Third month 26, 1899

REVIEW.

GOLDEN TEXT.—My sheep hear my voice, and I know them, and they follow me.—John 10: 27.

DAILY READINGS.

Second-day, Third mo. 20.—Christ, the True Light. John 1: 1-14.
 Third-day, Third mo. 21.—Christ's First Disciples. John 1: 35-46.
 Fourth-day, Third mo. 22.—Christ and Nicodemus. John 3: 1-16.
 Fifth-day, Third mo. 23.—Christ at Jacob's Well. John 4: 5-15.
 Sixth-day, Third mo. 24.—The Nobleman's Son Healed. John 4: 43-54.
 Seventh-day, Third mo. 25.—Christ's Divine Authority. John 5: 17-27.
 First-day, Third mo. 26.—Christ Freeing from Sin. John 8: 12, 31-36.

The lessons of the past quarter have been remarkably full of practical and spiritual teaching. The whole Gospel of John seems peculiarly adapted to the needs of the nineteenth century. In this age of investigation and of overturning, of criticism and doubt, one can turn to the Gospel of John and find comfort, encouragement and strength in its treatment and presentation of the eternal verities of God.

Without circumlocution and without hesitation, John takes us directly to the beginning of all things, and pictures to us in language simple, yet full of meaning, the life and teachings of Jesus Christ. "These things are written," he says, "that ye may believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God; and that believing ye may have life in his name." Whatever else the Gospels may teach; whatever of history or customs, or biography, or church order, or doctrine, they may set forth, their primary object is to reveal Jesus Christ as the Saviour, the life giver, the revealer of God as our Heavenly Father, full of love and compassion.

A review of the lessons in John shows us God revealing himself in the word—the Logos—Christ. Through Him we know God, and through Him God speaks to us in a way which we can understand. "The word became flesh and dwelt among us." God expressed himself in terms of humanity.

Christ called men around Him who should tell others what they had known and experienced of the truth in Him. He would have all believers bring others to Him and see for themselves what Christ is. "Behold the Lamb of God."

Devotion to Christ does not mean giving up human ties and affections, or home life or civic duties. Christ blessed by His presence the wedding feast and supplied the need of the entertainers.

To the learned Jew, the teacher of Israel, Christ showed that new birth from above is essential, that new life was within the grasp of every one, the only condition being faith—belief. "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him should not perish, but have eternal life." In the cure of the nobleman's son we are taught to use the faith we have; that though our faith may be weak, it will grow by using; that the only way to get strong faith is to use the faith we have.

The Father hath committed authority to the Son, and so close is the relationship between them that the Son cannot think or act contrary to the Father's will. All men should "honor the Son, even as they honor the Father."

The compassion of Jesus leads Him to feed the multitude by a miracle. He might have fed them by a word, but He used the few common loaves and fishes and employed His disciples as agents. So today He would have believers use those means which are at hand, and themselves act as God's personal agents. It is not the loaves and fishes; it is not the instruments that are to be the test of possible efficient work, but the high faith which fails not, and above all, power of God. It is part of God's wisdom and loving kindness that He should make man a co-worker with Him. Jesus provided the food, but He left it to the disciples to gather the fragments. God provides food, but man must eat in order to get any benefit.

The thirst—the longing of the soul, which is the experience of all at some time in life—cannot be satisfied with anything short of that which is spiritual.

Christ says: "If any man thirst, let him come unto me and drink." Christ is the source of spiritual life and power; faith in Christ is the condition of spiritual power; believers in Christ should be channels of spiritual power.

As long as men keep committing sin they are the bond-servants of sin. "Know ye not his servants ye are, to whom ye yield yourselves servants to obey?"

The true test of discipleship is abiding. The promise is discipleship; the condition is living, working, following Christ. The result is knowledge of the truth, and being set free from the guilt and bondage of sin. True freedom comes through the Son, and when He makes us free, we are indeed (essentially, absolutely) free.

In the healing of the blind man we see not only Christ's compassion exercised upon one who had no hope of recovery, but His use of external means for the sake of the sufferer. We are taught also his power to hold that which is incurable—sin; as the blind man could say, "One thing I know, so the forgiven sinner may know, even though he cannot explain the fact, that the Son of Man hath power to forgive sins.

Christ is not only the word, the great Teacher, the compassionate, powerful Saviour, but He is the Good Shepherd that knows His sheep and is known of them. He putteth forth His sheep. He goeth before them and leadeth them in the paths of righteousness. All the way through He is a perfect Saviour.

The purest lives I have known have not been those carefully screened from the world, but which, coming up in it, have kept themselves unspotted. The sweetest and truest have grown and ripened under conditions, you would say, most hostile, but which have been wrought into the means of a grandly elevated faith and life.—J. F. W. Ware.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC FOR THIRD MONTH 26th, 1899.

TRUE PENITENCE.

2 Cor. 7: 1-11.

Second-day, Third mo. 20.—Saul's penitence. 1 Sam. 15: 24-31.

Third-day, Third mo. 21.—Israel's penitence. Ps. 78: 34-43.

Fourth-day, Third mo. 22.—Judas's penitence. Matt. 27: 3-10.

Fifth-day, Third mo. 23.—David's penitence. Ps. 51: 1-17.

Sixth-day, Third mo. 24.—The prodigal's penitence. Luke 15: 17-24.

Seventh-day, Third mo. 25.—Peter's penitence. Matt. 26: 69-75.

In Paul's first letter to the church at Corinth he had found it necessary to sharply rebuke them for flagrant sin on the part of one of their members, in which all had become involved because of their failure to administer the necessary discipline. He sternly commanded them in the name of the Lord Jesus to cast the offender out of the church lest the whole lump should be leavened with evil. In our lesson for this week we have Paul's equally earnest commendation of this church for their godly zeal in obeying his directions, and incidentally a definition of penitence is given that forms the subject of the lesson.

What is godly sorrow? It is sorrow according to God. God sees sin, not in its consequences merely, but in itself, a thing infinitely evil, even if the consequences were happiness to the guilty instead of misery. There is no true penitence for sin until we hate it as a loathsome thing in itself. It is, of course, needful to see it as a vice—that is, as an evil against ourselves; also as a crime—that is, as an evil against society, but true repentance brings us to say, "Against thee, thee only, have I sinned, and done that which is evil in thy sight."

Remorse is not repentance. Remorse may bring us to consider how we have robbed ourselves; it is a bitter wail; it is conscience lashing a perverse will; it is bitter tears falling in a parched desert; it is the wrathful muttering of a lion against his prison bars; it tends to moral and sometimes physical death: it is a sorrow that worketh death, but all this is not penitence. Judas was filled with remorse and hanged himself. Peter wept tears of penitence and was restored to Christ's favor.

The original, simple meaning of repentance was, a change of mind. To a Greek it always meant some kind of a conversion—that is, a change of mind, purpose, or attitude. The nature of the change would be indicated by the connection in which the word was used. In a Christian sense it was readily understood to mean such a change in one's habits of thought, feeling, and conduct as constituted a necessary preparation for the heartfelt reception of Christ as both Saviour and Lord.

Paul's method of dealing with this offender is a lesson for all ages. He made him undergo public shame and humiliation. Thus only could the lesson be learned that would never be forgotten. Thus only could a higher standard be set up for the Corinthian Church and the purity and dignity of the Christian life be maintained. Painful as it was, Paul had courage to go through with it. We may consider from this that it is a misfortune to escape detection. Undetected and unjudged sin is a soil out of which fresh sins will grow. Better the shame and pain of public condemnation, confession and judgment, than the danger of repeated failure. Shame and sorrow do their work for God. Concealment only blights the soul. It may leave the guilty with his gifts, and forms of godliness, but the power of his spiritual life is gone.

True penitence carries us far beyond comparisons with others, save this, that of all "I am chief." Sin is a broken relation between us and God. No considerations of others can have anything to do with restoring that relation. Only a Pharisee could say, "I thank God I am not as other men are." A true penitent says, "God be merciful to me a sinner." A small sense of sin brings a little love for him who forgives.

There is no other ancient literature like that of the Hebrews in its definitions of sin. Its law provided no forgiveness or atoning sacrifice for willful, presumptuous sin. For all hasty, impulsive, careless or ignorant transgressions an elaborate ritual was provided—all of a nature to deepen the sense of guilt, cause full confession by the guilty, and clearing of the congregation of all defilement by the sin of the one or the many. It was not left to mere consequences of sin to teach a man that sin was hateful to God. He must also learn it by sacrifice, and in the death of his sacrificial victim see his own deserved death. So Jesus Christ on the cross reveals to us the deadly character of sin as no natural consequences can do. At the foot of the cross learn the lesson of true penitence.

WILMINGTON Y. M. C. E. UNION.

The reports received from the Quarterly Meeting Superintendents, after the second Quarterly Conventions, shows this Union to have a membership of 1,087 an increase of 38 during the quarter. At the convention in Fairfield Quarterly Meeting, Emma S. Townsend made a most excellent address on "The Riches of God's Kingdom." Samuel Beck, of England, who for several weeks has been visiting in this Yearly Meeting, was also present and gave a very profitable talk. $151.96 have been raised this quarter.

As a Union the Endeavorers have not contributed any money to Foreign Missions, but this year they are endeavoring to raise $150 to aid the Yearly Meeting in the support of Martha Hadley, an active member of the Christian Endeavor Society at Wilmington, who, by the joint action of the Y. M. F. M. Committee and the Woman's Board of Foreign Missions, will be sent to Alaska soon to work in the Mission that is under the control of California Yearly Meeting.

Christian Endeavor Day was observed in the Sabina Society by M. C. Pearson, pastor of the church, delivering a brief, but instructive address on Christian Endeavor work, instead of his regular Sunday evening discourse. He told something of the origin of the movement, and traced the wonderful work it has accomplished up to the present day. He spoke of the different departments of the Society, dwelling at some length upon the Sabbath Day of observance and the Good Citizenship movement; how active Endeavorers of our own denomination have been in the promotion of this part of the work.

The Christian Endeavorers at Friendsville, Tenn., are certainly loyal to the cause, for discouragement came to them in the removal of several of their active members from their midst, and their meetings were losing interest and largely decreasing in attendance, when they were offered a better house in which to hold their meetings, and more pleasant surroundings, if they would drop the name "Christian Endeavor." But the earnest, loyal workers met and decided to reorganize and try again. Since that time their meetings are increasing in interest, and conspicuously their Christian Endeavor banner bends in benediction over their little prayer circle. MYRTLE S. LIGHTNER.

A TRIBUTE TO FRANCES E. WILLARD.

BY ESTHER TUTTLE PRITHOCHARD.

John Burroughs suggests that if we could play the same tricks upon nature in the human species that the nurseryman does upon trees when he grafts them, the world would be stocked with Newtons and Shakespeares. Had he been writing on this anniversary of our great bereavement, I think he might have added the name of Frances E. Willard, since she, beyond any woman of her time, has filled the century's ideal of a noble womanhood. But there will never be another Frances Willard, for God makes no duplicates. His providential leaders are each fashioned by a fresh design suited to the era and the moral crisis to which they come. She whose memory we delight to honor was not the product of the age in the sense that the century's civilization made her, but she came to her sphere by divine appointment, the ordained propheticness of a great cause—called to show our nation the guilt of its darkest sin and the church of Christ its complicity with it.

It was in her twenty-third year that the death of her sister Mary awakened her to serious thoughtfulness. That sister's dying message—"Tell everybody to be good"—wrought itself into the aims of her opening womanhood and turned her face toward God; but it was not until she lay on a bed of pain in a crisis of typhoid fever, with death staring her in the face, that she really gave her heart to Christ. When He raised her up from that illness it was to lead her out into an ever-widening field to eventually take the foremost place among women reformers. Her life work brought with it opposition and criticism, but it brought also a joy of comradeship with noble souls that compensated for it all. "I give up much," she said, "in literature and art and things I love that seemed so necessary once, but now I think there will be time enough in heaven. The world is waiting; souls must be redeemed."

Some ten years or more ago there came to her a great deepening of her spiritual life, in which she was given to see she had not yet fully learned the lesson of self-effacement; and I think she never did a nobler thing than when, in her annual address, she confessed how strong had been the subtle spell of selfhood, and testified that Jesus had led her to desire such absorption of her self-centred spirit into the Spirit of God, that instead of standing out so plainly in the thought of those with whom she was rejoiced to work, her disappearance might be so complete that they should say, "She was not, for God took her." Thus it was that the Master bestowed upon her the grace of true humility and afresh anointed her with "His odorous oil" to be a priestess of humanity.

For more than a quarter of a century her now silent voice has spoken, first for "God and home and native land," and then for "God and home and every land." In her ceaseless activity she has burned life's candle at both ends. Flying, like a shuttle, from east to west, and from north to south, crossing and recrossing our great continent again and again, writing books and letters and articles for the public press on the trains as she traveled, and lecturing at night in cities and towns, the amount of her authorship and of her work, including her official burdens and labors in Great Britain, was simply immense.

At the front of the world's toilers there are both drivers and leaders; the drivers, by aggressive force, goad on their workers with whip and spur, but the true leader draws his constituency after him by cords of love, and inspires them to do their best by his own noble personality. Such, to a marked degree, was Frances E. Willard. Of her it could with emphasis be said, "Thy gentleness hath made thee great." It doesn't take much ability to be a church or party scold, denouncing everybody who does not see with us, but it takes real greatness to lead the van far in advance of the age, and be generous and patient toward all, keeping a single eye, a steady step and a tender heart.

Frances Willard was superior to all meanness. Ambitious she doubtless was, as perhaps all great natures are, but it was of the most harmless sort—the ambition to be the best-loved woman in the world. I have never known her to do an unworthy act toward any woman. She plotted against no one in order to elevate herself. Marching at the head of our white-ribbon column, under the banner of total prohibition of the liquor traffic, equal suffrage, and a "white life for two," she had to encounter a formidable amount of opposition, but she never uttered an unwomanly tirade, or denounced either parties or party leaders. She denounced error and plead for truth, and called out to her "big brothers," as she was wont to say, to "Come on!" To every climber up the mountain side, however far below her, she extended a sister's hand, rejoiced in the ground already won, and bade him come up higher. She strongly believed in what she termed the "gospel of commendation," but while she was generous she was absolutely uncompromising. Not for an instant did her stand waver. Truer or more dauntless leader never bore a banner. As was said, a year ago, in the public press, "There was no temporizing, no beating about the bush. All was fearless and in the direct line."

As a general rule, Miss Willard avoided needless friction. Acting on the principle that "'Tis easier taking hold of hands," she utilized every point of contact to strengthen our forces. Personally, I have thought she carried this a trifle too far, so desirous was she of affiliating with organizations and leaders that she might mass them, at need, for the success of the cause. A fearless pioneer, she could blaze a path through any forest of difficulties to open the way for the exercise of special gifts. She could discern ability like a seer, cut a channel for it and turn it loose. It was hers to fashion the springs that set in motion many wheels, and to inaugurate beneficent agencies that will long live after her. Who but she could have brought Jennie Cassaday, the sainted founder of the Flower Mission, within touch, from her couch of suffering, with all the jails and penitentiaries of our land? British women questioned the wisdom of her "do everything" policy, but she sought to utilize the possibilities of our great organization to the limit of its capacity.

Her vantage ground enlarged as the years moved on until the circle of her influence well nigh included all lands. She cheered and encouraged the gifted Pundita, and so left the impress of her hand on the Poona work for Hindu widows. She touched the life of Lady Henry Somerset through "Nineteen Beautiful Years," her first book, and at length this titled woman became her friend and yokefellow for a blessed union of effort, and stricken Armenia felt their united touch of healing.

Frances Willard was womanliness all compact. Hers was a marvelous balance of heart and brain. Her quick sympathies responded to every call of suffering, and yet with the power of a statesman she grappled with the living issues of her time. How tenderly did she put her heart beside that of the workingman, and how impartially did she put her best thought into the problem of capital and labor.

She became an advocate of woman's suffrage, not because she was ambitious to figure in politics, but because she coveted for good women the right of franchise as a power for justice and morality. As an agitator of this question she was an example to be commended for the sweet reasonableness of her words and ways. Never did we hear her brand men as "tyrants." On the contrary, I hear her say, "Of all graceless sights this is the most graceless, the unseemly wrangle of a man against women, or of a woman against men." As a basal principle, she strongly maintained that the mind of man and the mind of woman are complimentary, and that the union of both is essential to the full-orbed thought of humanity on any question. But for the temperance cause she was driven to ask the privilege of suffrage by the logic of events. When the great prayer movement, known as the "Crusade," swept over the land, closing saloons and rescuing drunkards by the hundreds, it looked as though the hour of deliverance had come. But in time it was found that only five per cent. of the reclaimed inebriates stood—that while we met to pray the re-opened saloons, under the safeguards of law, were alluring our poor drunkards back again. She saw that, humanly speaking, the mightiest weapon in the hands of a sovereign people is the ballot, and, naturally enough, she and her fellow workers came to feel that women who bear sons have a right to be heard at the ballot box for a pure atmosphere in which to rear them; that reformers who spend and are spent for the salvation of the drunkard and the uplifting of the fallen, are entitled to use their moral power at the polls for the suppression of dens of vice and the closing of the saloon.

Giving her life, with all its energies, to the weal of humanity, we must concede that she was in the highest sense a patriot. The Chicago dailies are by no means reform journals, and yet one of them said, when she left us, "The homes of America have lost their best defender." How much she did, by her winsome power, to help heal the breach between the North and South! Said Mrs. Chapin, one of South Carolina's gifted daughters, "Your Grant and Sherman came down and captured our cities, but Miss Willard came and captured our hearts."

Again, I thank God that this woman, so brilliant and so cultured, who was welcomed as an honored guest in the first circles of England and America, was so loyal to the unworldly standards of her mother church. Writing in the third volume of "Friends' Missionary Advocate," of the leisure that is coming to women compared with the household toil of our pioneer mothers, she falls to wondering how we shall be occupied later on. "Shall it be in fashionable folly, the german, the ball, the progressive euchre party, the dreary sound of ceremonious calls and pitiable flirtation? Shall it be in the coldly intellectual pursuits of the elegant and classic club, or shall it be the earnest, helpful and blessed life of associated philanthropy?" These queries fall upon our hearts at this time, emphasized by a life that was redeemed to noblest ends—that of our uncrowned queen, who, beyond any daughter of a republic that ever lived, has been honored in her life and her death for her work's sake.

It was her lot to figure in the activities of a period that was rich with brilliant gifts, but it seems to me she scarcely had her peer among her eminent contemporaries. Among them all, two conspicuous figures press to the foreground for a comparative notice—Catherine Booth and Frances Ridley Havergal. They, with the subject of this sketch, may fairly be termed the towering trinity of the century's greatest women; each of them has made herself felt far beyond the limits of her mother tongue, and each of them was a preacher whose voice has reached the utmost limits of the Christian world; but, if I may be allowed to judge, neither Mrs. Booth nor Miss Havergeral had a mission so many-sided—one that called for such versatility of talent—as that of Miss Willard. As the cultured scholar, bearing from no mean university the degree of Doctor of Laws, the eminent teacher, author, lecturer, journalist, philanthropist and Christian reformer, she communicated herself helpfully through manifold channels to all conditions of life. She was the Wendell Phillips of the temperance reform, but much more. She was the silver trumpet through which the Spirit of God blew stirring blasts to arouse the conscience of more than one nation. Hers was a prophet's mission to pour such a flood of light upon the moral aspects of the liquor question as should leave her native land without excuse.

It is quite possible that the prohibition of the liquor traffic will never come, as she desired it might, by legislation, but we all know it ought to come that way. We had our prophets in slavery days—our Sumner, Whittier and Garrison—to rebuke, to warn and to plead; but their message was unheeded, and when the emancipation came it was as a war necessity. God grant that this question may not find its solution by similar means; but if it should be so, if God shall deal again in judgment with our land for a national sin, Frances E. Willard and her collaborators will be clear. Her witness was fully and faithfully borne, and none can doubt the verdict of heaven on such a life.

And then I think it has never been given to any woman to have had such a following, and by this I mean not merely in numbers, but in character. For when God called the women of Christendom to witness in His name against the criminality of the liquor traffic, it was the veterans that responded, the earnest women who could be counted upon for Christian work and the weekly prayer meeting—public-spirited women, who believed that we really are our brother's keeper. Long years have succeeded, but I believe that still the heart of the world's best and bravest womanhood beats beneath our white symbol.* These hundreds of thousands of white-ribboners have enshrined their leader and precious friend in their hearts' affections so fully and so widely that there is scarcely a spot of earth lighted by Christianity anywhere that has not held for her a sincere mourner.

Are any asking, What shall be Frances Willard's monument? I answer, it is already built. Marble and bronze are perishable beside it. It is a solid shaft whose foundations were laid by her gentle hand, in the lowest depths of sinful and suffering humanity and through stratum after stratum of society it has risen, touching life at every point to bless it, until at last its finished and polished apex shines in the clear light of God's "Well done."

* The Society of Friends has had from the first a large representation in this movement, and among the national officers, state presidents and national and world superintendents, are such names as Esther Pugh, Mary Woodbridge (virtually ours), Hannah W. Smith, Mary W. Thomas, Mary C. Woody, Margaret Hillis, Hannah J. Bailey and Mary Jane Weaver.

CHAS. TOWNSEND.

NEW ENGLAND YEARLY MEETING.

An interesting and profitable series of meetings has recently been held at South China, Maine, and a number of the young people were reached and helped. Perrine Reynolds and Belle Harrington were in attendance.

NEW YORK YEARLY MEETING.

A tea meeting was held in Twentieth Street Meeting-house, New York city, Third month 8th, which proved to be a very interesting and profitable occasion. The attendance was large and the spirit of good fellowship was very manifest. Rufus M. Jones addressed the meeting on the subject, "The Quaker Ideal and the Present Situation."

The Gospel was preached clearly, with unction and power. Thirteen were definitely blessed, some reclaimed, and others sanctified and filled with the Holy Ghost. Also an increased life and activity were visible in all who were in regular attendance among the members. Wm. J. Thornberry remained a few weeks in pastoral and evangelistic work here and at Hopewell.

KANSAS YEARLY MEETING.

Barclay Hampton, of Wichita, Kansas, has been appointed to solicit and receive contributions to build a Friends' House at Wichita. All desirous of helping build up a good stronghold of Quakerism at that point, where we now have the grand university donated by James M. Davis, with a flourishing school now in progress, will please send their contributions direct to Barclay Hampton at that place.

BARCLAY HAMPTON.

Tonganoxie, Kansas.—Springdale Quarterly Meeting was held at Stanwood, Second month 25th and 26th. Friends of that quarter were very glad to have with them Nathan Ridgeway, who has been in other fields of labor all winter. He preached very spiritual and helpful sermons. Springfield Quarterly Meeting is the oldest quarterly meeting of Friends in Kansas. Mary Jones, the present clerk, has been clerk for twenty years. The next meeting will be held at Tonganoxie.

OHIO YEARLY MEETING.

Centre, Ohio.—N. A. C. Leonard commenced a series of meetings here on Second month, 19th, 1899. She was joined on the 21st ult. by Deborah Lloyd, of Spring Valley, Ohio, who continued with us to the close. Our dear sisters were very faithful, coming through rain, snow and mud to attend, and with the aid of the Spirit and with great earnestness presented lovingly and efficiently the Gospel of Christ. The manifest presence of the Spirit was felt, and we who were enabled to attend were edified and built up in or most Holy Faith. Many testified to the blessings they received, and with a large audience of attentive listeners our meeting solemnly closed on Third month 5th, 1899.

Tecumseh, Mich.—Memorial services for David J. Lewis were held at the Friends' Meeting house in Tecumseh, Mich., on First-day morning, Second month 26th, 1899, his death having occurred at Long Beach, Cal., Second month 16th, where he went about a year ago on account of his failing health. He moved with his family to this place nearly eight years ago, and their home has been here nearly ever since, having retained their membership here.

He served as our pastor several years, but his gift in the ministry being more especially as an evangelist, he was often away for weeks at a time, even when his family was here.

The house was full, and many eyes were suffused with tears, for he was universally beloved. A very impressive sermon was preached by our present pastor, Lida G. Romick, from Rev., 14th chapter, 13th verse. Others followed, giving tributes to his memory as a minister of the Gospel and as a Christian man.

M. C. WOOD.

WESTERN YEARLY MEETING.

Demming, Ind.—A revival meeting lasting nearly two weeks, held at West Grove, Ind., has just closed. The meeting was conducted by Irena Jay, of Back Creek Meeting, Fairmount, Ind., and Maude Milner, of Fairfield Meeting, Leesburg, Ohio. The preaching was clear, convincing and with power, and conviction deepened until twenty-five persons were pleading for pardon, and others for the baptism of the Holy Spirit.

Our meetings have been increasing in life and power ever since our revival last winter, which was conducted by Charles D. W. Hiatt, of Fairmount, Ind., and John Shackleford, of Leesburg, Ohio. We believe our meeting has reaped a lasting benefit from the labors of these women of God.

Annapolis, Ill.—Miles and Diantha Martin, of Marshall, Ind., moved into the limits of Pleasant Grove Quarterly Meeting after yearly meeting, having served as pastors in West Union and Pleasant Grove meetings, these two preparatives constituting Pleasant Grove Monthly Meeting.

A series of meetings were held by Brother Martin and wife as follows: at West Union, commencing about Twelfth month 15th, 1898, and closing First month 5th, 1899. Number of sessions, 43, with some definite results.

At Pleasant Grove Meeting, a series of meetings commenced First month 7th and closed First month 29th, 1899, with encouraging results.

Pleasant Grove Quarterly Meeting was held Second month 24th and 25th, at Pleasant Grove Meeting-house. On account of much sickness and unclement weather there were no visiting delegates outside of Pleasant Grove Monthly Meeting. Our pastors, Miles Martin and wife and Abram Guyer, resident minister, did the preaching. As we came together on quarterly meeting day, the Lord did wonderfully pour out His Spirit upon the few who had been privileged to gather in His name. Sermons were preached, the bread and water of life were supplied to hungry souls, who gave evidence that they were abundantly satisfied. Request was granted for the establishment of a new monthly meeting to be known as the "West Union Monthly Meeting."

ADOLPHUS GUYER.

Second Month 19th, marks an era long to be remembered in the history of Blue River Monthly Meeting, Washington County, Ind., as it was the commencement of a blessed revival. The watchword in the beginning was, "Moses commanded the people to stand still and see the salvation of God," and "God said, speak unto the people that they go forward." The young people took it up and went forward, the membership working without any outside help. Willard O. Trueblood, Principal of the Blue River Academy, Edwin N. McMillan and Noble C. Trueblood were the principal workers. A pentecostal visitation came down on the entire community. Strong, hardened men wept and cried for mercy and received pardon, and little children as well. The school was not adjourned, but the scholars were so interested that, by permission of the teachers, many attended the sixteen sessions held.

There were between 35 and 40 conversions and renewals, 5 requests for membership with more to follow.

A mid-week prayer meeting was established and everybody seems full of thanksgiving and praise esteeming it a special blessing from the Divine hand.

SAMUEL TRUEBLOOD.

INDIANA YEARLY MEETING.

Winchester, Indiana.—We began a series of meetings at this place First month 22d, and continued until Second month 17th, holding two sessions a day. On the 23d and 24th of First month we had the presence and help of Mattie Commack, of Marion, Indiana. On the 25th Minnie Bassett, of Cleveland, Ohio, came to us and remained until the close of the services. She was enabled to deliver the Gospel message clearly and with much power, and God owned and blessed the work in large measure. Many were prevented from attending the meetings on account of the prevailing sickness in our midst, and others were kept away by the extreme cold weather, yet the interest kept up well and a good work was accomplished. There were about thirty-five persons professed definite blessing, being either converted or reclaimed. The work also proved a great strength and blessing to all Christian people who were able to attend the meetings, and some who did not come out fully on the Lord's side were brought to more thoughtful consideration of their need of Christ. Minnie Bassett remained with us to attend the quarterly meeting which was held Second month 17th and 18th. She was much favored in the ministry of the Word on Seventh day, and the power of the Lord came down upon us in a wonderful manner, so that indeed it was a time of refreshing from the presence of the Lord. Many testified that it was the most precious quarterly meeting they ever attended.

C. E. H.

Van Wert, Ohio.—The second revival meeting at Antioch chapel has just closed with most gratifying results. In the latter part of Twelfth month, Jonathan Jay, assisted by A. L. Everitt, held a sixteen day meeting with but little visible result.

Some weeks later he felt a clear and distinct call to hold more meetings, and he announced a meeting for the next night. The church rallied to his support, and inside of twelve days there were 22 conversions and renewals and 16 accessions to the church, and we believe others will follow. It was a meeting of great spiritual power. Its effects were felt and talked about for miles around. Many remarked that it was the most powerful meeting they had ever attended, especially the day meetings which were held at private houses in homes that needed salvation. The result was that quite a number of parents between 35 and 50 years of age were saved. The church has been greatly revived and strengthened. We shall organize a C. E. Society in the near future.

PHILADELPHIA YEARLY MEETING.

A joint debate between the Philomathean Society of the University of Pennsylvania and the Logonian Society of Haverford College was held in Alumni Hall, at Haverford, on the evening of the 10th. Ex-Governor R. E. Pattison presided over the discussion. The question for debate was: "Resolved, That except in cases involving capital punishment, the rule requiring unanimity in the jury system prevailing in the United States should be changed." The Logonian defended the negative. Three members from each institution spoke for their respective sides. The decision was given in favor of Haverford.

IOWA YEARLY MEETING.

Charles Stalker has been holding meetings in the new meeting-house in Denver, Col., with good results.

The meeting at Wright, Iowa, is growing in membership and general interest. Truman C. Kenworthy is pastor. His work in the neighborhood of Cedar, three miles south of Wright, is also being greatly blessed. They have money secured for a new meeting-house that will be built in the early spring.

The work at Central City is growing in interest and gives promise of resulting in the establishment of a church in the near future.

Daniel H. Martin is quite feeble, being confined to the house and most of the time to his bed. He is 78 years old and has been engaged in the ministry about 50 years.

The Friends of New Providence are planning to build a new meeting-house this summer.

The Muscatine meeting is increasing in attendance and interest.

Wm. Penn Angell has moved from Minneapolis, where he has served as pastor for seven years, to Muncie, Ind.

Motor, Iowa.—The meetings held at Motor, conducted by Edwin Loft and wife, continued three weeks. Thirty-six souls were converted, renewed or sanctified; 16 united with Friends. Brother Loft went from here to Ills. Grove, Honey Creek Quarter, where he held meetings one week. Several souls were blessed in the meeting. He is now holding a meeting at Albia, Iowa, where the Lord is blessing his labors. In four days no less than 26 souls have been reached.

Ackworth, Iowa.—Ackworth Quarterly Meeting was held here at Ackworth on the 17th, 18th and 19th of Second month, commencing with meeting of ministry and oversight on the 17th. On the 18th, the quarterly meeting for business was held. This meeting was the largest we have had in this month for several years. On First day, our large room was well filled; it was all from the revival spirit that is prevailing in our different meetings. We had the company of Evi Sharpless, from Salem County, Alvin Coppock, of Oklahoma Territory, and B. B. Hiatt, of Nebraska, who were all enabled to preach the gospel with power.

We had also, with those above mentioned, our home ministers—Levi Marshall, pastor of Ackworth and Motor Meetings, Joseph Sophor, pastor of Indianola Meeting.

STEPHEN MOSHER.

On Second month 27th, White's Indiana Manual Labor Institute, under the direction of Indiana Yearly Meeting of Friends, and situated near Wabash, Ind., was visited by a disastrous fire, the result of which is a total loss of the large brick administration building, which includes the Girls' Home, sewing room, dining rooms, kitchen, pantries, laundry and cellars. Also the wood house, carriage house, smoke house and large work shop were burned. The origin of the fire will remain unknown. When the last call was made for dinner, an examination was made in the laundry to see that all was safe, and just before leaving the dining rooms dense smoke was seen issuing from every opening and crevice of the laundry and chimney thereof. The children, sixty-five in number, marched out in order. A few minutes were spent to see if there was any opportunity to check the fire. It was soon discovered that was useless, as it was spreading so rapidly. All hands began moving contents of building, and succeeded in saving most of the clothing, beds and bedding, furniture, records, and important papers.

The loss includes the winter's supply of provisions grown on the farm of 760 acres, among the lot being 250 bushels Irish potatoes, 100 bushels sweet potatoes, 15 bushels beans, 150 bushels beets, 400 quarts canned goods, turnips, etc. Also a lot of groceries, contents of dining rooms, kitchen, pantries, laundry, milk cellar, and a few rooms in the girls' hall.

The Boys' dormitory, a two-story frame building, was badly blistered and scorched by the heat, but not seriously damaged.

Before night the beds and bedding were arranged in the spacious chapel, being the upper story of the brick school building, and the superintendent and matron, three lady helpers and twenty-one girls were comfortably lodged, where they will remain until other provision is made. One school room is excellent for kitchen and the other for dining room. The basements serve for laundry, milk and provisions. We are still a thankful people.

The loss on buildings is about $15,000; on contents, $1,500; insurance on same to amount of $8,000. It is the intention to rebuild on a modern plan as early as practicable. We are still receiving children, and the work will not be hindered. Our numbers are now 72.

LEVI BINFORD, Superintendent.

LOVE.

Love itself can never be defined. Light is a something more than the sum of its ingredients—a glowing, dazzling, tremulous ether. And love is something more than all its elements—a palpitating, quivering, sensitive, living thing. By synthesis of all the colors men can make whiteness: they cannot make light. By synthesis of all the virtues men can make virtue; they cannot make love. How then are we to have this transcendent living whole conveyed into our souls? We brace our wills to secure it. We try to copy those who have it. We lay down rules about it. We watch. We pray. Love is an effect. And only as we fulfill the right condition can we have the effect produced. Shall I tell you what the cause is?

If you turn to the Revised Version of the first epistle of John you will find these words, "We love because He first loved us," "We love," not "we love Him." This is the way the old version has it, and it is quite wrong. "We love because He first loved us." Look at that word "because." It is the cause of which I have spoken. "Because He first loved us." The effect follows that we love; we love Him, we love all men. We cannot help it. Because He loved us we love everybody. Our heart is slowly changed. Contemplate the love of Christ's character, and you will love. Stand before the mirror, reflect Christ's character, and you will be changed into the same image, from tenderness to tenderness. There is no other way. You cannot love to order. You can only look at the lovely object, and fall in love with it, and grow into likeness to it. And so look at this perfect character, this perfect life. Look at the great sacrifice as He laid down Himself, all through His life and upon the cross of Calvary, and you must love Him. And loving Him you must become like Him. Love begets love. It is a process of induction. Put a piece of iron in the presence of an electrified body, and that piece of iron for the time becomes electrified. It is changed into a temporary magnet in the mere presence of a permanent magnet, and as long as you leave the two side by side they are both magnets alike. Remain side by side with Him who loved us and gave Himself for us, and you too will become a permanent magnet, a permanently attractive force; and like Him you will draw all men unto you, and like Him you will be drawn unto all men. That is the inevitable effect of love. Any man who fulfills the cause must have the effect produced in him. Try to give up the idea that religion comes to us by chance, or by mystery, or by magic. It comes to us by natural law, or by supernatural law, for all law is divine.—Professor Drummond.

GRIFFITHS—HAWORTH.—On Second month 22d, 1899, at the Ottawa Mission, the home of the bride's parents, Alice Haworth, daughter of W. P. and A. C. Haworth, to Clarence Griffith, son of Thomas and Elizabeth Griffiths, W. P. Haworth solemnizing the marriage.

Died.

HINKLEY.—Ebenezer D., son of Ebenezer and Mary Hinkley, died in Portland, Ind., First month 31st, 1899, aged nearly 49 years. He was married to Sarah E. Mitchell in 1887. About twelve years ago he joined the Friends and was a member at the time of his death. His health had been failing for some time and the end came suddenly. At his last attendance at meeting he gave a testimony for Christ.

HOBSON.—Ruth Hobson, daughter of Josiah and Dinah Kemp, and wife of Josie Hobson, died at her home near Monrovia, Ind., Second month 16th, 1899, aged 83 years and 7 days. She came with her husband and four children from North Carolina to Indiana in 1864, and settled near Monrovia, where she has resided ever since except about 10 years' stay in Iowa. She was a lifelong member with Friends, and at the time of her death was a member of West Union Monthly Meeting.

HOLWAY.—George N. Holway died peacefully, at his home in Los Angeles, Cal., Second month 27th, 1899, aged 72 years. He was one of the early settlers at Hesper, Winnisheik County, Iowa, where he held positions of trust and honor. He leaves his aged companion and three sons and their families to mourn his loss, with many friends who knew him but to love him. "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord."

TOMLINSON.—Allen, son of Robert and Lydia Tomlinson, died at his home, near Westfield, Ind., First month 12th, 1899, aged 71 years, 11 months and 23 days. He was a life member of Friends' Church. He was converted in early manhood and lived a consistent Christian life. Although greatly afflicted for many years, he exemplified such great patience that his life was a benediction to all who knew him. His last words rest upon our heart as a sweet benediction—"Be faithful in the work which God has called thee, my son." To which my heart answers Amen, by Thy grace, we will.

News and Events.

The Cuban Assembly, apparently moved by spite, have deposed Maximo Gomez from his position of Commander-in-Chief of the Cuban army, and at the same time have severely censured him for accepting from Robert E. Porter the offer of $3,000,000 for the payment of the disbanded soldiers, and for not rather demanding $12,000,000. Gomez takes the insult philosophically, and appears pleased with the opportunity to retire to private life. The Cuban army is made up of 40,000 men, and presents the anomalous condition of possessing 25,000 officers. This silly band now seems to be the main obstacle to a return to absolute peace and prosperity in the island, but there is danger that it will, with its dissatisfaction, yet make trouble for the United States. We have already incurred an expense of $452,562,053 on behalf of the Pearl of the Antilles, and to be subjected to continual harassment by the Cubans, with their petty grievances, and quibbles, would appear the height of ingratitude. And now the news comes that the hitherto apparently mild and peaceable Porto Ricans are clamoring for independence. They probably see no reason why they have not as much right to eventual self-government as their brother islanders.

Major-General Otis has announced an aggressive warfare against the Filipinos, and is beginning his advance upon the rebel lines. For a long time Filipino sharpshooters have annoyed our soldiers almost incessantly. They are armed with the Mauser rifles, which have a longer range than the Springfield, with which the Americans are armed, and it is said that the rebels' effectiveness at this kind of warfare is thus hampered only by their poor marksmanship. Considerable fighting occurred between the two forces last week, mostly of a desultory nature. An attempt by the Filipinos to seize the water works of Manila resulted in their utter discomfiture. General Lawton has arrived at Manila from New York, on board the Grant, with 1,600 men. He will probably take a very active part in the campaign now beginning. General Otis has declared that Manila is not a safe place for women, and emphasizes the fact that the war is really a very serious matter.

Advices from Samoa indicate that the island is still in a somewhat troubled state over the late disagreement relative to the appointment of a king. Mataafa, at the time of the decision of Chief Justice Chambers against his election, was undoubtedly the more popular of the two candidates, but recently there appears a disposition to favor the neglected Malietoa Tanus. The latter, it is interesting to know, is a mere boy, and without much influence, being only fifteen years of age. Mataafa has been a prominent figure in Samoan politics for years. He was a very intimate friend of the late Robert Louis Stevenson, who had his home at Vailima, in Samoa. The German Consul lately received a cablegram from Germany directing him to recognize the authority of Chief Justice Chambers, and to withdraw from the stand he and Dr. Raffel had taken in regard to the Supreme Court. Dr. Raffel arrived in San Francisco, from the scene of contention, on the 8th. His version of the affair implicates the London Missionary Society rather seriously. Mataafa being a Catholic, he says it was the effort of the Society to place Malietoa Tanus, a Protestant, upon the throne even in opposition to the people's wishes.

The recent demand by Italy for a door in China was curtly refused by the Tsung Li Yamen. What Italy wished is the port of San Mun, and she demanded it, evidently as have all the other powers, as hers by right of might. The insult—as the Tsung Li Yamen's attitude was interpreted by Italy—has been greatly resented by the latter country, and her bluster has resulted in a perfunctory apology from the Chinese Minister at Rome. It seems safe to predict that the demand will in time be granted. The Chinese question is still an open one, but it is cheering that England and Russia are now on an amicable understanding as to the Hong Kong and Niu Chwang grants, Russia having withdrawn her objections against these concessions to her rival.

The Miles Beef Investigating Board spent some time last week in visiting the packing houses in Chicago. It is needless to say that everything was found perfectly satisfactory. If the packers had anything to be ashamed of in their establishments prior to the announced visit, they had ample warning, and would not hesitate to take the means necessary to make a proper showing for the Board. The members of the Board were given a luncheon by the Superintendent of the Armour Company, and were greatly pleased with the canned beef served on the occasion. There is danger to be feared of another whitewashing of the army scandals.

No fool is greater than he who would see the vision from the heights of life without making the effort to climb.—Francis G. Peabody.

JOTTINGS.

Literary Berlin has been honoring Germany's greatest novelist, Friedrich Spielhagen, with a celebration of his seventieth birthday. Spielhagen is little known outside his own country, but there he has been famous for forty years or more.

A Pennsylvania volunteer in the Philippines has recently written, in a letter to the Pittsburg Post, his view on expansion. Though a loyal soldier, he does not believe in our imperialistic policy, and says that 90 per cent. of the troops are opposed to it.

Rudyard Kipling continues to improve. His daughter, Josephine, however, who had been sick with pneumonia since the day after her father was taken ill, died on the 6th inst. Josephine, who was six years of age, was the oldest of Kipling's three children.

A dinner was given last week in New York City in honor of Carl Schurz's 70th birthday. Over 600 German Americans were present to celebrate the occasion. Carl Schurz has identified himself with everything that is best in American institutions, and while not hesitating to warn the country of impending dangers, he has made himself popular with a large class of citizens.

Considerable alarm has been expressed over the announcement that Admiral Dewey is shattered in health as a result of the severe nervous and physical strain to which he has been subjected. The report appears to lack confirmation, and though beyond middle life Dewey is likely to resist the ravages of anxiety and care for many years.

Cecil Rhodes, the violent English "expansionist," has strongly advised the United States to "take up the white man's burden," and he sees in the future of this country a great colonial government. South America, he predicts, will eventually be absorbed by the United States. Nevertheless, he seems perfectly willing to leave Canada to England's care.

Forty-seven ballots have been cast for a United States Senator to succeed Matthew Stanley Quay. None of the factions are ready to yield, and the deadlock may be carried over to the next term.

By a special act of the French Parliament, the united sections of the Court of Cassation are to hear the Dreyfus case. It is claimed that a decision from the Court of Cassation, as a whole, will have greater weight with the people than that of one section alone.

According to the latest incoming steamers from Hawaii, Princess Kaiulani, who, at the time of the overthrow of the monarchy was heir-apparent to the throne, is very ill with rheumatism of the heart. She is the daughter of an Englishman, was educated in England, and is a woman of culture.

The nomination by the President of ex-Congressman Barrows to the position of Librarian of Congress failing to be ratified, the name of Herbert Putnam, of the Boston Library, is now suggested as a possibility. The person in question would fill the position most creditably, but since

HULDA:

The Pentecostal Prophetess.

BY BYRON J. REES.

152 Pages. Bound in Cloth. Price, 50c., postpaid.

A short life story and seventeen of the sermons of Hulda A. Rees, together with her portrait and picture of her early church. This book needs no other introduction than for the reader to know that seventeen of her sermons, which Sister Rees preached with such accompaniments of power and blessing, are for the most part to compose it. The life-story is short yet comprehensive, the writer of it avoiding anything of a eulogistic nature and making the facts of the life serve as an appropriate introduction to the character back of the sermons.

Mrs. E. E. Williams, in a beautiful poem, which is also a part of the book, gives some refreshing glimpses into the character of Sister Rees.

Esther T. Pritchard also contributes a "Tribute," glowing with fervor and truth.

A WORTHY CAUSE.

There is in Philadelphia an institution, well-known to many of our readers, which is doing a splendid work in bettering the condition of the city. We refer to the Christian League. This league is working aggressively for a nobler and purer environment for citizenship, for the suppression of vice of every kind, and the removal of temptations that seem yearly to increase in all large cities. It has met with abundant success, and should have the support of all who are interested in seeing the municipality improved in moral and civic tone. Contributions should be sent to John H. Converse, Treasurer, 500 N. Broad Street, Philadelphia.

There are 2,200 daily and 15,000 weekly papers published in the United States, and twenty-three different languages, other than English, are represented in the newspaper press of this country.

A LOAD OF HAY.

A load of hay in the crowded street,
A whiff of the scent of clover,
A change of thought,—vague,—incomplete,—
A living a young life over.

A day in August and clouds of white,
A shifting of light and shadow,
The hum of bees and the martin's flight,
The meadow-larks and the meadow.

Strong arms of men and the yellow green
Of the swaths, the steady swinging
Of forms of laborers, strong and lean,
The scythes with their steely ringing.

The roar of trade, and the newsboys' call,
And the dream of a moment's over;
'Twas a brain-wave came through the nose, and all

From a whiff of the scent of clover!

Christ says, "I am the way." Wherever you are, at whatever point of experience, at whatever stage of sin, this way begins where you are, and you have but to take it and it leads to God. From your person, as you are at this moment, there leads a way to the Father.—Marcus Dods, D.D.

A SOAP TRUST CANARD.

The recent report of the combination of soap manufacturers is absolutely untrue in so far as it referred to The Larkin Soap Mfg. Co., of Buffalo. The unique Larkin idea—"Factoryto Family"—will continue to serve, and to stand by, the whole people, and The Larkin Company does not need, and will not form, an alliance with any other soap company.

Ted was invited out to tea with his mother one day, and among other delicacies a saucer of orange gelatine was set before him. It was a new dish to the little fellow, and he eyed it disparagingly a minute, then he said, very politely, "If you please, 'um, thank you. I rather guess you can have it back—it keeps wagging so."

One day an Irishman was taking a walk in a small town near Glasgow when he met an old friend. After walking along the road together talking, Pat's friend said to him: "Have you heard the latest news?" Pat—"No; what is it?" "There's a penny off the loaf." Pat—"Bedad, and I hope it is off the penny ones."

DOING THE NEXT BEST THING.

Paul du Chaillu, the veteran traveler in tropical climes, advises our soldiers to abstain from intoxicants. British army officials have forbidden the use of intoxicants by all soldiers in the Soudan expedition, and the British Tommy Atkins bids fair to be a tea-drinking warrior in the future.

THE MARCH FROSTS.

The little leaves that tip the trees
With palest greenery everywhere,
O bitter nights, that blight and freeze,
And hurtling winds, and icy air,
Forbear! Forbear!
Have you no tenderness for these,
Nor any care?

No pity for the buds that break
And fringe the maples rosy red,
The starting apple-sprays that make
A silver fret-work overhead?
When these are dead,
How shall the April for their sake
Be comforted?

Oh, all my heart is full of pain!
The hurt they feel is hurt to me!
The helpless little leaves! I fain
Would cherish them so tenderly,
It might not be
Such cruel grief should fall again
On any tree!

The Christian life is a going to the Father. Some travel swiftly, some are long upon the road, some meet many pleasant adventures by the way, others pass through fire and peril; but though the path be short and winding, and though the pace be quick or slow, it is a going to the Father.—Professor Drummond.

A WOMAN'S LIFE WORK.

Including Thirty Year's Service on the Underground Railroad and in the War.
BY LAURA HAVILAND.

This is a story of a wonderful life. The author was an active Anti-Slavery agitator and through her underground railroad work assisted hundreds of slaves to escape from bondage. During the war she spent about two years taking care of the sick and wounded. Through her efforts more than 2,000 Union Soldiers were liberated. She accomplished a great work in providing for the Freedmen of Kansas after the close of the war. She was the founder of the State Public School, at Coldwater, Mich., an institution which was the first of its kind in the world. The Industrial School for Girls at Adrian Mich., almost utterly owes its first existence, and especially its name to her efforts. Haviland Academy at Haviland, Kansas, was named in her honor, as also the town in which it is located. At the World's Fair she was introduced by President Palmer as "The Mother of Philanthropy," and well she deserves the title. Her experience as told in this book will be read with thrilling interest.

This book is printed on good paper and contains 625 pages. It is bound in cloth with red edges. The retail price of the book is $1.50. We will send it postpaid, for $1.00. Address,

IF CHRIST CAME TO THE HOME.

"SAY the word, for I am not worthy that Thou shouldst come under my roof." We can easily appreciate the centurion's modesty and his feeling that he was not worthy to have the Master come into his house; but is there not something besides humility in the request? Suppose that Christ should come unexpectedly into any of our homes and sit among us as our guest, would He find our homes all ready for His presence, or should we need to spend some months beforehand preparing for His coming? There were a few homes in Judea to which He went, though it is plainly evident that He did not feel at home in them all, as He did in the one at Bethany. He found much that had to be changed in Simon's house and in Zaccheus's house before He could abide there and be at home. Even in Bethany the odors from the broken alabaster box do not cover up the notes of strife between the sisters over the questions of service and housework.

The foxes had holes and the birds of the air had nests, but there was no home in Palestine for the Son of Man. We find Him praying on hill tops, in the wilderness, in the garden; never once in some harmonious, congenial family circle. We read again and again of His spending the night under the sky, generally alone; but never once of His being comfortably housed under a roof where loving hearts made the Great Burden Bearer feel that He was at home with them, and His cares and burdens lightened by sympathy. Perhaps He did find shelter and rest and loving sympathy and true communion in some unnamed homes in the so-called "Holy Land," but we can only imagine the scenes; they are not in the picture preserved for us. There is something peculiarly touching in the request of this old Roman soldier who wants his boy healed, but who is conscious that his home is not just the place for the Saviour to go to. The desired work is to be done, if possible, at long range. It is an old story. We go to the church or the meeting-house to meet the Lord, but too often we do not expect Him to come to our homes. Things are not in shape there for Him. We have our thousand perplexing home cares and fretting problems. We mean to be sweet and loving to each other; we know we ought to make our homes altars on which the vestal fires of love are never extinguished—but, but, but! Well, we fail to do it.

If Christ should come to-day we should probably want Him to help us at long range, at least until we could get the home fixed over so that He would not find it jarring upon His calm and peaceful spirit. Think what it means to have a home where Christ could rest and refresh Himself and of which He could say, as He began His journey again, "These same are My mother and My brothers and My sisters"!

A MESSAGE TO YOUNG MEN.

JESUS CHRIST was thirty-three years old when His earthly life came to an end. He was young Himself and He loved young men. His gospel is peculiarly a message for the young, and the greatest results are realized when those who are young come under His influence and grow up in the atmosphere of His life. The truest, strongest, completest life is the one in which Christlikeness has become most habitual and natural. It is very hard, in fact almost impossible, to reconstruct the life and thought after one comes to maturity. It is during the plastic years of youth that the character and nature and disposition are formed, and it is then that a man's whole after-life is being determined.

Most of our bodily activities, our every day manners, grow to be unconscious, or, at least, sub-conscious. We act before we think. Our gestures, our movements, our ways of looking at things are no more consciously thought out than is our walking or our breathing. The largest part of our life becomes "second nature," and we run along the grooves which we, ourselves, have slowly formed.

Now, in the light of these undeniable facts, it is of supreme importance that the life be formed in the right way from the beginning, and that it shape itself so as to be at its best. Some one asked the artist, Holman Hunt, how long it would take to learn to draw by free-hand circles as perfect as those which he drew, and the answer was, "Forty years, working eight hours a day"

We knew, recently, a young man who went to a great musician to train himself to become a violinist. The teacher asked how old he was, and when he found that he was seventeen he said, "You have come too late. To become a great violinist you must begin as young as ten."

The way to become a complete Christian is to make it a life business from youth up. If the artist must train himself from youth, and if the musician must begin in early boyhood, how much more ought the whole nature to set itself to be trained by the Master of Life before it is warped and twisted, and set into wrong grooves!

Nothing on earth is so important as the attainment of noble manhood; everything else is secondary, and the only way to attain it is to train for it. It is no more possible to be a good skater or cricketer without practice than it is to be a Christlike man without practical training under the Master's eye. "Put on Christ." This is the only method.

Now, most serious young men believe all this and accept it in theory, but they often have a great fear of seeming hypocritical, and they are just a little ashamed of being thought religious, or, perhaps, more religious than they really are. The result is that they avoid and fight shy of every thing that would identify them with positive Christianity. They even go farther than they mean to in the opposite direction. They act as though it were a little "unmanly" or "not quite the thing" to be counted as a Christian—at least not until youth is over.

There can hardly be any more unfortunate idea than that it is "unmanly" or "not quite the thing" to be a Christian, or to be identified with the life and work of a church. Why, to be a Christian means merely TO BE AT ONE'S BEST morally and spiritually. A young man who cares for good looks and good clothes and good form ought surely not to care less for a good self, a good spirit, a good will; and these are the very things that Jesus Christ produces in a man.

GENERAL CHURCH NOTES.

The announcement that Dr. Henry Van Dyke would not accept the invitation to a new chair of literature in his alma mater, Princeton University, proved to be based on unreliable information. The endowment for the professorship has been raised, and Dr. Van Dyke has accepted the position thus founded. His services in his present field of labor, as pastor of a New York church, will be sincerely missed. A splendid opportunity, however, awaits him as a teacher. He will carry with him to Princeton his high ideals of Christian manhood, and his influence will be none the less powerful than that of his previously more direct religious instruction.

T. De Witt Talmage, who has been pastor of the First Presbyterian Church, of Washington, for nearly four years, has sent his resignation to the Session. He intends in the future to devote his time to journalism and lecturing, believing that he will thus have a greater opportunity to reach the masses. He states in his letter of resignation that the many calls which he constantly receives from outside have interrupted the regular work of the church. Dr. Talmage, through his published sermons, has become widely known throughout the country, and as a popular speaker he will undoubtedly meet with a warm reception, and a successful career should await him in his new sphere.

Many of our readers who remember the frequent references to the Doshisha in the letters of Dr. Henry Hartshorne to THE AMERICAN FRIEND, and who with him deplored the tendency of that institution to a unitarian or rational form of government, will rejoice that the old constitution has been restored and the college returned to the principles of its founder. The Doshisha was founded by Neesima, a Japanese convert to Christianity, and maintained by the American Board. The rational element finally secured control and invoked the law forbidding alien trusteeship, thus removing the college from evangelical influences. A new board of ten members has now been appointed, all in harmony with the evangelical teaching, and with the renewed support of the American Board the efficiency of the college and the general cause of missions will be wonderfully promoted.

The noted evangelist, Dr. F. B. Meyer, the successor to Dr. Newman Hall in London, is engaged in preaching and holding religious conferences in India. He is doing a grand work among the poorer classes. During the month of January he held four meetings each day in Calcutta, and a similar record may be expected from him in other cities.

On the evening of the 14th, Josiah Strong, the noted reformer and Congregationalist minister, of New York city, lectured at the Central Congregational Church in Philadelphia upon the subject, "The Greatest Menace to Modern Civilization." This menace is the disproportionate growth of the material prosperity of the nation to the physical, intellectual and moral.

The lecturer dwelt upon the increasing materialism of the day, its dangers and its undoubted tendencies to concentrate and centralize labor and populate the cities at the expense of the country. The evils are apparent, but their remedy obscure. Dr. Strong, however, has faith in the ultimate solution of the problems facing us, and he is one of several engaged in preparing and distributing small manuals called "Truths for the Times." Information regarding these leaflets may be had by addressing "Truths for the Times," Room 511, United Charities Building, Fourth Avenue and Twenty-second Street, New York city. They are well worthy of a large field of usefulness.

FOR THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

WILL vs. FEELING.

One of the great underlying difficulties in living the religious life is the fatal habit we have of depending upon our feelings. Feelings are the most obvious things in our experience, and we think, therefore, that they are the most important, although, if we would only think a little, we would all of us be forced to confess that, as a matter of fact, our feelings are the most variable and the least dependable things we know of. Feelings are affected by all sorts of physical conditions, by the state of one's health, by the circumstances of one's life, by the direction of the wind, by the rise or fall of the barometer, by everything, in short, that affects our bodies or concerns our lives. It would be hopeless, for instance, to expect the right sort of feelings from a confirmed dyspeptic, or from a victim of liver complaint. We must have a more stable foundation for our lives than our feelings, if we are to live them out in peace and comfort.

The question then arises as to what this more stable foundation is to be. And to this I answer most emphatically, that, to my thinking, it can only be found, not in the state of our feelings, but in the attitude of our will. Fenelon says, "True virtue and pure love reside in the will alone"; and again, "The will to love God is the whole of religion." And I believe that in these sentences lies the whole secret. The will is the governing power in our nature; it is the king within the man, to which all the rest of the man must yield obedience. It is, in short, the man himself, the "Ego"—that personality in the depths of his being which he himself recognizes as his real self.

The common thought is that religion resides, not in the will, but in the emotions; and the emotions are looked upon as the governing power in our nature; consequently, all the attention of the soul is directed towards our "feelings," and as these are satisfactory or otherwise, the soul rests or is troubled. But the moment we discover the fact that true religion really resides in the will alone, we are raised above the domination of our feelings, and realize that so long as our will is steadfast towards God, the varying state of our feelings is a matter of very little account, and does not in any way affect the reality of the divine life in our souls. It is a great emancipation to make this discovery, and I cannot but think that a little common sense applied to religion would soon reveal it all. For we must each one of us know that there is something within us, behind our feelings and behind our wishes—an independent, interior self—that after all decides everything and controls everything; and that nothing is really authoritative in our lives, unless it emanates from this interior being. The Bible calls this central self "the heart," and declares that out of it are the "issues of life." By whatever name philosophers may call this "heart," out of which are the "issues of life," I am convinced that it means, not the emotions, but the real inner self, or, in other words, the will. And our right concern, therefore, must be, not to see that we have the right feelings, but that the attitude of our will is right.

I will take a familiar case as an illustration. A great trial confronts a child of God. He knows he ought to say "Thy Will be done" in regard to it, and the purpose of his will is to say this. But his feelings are all in rebellion, and it seems to him, when he tries to say it, as if he were a hypocrite, and would be telling an untruth should he persist. Now the real fact is, that all this rebellion, being only in the emotions, is not worth the slightest attention. If in his will the sufferer really chooses the Will of God, then he himself really chooses it, and he is no hypocrite when he says, "Thy Will be done." The real thing in your experience is not the verdict of your emotions, but the verdict of your will; and you are far more in danger of hypocrisy and untruth in yielding to the assertions of your feelings, than in holding fast to the decisions of your will.

If your will is at the bottom on God's side, then you yourself are on God's side, no matter how you may feel.

HANNAH WHITALL SMITH.

FOR THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

NEAL DOW.

BY JOSHUA L. BAILY.

The 95th anniversary of the birth of Neal Dow (Third month 20th) brings to mind some incidents of this time two years ago, when I had the privilege of being his guest. I had accepted an invitation to be one of the speakers at the public celebration of his ninety-third birthday in Portland, and promptly there came from him a very kind letter asking me to make my home at his house.

It did not seem to me right to look for such a privilege at that time, knowing that he would be likely to have many callers and other friends to entertain, and I so wrote him. But a message came back at once over the wires, "Come directly to my house." A message as characteristic as it was peremptory. I say characteristic, for this word "directly" was one he frenever discouraged him, but were rather stimulants to renewed exertion.

Among many interesting objects shown me at his house on his ninety-third birthday, was a gold medal, on one side of which was this inscription, "Presented to Neal Dow by the Juvenile Washingtonians, April 23d, 1846," and on the other side were these words, "Never give up." This was indeed the motto of his life, adhered to with undeviating pertinacity.

On this last anniversary occasion I found him seated in an armchair near the parlor window, reading a book. His full head of silver hair hung in graceful curls—a fit setting to a countenance aglow with his accustomed sprightliness. He seemed feeble in body, but vigorous in mind, and had lost none of that geniality and vivacity which always made his company and conversation so charming. There were many callers on that day, and scores of telegrams and letters of congratulation, but there were intervals which I quently employed and acted on. There was no circumlocution about the man. In whatever he had to do, it was characterized by directness.

What he believed to be right for himself he went at at once. He never procrastinated. I have a number of letters from him in which occur the words, "I went immediately." In one letter now before me these words occur twice. The letter was written March 12th, 1894, a few days before the completion of his ninetieth year. He had received a letter from me on the morning of that day, and at once sat down to reply. This letter covers four closely and neatly written pages, and is without an erasure or an error in a single word, and yet it was completed and mailed, as the post mark shows, before noon of the same day.

His persistence was as pronounced a characteristic as his promptness. He suffered nothing to turn him from a purpose once determined on. Impediments which would have induced most men to turn back gladly availed of to hear him talk of matters which had most deeply concerned his long and eventful life. No failure of memory was observed, and, except an occasional momentary hesitation for a word, his speech had all the fluency of by-gone years.

Neal Dow's library, where most of his home life was spent, interested me very much. It was a spacious room lined on all sides with book shelves, extending from floor to ceiling, and filled for the most part with standard works, well bound. But this was no mere "cold-storage warehouse," as too many libraries are. Neal Dow was a great reader, and his books were his constant associates and intimate friends.

Well posted on general literature, both of the past and the present, and keeping well posted on the topics of the day, he had almost inexhaustible resources on which to draw both in writing and speaking.

A portion of his library was devoted to books in French—a language with which he was quite familiar.

But by far the most interesting and valuable part of the library was a series of twenty-eight large and strongly bound volumes—scrap books containing cuttings from the newspaper press of the world, collected by himself at home and abroad, not only matter relating to the great work to which so much of his life had been singularly devoted, but a great variety of other matter, either of personal or general interest; and all of these great volumes had been carefully and neatly and copiously indexed by his own hand.

I saw him not again. Before another twelvemonth had passed his life work on earth had ended, and he had peacefully entered upon the life beyond.

The autobiography of Neal Dow recently published is an intensely interesting and fascinating record in his happiest rhetoric. Such an example of true heroism should be an inspiration and stimulant to many. With unfaltering step he blazed the way through forests of opposition and difficulty. Who is there now to take up the work with like courage and fidelity?

FOR THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

AN OPPORTUNITY.

BY RICHARD HENRY THOMAS.

It is much to be feared that the lovers of peace in this country are in danger of letting slip the unusual opportunity offered by the Czar's rescript to the powers, asking for an international conference concerning the limitation of armaments, the resort to arbitration before declaration of war, and the lessening of the horrors of war when it is entered upon. In Great Britain, especially, and to a good extent on the Continent of Europe also, great interest has been aroused. Mass meetings are being held, and numbers of signatures are being obtained to a memorial to the Czar endorsing his effort. A Peace Crusade has been organized and there is much enthusiasm. In this country the reception of the rescript has been quite different. It has aroused a languid interest. There has been doubt raised—not of the sincerity of the Czar, which no one seriously questions, but of his ministers. Russia, it is pointed out, is pushing her preparations for possible war as rapidly as if no rescript had been issued. There is also the feeling that we are not seriously concerned in the matter, not having ourselves very large armaments; while the fact that we have just had one war on our hands, and are now carrying on another, has acted as a damper to the thought of taking steps to decrease our military equipment.

None of these reasons at all militate against our moving in this matter. What if the advisers of the Czar have their own reasons for being willing that he should issue his rescript, and what if these reasons be selfish! This does not alter the fact that a conference is being arranged between the representatives of the various civilized nations on the ground that war and military preparations as they exist to-day, are recognized evils, and that some solution of the difficult problem of lessening the evils is urgently needed.

This is of itself a great object lesson to the nations. It shows that the constant labor of peace men, backed by the logic of facts, is at last beginning to tell. Whether much immediate good is to come from this special conference or not, the moral effect of such a conference, and the reports of its discussions in their educational influence upon the great mass of the people, will be immense.

The matter does concern us in this country more than many think. We are embarking, or at least appear to be embarking, upon a course which has but one logical result, if it be continued, and that is the fastening upon us of something very akin to the military system under which Europe is now groaning. The material prosperity of this land—not a little dependent on our freedom from these burdens—will, if such a system be introduced, suffer tremendous loss; but great as the loss will be, it will be as little compared with the moral and spiritual evil entailed. It is therefore as good citizens and as God-fearing people that we are called upon to look far enough into the future to see the dangers ahead, and to guard against them, before militarism becomes too strong for us. Again, we cannot afford to say of any great movement anywhere that it is no concern of ours. The fact that we are not yet clear of war ourselves is no reason why we should not exert our influence for peace and to promote the success of the proposed conference, but a reason why we should do so. I suppose that there is no doubt that a representative from this country will be sent; but it is of the greatest importance that he should go with a sense that the people of the nation are behind him in the desire to make the conference as great a success as it can be made, and the more we can show our feelings in this particular the better.

Again, in endeavoring to get people to give in their adhesion to the plan, there will be a large opportunity to influence them in favor of peace from a standpoint on which their passions have not been aroused.

It is, therefore, from almost every point of view, a wonderful opportunity for putting in some good work for peace. Shall we embrace it?

The American Peace Society has sent a memorial to the Czar endorsing the proposal, and the Peace Association of Friends in America is about to send one. I suppose other Peace Societies have done the same thing in their official capacity. But more than this seems to be needed; and more good could be accomplished if personal signatures could be obtained to a memorial that should be widely circulated. I shall be glad to supply copies of a memorial that may be circulated for signatures.

It is useless to pray for a forgiving spirit while cultivating a memory for injuries. God never quenches a fire for a man who persists in feeding it with oil. He that really desires to keep malice out of his heart will try to keep inflaming thoughts out of his head.

KEOKUK, THE AGED CHIEF.

BY PRES. A. ROSENBERGER.

In the latter part of October, 1898, as the forests were putting on their loveliest hues, it was my privilege to spend a few days in the heart of the Indian country, and to see the noble red man amid his ancestral surroundings. In company with a distinguished Indian Inspector and the Government interpreter, it was my good fortune to visit in his own home the venerable Keokuk, Chief of the Sacs and Foxes. He is a fine specimen of his race, the "noblest Roman of them all," and the most revered Chief in the Indian nation.

More than a quarter of a century ago the Sac and Fox tribe occupied a rather choice reservation in sunny Kansas. Their rights were not so scrupulously regarded then as now. Somehow the white man was quite successful in extracting the lion's share of that which nature kindly bestowed, regardless of the claims of justice and mercy in behalf of these "wards of the nation." Keokuk, a wide-awake, intelligent and conscientious chief, in the prime of life, became aware of the uneven contest going on and was disposed to lay the charge at the doors of the government officials as being open abettors of these frauds and crimes against his people. With true Indian promptness, he concluded to resort to Washington for the purpose of seeking relief and redress.

When the report of the resolution came to the ears of the Indian Agent, he summoned Keokuk and advised him to abandon such a foolish and perilous undertaking. This advice not being effective, he declared that he would degrade him from his position as Chief in case he further persisted in the matter. Failing to intimidate the sturdy warrior, the information was given that a message had been received from Washington forbidding the journey thither. Bonds and imprisonment were threatened in case of further disobedience. Indifferent alike to flattery and threats, Keokuk ended every conference with the declaration, "I am going to Washington."

In due course of time the memorable journey began. Keokuk, his young son, and four companions, including an interpreter, made their appearance at Lawrence for the purpose of taking the train from this point. The Sheriff of Douglas County, accompanied by the Agent, arrested and carried them before the Judge for a preliminary hearing. His Honor sought to dissuade them from their purpose without avail. The Chief said: "Judge, I see a plain road to Washington upon which any honest man may go at pleasure. I have not stolen; I have done no wrong; I have broken no law; I am going to Washington." They were committed to the county jail for the night. Friends rallied to their support, and on the following day they were tried, acquitted, released and permitted to pursue their journey without further hindrance or molestation.

In Washington, Keokuk was welcomed most heartily, and given an audience with the Indian Department. He plead the cause of his people with skill, and exposed the doings of the white man with such adroitness and clearness that those in authority recognized the odor from "something rotten in Denmark." There was a change in the officials at the Sac and Fox agency, the wrongs were righted, and the tribe restored to its just possessions.

It now became Keokuk's turn to invoke the aid of the courts for redress of grievances, which he did by instituting proceedings for false imprisonment. A judgment for two thousand dollars was entered in his favor, which sum Keokuk, with a shrug of his shoulders and a broad smile upon his face, said the lawyer stole from him in toto. The generous Chief readily forgave the wrong on account of the eminent service rendered in securing his release from prison on the former occasion.

It was no common courage that sustained Keokuk amid these trials that confronted him at every turn and enabled him to carry to a successful completion his noble purpose in behalf of his people. What obstacles frowned upon him! He, a wild, untutored savage, representative of a dying race, speaking a language unknown in the nation's capital, was dealing with a powerful people, also of strange speech. Persistence in his resolve might lead to degradation from office among his own people, to imprisonment, to death. None of these things moved him. No wonder he is greatly beloved by his tribe.

At the time of our visit the Chief, well-stricken in years, being about ninety, was confined to his room by an attack of malarial fever. It was our privilege to hear him give in his own rich native tongue a recital of the celebrated journey to Washington. As he proceeded with the narrative he arose from his couch and became all animation. His eye flashed with noble passion, his figure became erect, his gestures graceful, his tongue eloquent, and his bearing dignified and commanding. Though we understood never a word of his native tongue, we knew full well what mighty thoughts were surging through the soul of the aged chieftain, and were strangely moved by the impassioned oratory of this unlettered son of the forest.

The interpreter, now grown old in the service, declared it to be delightful work to interpret for Keokuk. His sentences are straight as arrows and go to no uncertain mark. His thought is clear, his language simple, his diction pure, and his deliverance almost faultless.

We left his neatly furnished home feeling that we had been in the presence of a remarkable man, carrying away with us the conviction that there is at least one good Indian who is not yet numbered with the dead.

MATTHEW ARNOLD'S "THE LAST WORD."

BY BYRON J. REES.

He was a trifle discouraged—perhaps it would be nearer the exact truth to say that he was almost wholly discouraged. He was wondering, as he leaned against the book-counter and looked out over the tables laden with all sorts and styles of volumes displayed for sale, whether it paid after all to follow one's ideals. Would it not be better sometimes to give in to the prevalent low type of aim and purpose and be like the great herd who charge and lock horns and struggle for name and fame and wealth and comfort in this busy world.

He was just an ordinary preacher; nothing about either his appearance or his gifts distinguished him from thousands of others of his class. He had felt, however, that he had a message, and with an eager and sanguine heart he had leaped to action. But the world is not reformed in a minute and the indifference, coldness, and even opposition with which his earnest yet disinterested attempts at righting things were met by men older and presumably wiser than he, were cruel rebuffs to so young a man.

He had not been miserly of the strength God had given him; recklessly, whole-heartedly, he had thrown himself into his life-work—and now to fail: that was a bitter hypothesis. On this particular Monday morning ("Second-day morning," he was in the habit of terming it) he felt especially down-hearted and depressed.

"I wonder," he said to himself, shifting from one elbow to another for support, "I wonder if these men whose works clutter a place like this were ever in battles and difficulties similar to mine!" His eyes ran over the shelves until they fell on a book of poems with the name "Arnold" in gilt letters across the back. He pulled the book from its place, opened it at random, and involuntarily began to read:

Creep into thy narrow bed,—
Creep, and let no more be said;
Vain thy onset! All stands fast,
Thou thyself must break at last.

Let the long contention cease!
Geese are swans and swans are geese,
Let them have it how they will!

Thou art tired; best be still.
They out-talked thee, tore thee;
Better men fared thus before thee—
Fired their ringing shot and passed,
Hotly charged, and sank at last.

Charge once more, then, and be dumb!
Let the victors, when they come,
When the forts of folly fall,
Find thy body by the wall!"

As he closed the book he pushed his hat over his eyes to hide a gush of tears which sprang to his eyes. The heart of the poet-seer and the heart of the youthful preacher had met and understood each other. As the man walked down the pavement to his hotel, jostled by men hurrying out of offices and shops, the lines kept ringing in his brain:

Charge once more, then, and be dumb!
Let the victors, when they come,
When the forts of folly fall,
Find thy body by the wall!

"Yes, that is the thing to do. Keep charging with the spirit and fire of a last charge. I'll do it, Lord, if Thou," his eyes upwards, "wilt but help me!"

ANNALS OF OUR BIBLE CLASS.

BY ONE OF US.

NO. XI.

It marks an epoch in the ministry of our Lord when He begins to speak to the multitudes in and one that coincides so closely with the verdict of the scribes and Pharisees concerning His miracles as to suggest a necessary connection between the two. For when once they took the blasphemous position that His miracles were wrought by satanic agency rather than by the Holy Ghost, they committed an unpardonable sin and barred the door of their hearts against Him forever, and our teacher is inclined to think that the Master, in kindness to them, began at once to veil the truths He taught in this form of speech, that He might not add to their condemnation by adding to their light. However this may be, the parables have opened to us a delightful field of thought with ample scope for all our powers of analysis and research. At present we are only just beyond the first group as found in Matt. 13 and Mark 4, and passing lightly over these three personal parables: those of the developing plant, the hidden treasure and the pearl, we linger with deeper interest than ever before beside the five that have to do with one aspect or another of the future church.

As we have gone over these in our present courses we have been profoundly impressed with their prophetic import in its absolute faithfulness to subsequent history. We wonder if Bible students have given this feature of the parables due weight as another evidence of the deity of our adorable Redeemer. He draws the curtain and reveals the mixed and imperfect state of organized Christianity with an accuracy and fidelity to the facts, only possible to One to whom the future was a panorama unrolled. It was certainly marvelous prophecy and utterly beyond the power of an impostor.

While the introductory parable of the Sower, in its primary meaning, teaches the effect of the word upon four different classes of hearers, in its secondary meaning it shadows forth precisely the variety of membership to be found in our churches to-day. In this, however, the wayside hearers are not included, as they come to the services, sit on the back seats, give indifferent attention, and go away unimpressed. But the light soil hearers who "receive the word with joy" are certain to be numbered among the converts, and taken into the church, though they presently "fall away," and constitute thereafter an element of backsliders. Then there are the thorny ground believers—those who have really had an experience, but have allowed it little chance to grow, and little food, except a weekly sermon on which to be nourished. Business cares, whether of the household or the counting room, the pleasures of the world, society claims, the literary club, the daily paper, the latest book, and “other things” have absorbed the time until the prayer meeting, the closet devotions, and the Bible class have been neglected. The spiritual life is strangled: beside the healthy stalk of well-matured wheat, they are comparable to a pale and slender stem that barely exists, and has no strength to head out. They represent what is often considered by unspiritual judges a solid class of intelligent, well-to-do church members,—influential, thinking people, who are up with the times and a credit to the congregations to which they belong. But really they have no vitality that Christ can own, and they are no help to the cause except in their contributions of money. The leaven of the Sadducees and the leaven of Herod finds a congenial element in which to work among this class, and one may expect to find them unsound doctrinally and without moral force politically. In addition to these two classes there is the precious remnant of humble, growing well-saved souls, who hear the word of God and keep it, and bring forth fruit with patience. They have gone not only across the line of Egypt’s boundary, but clear out of its atmosphere. They are voluntary outlaws in the superficial and artificial social realms, and therefore free. They are the salt that saves the church; the living epistles that witness to the reality of saving grace and the indwelling Comforter—the genuine brand of the citizens of the kingdom. Yet it is interesting to note that our Lord leaves room, even among these, for just the varying degress of fruitfulness that we find among equally well-meaning people. Some are twice or thrice as efficient as others, owing to their native ability, advantages and circumstances.

The parable of the Tares and that of the Net naturally fall together as setting forth the presence of both good and bad in the outward church to the end of the age, and also the final judgment and ultimate destiny of the righteous and the wicked.

But when we come to the parables of the Mustard-seed and the Leaven, we are on debatable ground where the ablest authorities differ. Hence we do not presume to dogmatize as to what they mean, though we strongly lean to the opinion that the “fowls of the air” stand for the nations of the earth that have come within the pale of the church by a nominal acceptance of Christianity; and that the “leaven” is in this instance as in every other, a symbol of evil; that it represents a subtle, permeating principle of corruption such as stole into the church in the early centuries of its existence, and never ceased to work until Christianity, as a body, was wholly leavened with superstition and false doctrine. Allowing the three measures of meal to stand for the visible church—since three is a divine number, and the hand of Heresy to be personified by the “woman,” and leaven to have its usual representative meaning—this parable gives us a true picture of Christendom, whether of the Greek or Latin churches, in the period immediately preceding the Reformation under Luther.

To return for a moment to the parable of the Mustard seed, all must admit that the herb refers to the church, which from the smallest beginning* was destined to grow and grow until its branches should extend to the ends of the earth. Clearly nothing is more foreign to the nature of an herb than fowls of the air; the two belong to wholly different kingdoms; hence the birds like the “leaven” and the bad “fish,” must signify something which in its relation to the visible kingdom is “in it, but not of it.” This interpretation accords with Scripture symbolism as found in the book of Daniel and elsewhere, beasts and birds being used to represent nations and kings. This view of the parable seems remarkably sustained by church history from the reign of Constantine the Great, when the temporal power gained a foothold, and began to blend with ecclesiastical power and exert its secularizing influence upon the visible church of Jesus Christ.

Crude as these expositions doubtless are, they have been a fine drill for our class, and have sharpened our perceptions for more of this sort of exercise further on. But now we turn aside to widely different events and lessons, that refer not so much to the distant future as to the immediate present—events that cluster, not so much about the great Teacher as about the

in the very opening chapter of the Christian ministry. It is somewhere in the course of the Master’s third circuit through Galilee that they are commissioned and sent out, in six different directions, as heralds of the kingdom. For months,—some of them for years,—they have been in training for their work in closest companionship with Jesus, seeing His miracles, hearing His teachings, and being moulded by His personality; but now they have to learn that taking in is one thing, and giving out is quite another. Two and two, in yoke fellowship, appointed by the Lord Himself, they take their several ways to return at the end of the journey, knowing themselves and each other far better than when they went out.

Pre-pentecostal preaching, and that, too, without even the anointing which John the Baptist or the old old prophets had, must have been heavy work. They knew Jesus, and there was no doubt as to their call, but they had not had their “upper room,” and we can readily believe they returned from that first evangelistic experience not only tired, but a trifle disheartened. At any rate, there is not the faintest trace of enthusiasm in their report as they tell the Lord all that they have done, and all that they have taught. Of course there had been results; their power to work miracles, if nothing else, would make way for them and give them a hearing for the truth, yet even their miracles do not seem to have been as marvelous as those of the seventy who "returned with joy, saying, 'even the devils are subject unto us through thy name.'"

We do not know precisely how long they had been in the field, but one thing is certain—they had come home exhausted and needing a change. The quick eye of the Master discerns it, and He proposes an immediate resort to a more quiet spot. It is no use trying to rest in Capernaum, for this is now the high mark of Christ's public favor, and there is such a rush of coming and going as to leave them no leisure even to eat. How unlike the enthusiastic idea that if one is not only spiritual the Lord's work will not tire him is the tender constraint of the Master that bids them "come apart and rest awhile." So they take ship privately and steal away across the head of the lake to a grassy plain near the town of Bethsaida Julias, on the northeast side; but meantime they have been missed, the course of the well-known boat has been discovered, and the throng of west side people and Passover pilgrims run afoot and outspeed them. For they would see and hear Jesus, so difficult is it for the popular preacher to slip away from pursuing crowds, who have no conception of the nervous strain of evangelistic service. In place of relaxation it means for the little boat load another day of hard work. I seem to see the compassionate face of the Son of Man as He moves that day amid the multitude of unshepherded souls, giving to all their sick a touch of healing, and preaching the gospel of the kingdom. For over two years of ceaseless ministry, without a vacation, there has been a draft upon His energies such as no one ever endured before or since, and now as this busy day rounds to its close, the apostles suggest that He dismiss the crowds, and let them go into the villages and buy victuals. The request seems reasonable for all concerned, but in the thought of Christ the hungry thousands need to see His creative power, and twelve young preachers need a lesson for their life-long encouragement. May it not be that Philip had felt the most dispirited of all the apostles when he returned from the work? He was evidently a man to figure on the possibilities of an enterprise solely from the resources that were in sight. I wonder if he had not questioned the reality of his gift, in this late tour, or his natural qualifications for such a calling. Very likely all of them had said to themselves over and over, "If ever I am to succeed as a preacher I must have a better preparation." And so they must, but as yet they little dream what a real equipment means.

It is to Philip that the Master addresses the query, "Whence shall we buy bread that these may eat?" And this he said to prove him. Immediately Philip begins a computation of costs. Probably there were nearly 10,000 mouths in that company to be fed, and 200 pennyworth of bread would not be enough for each one to take a little. Even that much money was doubtless far beyond their ability.

Brought face to face with the need and the inadequate supply, it was the fitting moment for them to learn, as grand old Bishop Taylor says, that we are called to work on the "high line of human impossibilities." Andrew suggests that there are five barley loaves and two small fishes, but what are these among so many? Really they are nothing unless the touch of Christ shall quicken them. But this is the hour in which to show not only the twelve apostles, but all the ministry of the future church, how our blessed Head can transmute common fare into heavenly food, multiply meagre resources to more than enough for the waiting people, and leave the preacher with a greater store of food on hand than he had in the beginning. I wonder if this symbolic lesson dawned upon the apostles then, as they moved in and out between the well-ordered ranks of the receptive multitude, feeding them with bread supernaturally provided, or did the deeper meaning of the miracle lie dormant until after they had had their pentecost and learned experimentally what it is to preach the gospel with the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven.

First-day, Fourth mo. 2. Resurrection of Christ. Matt. 28: 1-10.

From the concluding verses of chapter 10 we learn that Jesus and his disciples went beyond the Jordan into Perea. (See Matt. 19: 1, 2; Mark 10: 1, etc.; Luke 10). He was at Bethabara (Bethany, Revised Version), where John baptized, when the news of the illness of Lazarus reached him. The household at Bethany appears to have been in more than comfortable circumstances. It is supposed that Martha was the eldest of the three (see Luke 10: 38), and Lazarus the youngest. There is no account given of the origin of the acquaintance of Jesus with the family. All kinds of tradition relative to the family exist. Simon the Leper has been thought to be the father, or possibly the husband, of one of the sisters. Lazarus, by some, has been identified with the rich young ruler (Matt. 19: 16-22). But all except what can be gathered from the gospels is guess work. Nothing whatever is known of Lazarus's life after the resurrection. Poets and novelists, and other writers have pictured what they thought he must have felt. Two of the most notable poem's are Robert Browning's "Epistle of Karshish," and Tennyson's "In Memoriam," xxxi.

Bethany of Judea was on the eastern slope of the Mount of Olives, and therefore only a short distance, less than two miles from Jerusalem. As is so often the case, the site which is now pointed out as that of the tomb of Lazarus is, in all probability, not the true one.

It is thought that the death of Lazarus took place only a few weeks after the incident described in Luke 10. As soon as Lazarus was taken sick the sisters appear to have sent to Christ to come, but there seems little doubt that Lazarus died soon after the messenger left Bethany, and was therefore already dead when the message reached Christ. The whole chapter should be carefully read.

32. The message given by Martha immediately sends Mary to the feet of Jesus. Her language is the same as that of Martha, except that she omits any reference to the resurrection. From the narrative it would appear that while Mary threw herself at Jesus' feet, Martha did not (verses 20, 21).

33. "Weeping." This is in the original a different word from that in verse 35; it means rather "wailing" or "lamenting." "Groaned." This is a strong word, not often used in the New Testament. Strictly it is almost always connected with the idea of indignation. Many explanations have been offered in regard to its use here. It would seem best to take it simply as a word to express deep emotion roused by the sight of Mary's grief, coupled possibly with a feeling of indignation at the professional grief of the Jews who accompanied her.

35. "Jesus wept." Often quoted as the shortest verse in the Bible, and yet one which has been full of the greatest comfort to many a sorrowing heart. The word for "wept," means to shed tears, as distinguished from wailing.

36. "Therefore." Revised Version. So also in verses 32, 41, 45. It is John's favorite particle. It was because they saw the grief of Jesus that they spoke. It is clear from the next verse that all the Jews did not say this.

37. "This man." Literally, "this fellow." Probably, though not necessarily, a contemptuous speech.

38. "Now it was a cave, and a stone lay against it." Revised Version. The burial places, especially of the well-to-do, were often hewn out of the rock on the side of a hill, and large stones were rolled against the openings. Such would seem to have been the grave of Lazarus.

39. The statement of Martha was probably an opinion, not, as some would have it, a statement of fact. "Four days." There is no word in the original for "dead;" "buried" might have been supplied, but as it was customary to bury on the day of death, it makes no essential difference which would be used. Compare Acts 5: 6, 10.

40. "If thou believedst, thou shouldst see." Revised Version. "Men are always desirous to see in order to believe. Martha was called upon to believe that she might see." It is clear that Martha withdrew, perhaps silently, her objection. Had she not done this the miracle would hardly have been performed.

41. "Lifted up." The attitude of prayer. "Hast heard." This does not necessarily imply a previous prayer, it is rather the expression of perfect faith.

42. "Hearest me always." Answer to prayer is not always the granting of the petition. Christ's words were thanksgiving for the assurance that he was heard. "That they may believe." That they may be conscious of the communion he has with the Father and that they might glorify the Father.

43. "Cried with a loud voice." Almost equivalent to "shout." "Lazarus, come forth." Literally, "Lazarus, hither, out!"

44. "Bound," etc. Swathed, but not so as to stop all movement. "Loose him." Christ gave them something to do, partly to relieve the intense strain of the spectators, partly because it is characteristic of the divine economy to employ human instrumentality.

45. The customary result followed: some believed, and some did not. The reserve of the narrator is striking evidence of the truthfulness of the account. A myth would have given particulars more fully and would have attempted to reproduce the words of Lazarus or describe his feelings, but,

"Behold a man raised up by Christ.

The rest remaineth unrevealed—

He told it not; or something sealed

The lips of that evangelist."

PRACTICAL THOUGHTS.

1. Christ is "touched with the feeling of our infirmities."

2. "The glory of God can only be seen by the eye of faith."

(An Easter Meeting.)

The evening darkness of the day of the crucifixion fell upon an utterly disheartened company of disciples in the city of Jerusalem, whose hopes had all perished with the conclusion of the awful tragedy on Mount Calvary. They "trusted that it had been he that should have redeemed Israel," but all hope was now gone, and in fear for their own lives they hid away in private rooms, or crept about in the shadows of the streets. Jesus of Nazareth was fast becoming only a memory to them, and they would soon have returned to their own homes, to their nets and tax gathering. But the resurrection was to them in deed a living hope that re-inspired their faith and courage, and replaced their shattered Messianic ideals with a conception of that spiritual kingdom in which Jesus Christ should still rule, and of which they were to be heralds in all the world. But no such kingdom could ever have formed with a dead Christ in a Jewish tomb as its center and head.

The resurrection of Jesus Christ was the objective point in early apostolic preaching. "Whom ye slew, but God raised him from the dead," was almost an apostolic formula. It was to them a supreme evidence of the deity of Jesus Christ. It was a well-attested fact; too well attested, indeed, for any successful denial in Jerusalem or elsewhere, for the witnesses were yet living.

Had the grave been able to hold the crucified Christ he would never have commanded the faith of the world. His own claims as the Son of God could never have been promulgated throughout the world. His moral teachings would have gone for naught had his claims been spurious,—the mere vaporings of a disordered imagination. His resurrection is the fitting crown of a life like his.

Sin and death are the enemies of the race. The resurrection is the pledge of his victory over them. He whom death could conquer could never have "delivered them who through fear of death are all their life time subject to bondage." Without him we would have still looked into a dark tomb, but he has opened a door on the other side, and henceforth the light of the other world illuminates the narrow passageway.

The resurrection of Jesus Christ has brought a living hope for the Christian's death bed. Read Hezekiah's psalm in Isaiah 38th chapter, and you will see how gloomy was the prospect of an Old Testament saint in the presence of death. He catches no gleam of the blessed life beyond, there are no raptures in the hope of being with his Lord. Now read Paul's triumphant saying in Phillipians, Corinthians and Timothy. To depart is to be with Christ; is to enter a house not made with hands; is to receive a crown of life at that day.

The resurrection of Jesus Christ is the pledge of our resurrection. He is the first fruits—but at the last the whole sheaf of garnered grain shall be waved before the Lord. "The dead in Christ shall rise first; then we that are alive, that are left, shall together with them be caught up in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air; and so shall we ever be with the Lord."

THE FORWARD MOVEMENT.

WHAT is known as the Forward Movement, or the assigning of special mission fields, or missionaries, or of children in mission schools, or of native workers, to churches or groups of churches, Sunday Schools or young people's societies for support, has assumed proportions that make it now a distinctive characteristic of modern mission methods. The American Board has recently engaged L. D. Wishard to act as their special representative in this department, and we may expect to see the same policy inaugurated by all the larger boards. Meanwhile, smaller boards and committees, who find it imperatively necessary to keep down the expenses of administration, must lay heavier burdens on their secretaries. The advantage of this movement lies in the fact that churches or societies thus come in closer contact with the foreign field. It is giving in the concrete rather than the abstract. True enough, the concrete may prove a failure, where the abstract will always have a measure of success, and the fields or workers who make the greatest show of success may receive more attention than other equally needy—and in the end equally successful—fields or workers, but the trend of affairs cannot now be turned, and until missionary information can be more generally disseminated and assimilated, we must put home organizations or individual givers in close touch with definite fields. All this is of interest to those of us who are studying our own missionary polity. As a matter of fact we have been for years pursuing practically the same policy in the division of our work between the different Yearly Meetings and Young People's Societies. Two hundred people among Friends, to make a moderate estimate, are now actually identified with the management of our foreign missions. A large number of our Endeavors—almost all of them, in fact—have special workers assigned to them for support. The result is an increased sense of personal responsibility and interest in the success of the work. The system is not capable of further extension among us in the matter of the management of missions; indeed, we suffer greatly from the lack of stronger centralization of power, by which we will gain both in experience in management and in ease of dissemination of information. We shall also be able to enter new fields where at present no one organization feels able to meet the expense. But the Forward Movement is capable of vast extension among us in the direction of enlisting meetings, schools, young people's societies or individuals in the support of particular fields, workers or students in schools. There are many Endeavor Societies that now give almost or quite nothing for missions that can easily support a boy or girl in some school or join with other societies in doing so. Our Quarterly Meeting Unions will find it easy to do so when they have not already undertaken similar work in connection with the Yearly Meeting Union, and doubtless many of them can add special contributions for a special object to what they are already giving. But it may be well to add that such work ought not to be undertaken without consultation with the officers or executive committee of the Yearly Meeting Unions.

New York Yearly Meeting Board of Home and Foreign Missions is making efforts to enlarge the Girls' School at Victoria, Mexico, and has been soliciting mission auxiliaries, Sabbath Schools and Endeavor Societies to undertake the support of one or more girls in the school, the estimated expense being $50.00 per year. Brooklyn Friends' Sabbath School, Ferrisburgh Quarterly Meeting Missionary Society, and Stanfordville Meeting have undertaken such work this winter, and it is hoped that others will pursue a similar course.

Here is an opportunity for every Yearly Meeting Union to push the Forward Movement in the interests of its own work, and to greatly increase the interest in, and the contributions for missions.

MISSIONARY READING COURSE.

The course of study for the Spring term is an exceedingly practical one, and calculated to give students an informing view of actual work in the field.

The text-book is the "Planting and Development of Missionary Churches," by the late J. L. Nevins, D.D., one of the foremost missionaries to China. Probably no one has done more than he to successfully inaugurate and carry forward the plans he describes, and to secure their adoption in many lands. One of the strongest of the American missionary organizations has given each of its missionaries a copy of this book to serve as a manual for personal guidance.

These text-books are now ready and can be ordered from the office of the "Volunteer Movement." Address F. P. Turner, 3 West 29th Street, New York city. Price 15 cents, paper; 25 cents, cloth. Cash must accompany the order.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR NEWS.

The Tenth Legion of Christian Endeavor now numbers over fourteen thousand.

Madagascar's recent Christian Endeavor Convention enrolled five hundred delegates.

Nearly fourteen thousand have joined the Christian Endeavor Comrades of the Quiet Hour.

"The Christian Endeavor World" of Third month 16th appears in an entire new dress of type and rearrangement of old departments, with several new and attractive features. The paper improves each year, and is worthy of its rapidly increasing subscription list.

There are now nearly six hundred Christian Endeavor Societies in London. What a royal welcome Christian Endeavor is to have in 1900!

The "giant" Junior Society of the world, as the "Golden Link," of Australia, calls that of Geelong, Australia, holds its meetings in four sections. The boys come direct from school, and have football and cricket sets to interest them until it is time for the meeting to begin.

BOOK NOTICE.

"The Underground Railway from Slavery to Freedom," by Wilbur H. Siebert, Associate Professor of European History in Ohio State University, with an Introduction by Albert Bushnell Hart, Professor of History in Harvard University. New York: The Macmillan Co., 1898. 8vo. Price $4.00.

This work merits the careful attention of every student of American History. It is the result of several years of labor, and represents the collecting of an immense amount of matter, a careful sifting of evidence, and the judicious arranging of the materials accumulated.

When it is remembered that, from the very nature of the case, written records and papers were, in the days of slavery, dangerous possessions, it will be recognized how much the future historian and student will be indebted to Professor Siebert for rescuing and putting on record the accounts of the surviving actors in this great movement, if such it may be called.

Other works have been written on the subject—as, for instance, the valuable book by William Still, of Philadelphia, himself an active officer of the "Railroad;" but all these works are mostly local in their treatment, while the present work covers the whole field, and is the first that treats the subject in a systematic manner.

The book can hardly be read without coming to the conclusion that the "Underground Railroad" was a more important factor in the history of our country than has been usually imagined.

Many of the accounts given are full of romance, and the sympathy of the reader goes out towards the poor refugees, while the admiration is excited for their bold "aiders and abettors," who broke what they felt to be unrighteous laws, risking property, liberty, and life itself on behalf of the fugitives.

The book is well illustrated with maps, views, portraits and facsimiles which add much to the interest of the volume. A map of the lines of the Underground Railroad is most interesting. Valuable appendices, containing among other things a list of over 3,000 underground operators, and a very full bibliography, add much to the value of the work.

The volume will be indispensable to the student of the history of slavery in the United States.

MARY AND MARGARET W. LEITCH.

"Not by might nor by power, but by my Spirit."

It was among the freedmen of the South, that these sisters began their eminent missionary career. Part of six happy, fruitful years were spent in abundant educational, temperance and evangelistic work for the colored people, in and around Alexandria, Va. A great awakening took place under their ministrations, the Spirit of God touched the hearts of men, many were brought to the Savior, some became leading Christian workers.

But the foreign field pressed upon these dear missionaries, and obeying their heavenly Guide they, with their brother, George W. Leitch, left all to take the Gospel to the shores of Asia. In 1879 they went out under the American Board at their own charges; later their brother was called home to America by the illness of their father.

Twenty years have passed, and "what hath God wrought" through Mary and Margaret W. Leitch, in Ceylon, India and Turkey. They located at Manepy, Ceylon, and as soon as they had gained a knowledge of the language they began the educational and evangelistical work which filled so large a part of those early years. They had charge of two teeming districts—three white faces among 20,000 brown ones. "Yet we were happy there," said one of the sisters. Later another large district was given to their charge and the care of the Girls' Boarding School at Oodoo-ville.

Their hands were now very full, but they secured the translation into Tamil of Gospel and temperance books and wrote "Seven Years in Ceylon," besides other missionary literature. They had the petition of the W. C. T. U. translated into twelve languages and with the leading missionaries secured 33,000 signatures, which were forwarded to Frances E. Willard. They organized the first Christian Endeavor Society in Ceylon. They gave invaluable aid to the Y. M. C. A. of Jaffna College from their own private income. They collected funds to found a general medical mission at Jaffna, and for five years held themselves responsible to give or collect the money needed for its current expenses. The Training and Industrial School at Tillipally, received funds through their earnest solicitation to erect new buildings and purchase needed equipment. In 1893 they interested influential Hindus, Singhalese, Mohammedans, and native Christians to found the Lady Havelock Hospital, at Colombo, Ceylon. It was built entirely by native contributions and is wholly under Christian management.

The Zenana Bible and Medical Mission in India received some thousands of dollars through their kind efforts. They saw the terrible effects of the opium traffic and inaugurated a protest. They arranged for a mass meeting. "An occasion never to be forgotten," wrote one of the sisters. "On the platform by the side of the missionaries of the different societies and government officials, sat Buddhist priests with shaven heads and yellow robes and fans, Hindu priests with brilliantly colored silken robes and gorgeous turbans, Mohammedans, and Parsees, and Salvation Army officers in their red and yellow uniforms. Every nationality and religion was voiced by a speaker and all united in denouncing the traffic. A petition to the government was drawn up and signed urging that the same restrictive measures be enacted in Ceylon as in Burma. The petition was widely circulated in different languages, secured 27,783 signatures, and much hope is entertained of a successful issue."

Jaffna College owes its present high standing and financial security to the appeals of these devoted workers, for an endowment fund. Other Christian institutions in Ceylon and India are not less indebted to them for princely contributions.

At the time of the Armenian massacre, these great-hearted women were temporarily in America. They sent out ringing appeals and very large sums of money were realized for the relief fund. The famine in India next claimed their help. How they gave it is a thrilling story. Theirs is a faith which "obtains promises." Above everything else they have sought to bring lost sheep to the Good Shepherd.

Many in Ceylon and elsewhere can speak of a hope in Jesus. Through these dear teachers heathen dwellings have been transformed into Christian homes, ruled by the law of love. These are some of the ways in which these devoted missionaries are serving their day through the signal blessing of their divine Master.

News from the Field.

Samuel Beck, who has spent five or six years in America in religious labors and travels, in Friends' homes and meetings, has returned to his home, Hastings, England.

Thomas Newlin and James R. Jones arrived on the St. Paul, on the 11th inst. Thomas Newlin attended Brooklyn Meeting on First-day morning and then started for his home in Oregon, stopping at Richmond, Ind., where his wife joined him. He was very kindly received in England and Ireland, and he received some liberal contributions to the institution which he represented.

James R. Jones stopped over in Philadelphia for a short visit on his way to his home in North Carolina.

INDIANA YEARLY MEETING.

Marion Quarterly Meeting was held Third month 10th, 11th and 12th.

Susan Ratliff, of Fairmount Quarterly Meeting was with us on Sixth-day.

She spoke from the text, "But seek ye first the kingdom of God," etc., which she thought some would consider a peculiar text for a meeting of ministers and elders.

On Seventh-day we had the company of William J. Thornberry, from Eastern Ohio, and Louisa Rush, from Fairmount—both with credentials. They both had messages for the meeting.

William Carson, from Missouri, and Enos Harvey, of Fairmount, were present and added a few remarks.

William Henderson, Principal of Fairmount Academy, asked that our Quarterly Meeting take part in the management of the Academy. A committee was appointed to investigate and report to next Quarter. A similar proposition is expected to come before Wabash Quarter.

First-day morning services began with songs and prayer. W. J. Thornberry gave a message.

Sabbath afternoon, instead of having a temperance discourse, as usual, we heard orations by seven young women on the subject of Prohibition.

Sabbath evening, W. J. Thornberry spoke on the theme of love—"Herein is love," "Love perfected in us," "Love is the essence of God, and not an attribute."

We had about the usual attendance for this season of the year.

J. R. S.

Richard Haworth, President of the Christian Endeavor of Indiana Yearly Meeting, had an appointment at Raysville on Sabbath morning, and in the evening at Knightstown.

His theme was, "Be as clay in the hands of the potter, that ye may become vessels of honor: worthy of the Master's use."

Our Yearly Meeting Superintendent, Joseph O. Binford, was also acceptably present.

The Friends of Spiceland Quarterly Meeting met in their remodeled house on the 11th and 12th.

Robert Douglas, of Ohio, Azail Bond, of Marion, Richard Haworth, President of C. E. work, were in attendance.

Robert Douglas' message for the church, "Be ye also enlarged," was of deep spiritual meaning and full of gospel truths.

Between four and five hundred dollars were pledged.

Carthage, Ind.—Daisy Barr began a series of meetings at Charlottesville Second month 6th, and closed Second month 23d. She earnestly presented the truth. The church was revived and several were convinced.

There were seven conversions and nine accessions to the church. Oliver Gotschall assisted in the meetings about nine days.

Friends here are earnestly desiring a pastor.

S. Rufina White held meetings at Center, beginning Second month 14th, closed Second month 21st. There was good interest, but on account of the prevalence of la grippe the meeting was postponed until a more convenient season.

Oliver Gotschall is expecting to attend twice a month at Riverside until Yearly Meeting.

CHAS. S. WINSLOW.

Lamong, Ind.—Thomas J. Holding commenced a series of meetings at this place on Christmas Day, holding twenty-nine meetings, which were greatly blessed of the Lord. His preaching was clear-cut, without fear or favor, on the line of full salvation and entire sanctification. The church was brought to see the need of a deeper work of grace in the heart, and many were brought to see their need and sought and obtained the Baptism with the Holy Spirit.

Josiah S. Hockett, of Scarsboro, Iowa, attended our Quarterly Meeting at Fairmount, Indiana, on Twelfth month last, and immediately after he commenced a series of meetings at Oak Ridge (22 sessions in all. He was ably assisted after the middle of the first week by our pastor, Micajah Morris, who was at that time just moving into our neighborhood. It was a pleasure to note how these two servants, coming from remote fields, stood shoulder to shoulder in the work, boldly declaring the whole truth, faithful in warning sinners to flee the wrath to come by turning to God, and accepting salvation on the terms of the gospel.

They were both signally led of the Spirit into the condition of the meeting. They saw clearly the danger of excessive individualism in the matter and manner of the leading of the Holy Ghost and were wonderfully blessed in setting his leading in conformity with the teaching of the Holy Scriptures.

We believe the call of our brothers to this field was of God, and that the word preached will accomplish that whereunto it was sent.

Josiah Hockett went from this meeting to North Grove, at which place he conducted a series of meetings of a week's duration, of which we hope to have a fuller report from that neighborhood.

BARCLAY JOHNSON.

Richmond, Ind.—The writer gratefully acknowledges the privilege granted him of holding a series of meetings with the students at Earlham College. It had been arranged some time in advance, and the Christian Associations, under the leadership of Professor Elbert Russell, had been constant in prayer and systematic in their efforts to have the conditions suitable for the reception of the blessing the Lord would be pleased to bestow. The students manifested the most loyal devotion, held prayer meetings and watched their opportunities to labor in love with the unsaved. Their work was so blessed as to result in a great readiness on the part of the latter to receive the Lord's blessing, and with the opening of the meetings the gracious presence of the Holy Spirit was manifested. There were four persons who received the new life who had never before been Christians. Ten who had once tasted the joys of the kingdom, but backslidden, were renewed, and ten made definite profession of a higher Christian life. Many others testified to the deepening of the work of grace in their hearts. The writer feels not the slightest claim to any credit for the results, but is simply grateful to have been permitted to witness the blessed work, and gives this information to THE FRIEND that others may also rejoice over this work of the Lord in one of our educational institutions. It is safe to say that over eighty per cent. of the students are active, professing Christians. Their testimony is that the conditions for Christian living are so favorable at the college that it is hard to resist them. Some testified that they could live Christians easily at the college, but feared the results when they had again been surrounded by their home influences.

The college pastoral work of Elbert Russell gives evidence of the Lord's blessing, and the Biblical Department just now receives a bequest from the late Sarah U. Brown, of Greensfork, of $3,000, and the residue of her estate goes to the mission work of Indiana Yearly Meeting in Mexico. The residue will be determined after the above amount and other bequests to relatives have been paid.

ELWOOD O. ELLIS.

CALIFORNIA YEARLY MEETING.

Visiting the Pacific coast from New England it has been our privilege and pleasure to attend during the past few weeks some of the Friends' meetings here in southern California. We are much impressed with the progress of Quakerism in this delightful and comparatively new country. The Friends of this section seem active and energetic, and there is surely no part of our fair country which offers a better field for work in the cause of Christ than here.

The recent Quarterly Meetings at Pasadena and Whittier, were inspiring and helpful, being characterized by earnestness and spirituality in both preaching and testimony. We have felt special interest in the fact that the Friends of Los Angeles are just entering on a vigorous campaign to secure a new meeting house in that city, which is greatly needed, and is an effort in which they deserve success and hearty encouragement.

A well-located corner lot has been secured at the intersection of Third Street and Fremont Avenue. On this site the proposed meeting-house will be not only within a few blocks of the business centre of the city, but in the very heart of what is destined to become one of the most attractive residence sections. At the same time it offers to Friends who may soon locate homes in Los Angeles, an opportunity to buy very desirable residence property in the immediate vicinity of the new meeting-house when built. The lot has recently been donated to the Society (by a kind friend whose name is being withheld by special request), and we consider the Friends of Los Angeles most fortunate in its possession, as it is bound to rapidly advance in value, both for their special purpose and from a real estate standpoint, on account of important work now being done in the neighborhood by the city government.

Los Angeles is a wide-awake, enterprising and beautiful city of about 100,000 population, the focus of trade and metropolis of southern California. The streets are clean, the business blocks handsome and substantial, and the city will double in population at an early date. The Federal Government has recently begun the construction of a good deep-water harbor but a short distance from the city which will become an important factor in its future development.

In Los Angeles, of all cities in southern California, the Society of Friends should have a strong work, and Quakerism should make itself felt as an important factor of the city's life and growth. Many young people who are Friends have come to Los Angeles in the recent past, but being not strongly attracted to the Friends' meeting, which is now held in temporary quarters, and therefore but meagrely accommodated as to a house for worship, have gone into other churches or drifted away from any. The meeting is favored with good ministry and eldership, but in its present quarters has no chance for the growth which we are sure it will experience in a new house. It is therefore a pleasure to realize that in the very near future the conditions may be changed, and visitors and new residents in Los Angeles may find there a representative Friends' Meeting housed in a place of worship that will fairly represent the Society and what it stands for.

At the monthly meeting held on the 11th inst., seven new members were received, four by certificate, three by request. At the same meeting plans were exhibited and discussed for the new house. The designs submitted were very attractive, and the building proposed will accommodate from 300 to 500 in total seating capacity, including good accommodations for the Bible School. The house will probably cost about $3,000 or perhaps a little more, and it is the earnest desire of the meeting to raise the necessary sum complete, that the building may be finished without incurring debt.

As the Friends of Los Angeles are not numerically nor financially strong at present, they need, and deserve, all the help that can be given them in their effort. California Yearly Meeting will undoubtedly help them all it can, but as this is the smallest, as well as the youngest, of our yearly meetings, even its resources are somewhat limited. To Friends all over the United States, earnest in the cause of Quakerism, it will be a matter of interest that the queen city of the southern Pacific coast shall have a representative Friends' meeting, and we bespeak for the Los Angeles Friends practical and substantial help from every yearly meeting in the country in their effort in this direction.

GEORGE L. CROSMAN.

Pasadena, California.

IOWA YEARLY MEETING.

Oskaloosa Quarterly Meeting of Friends was held Second month 24th to 26th, 1899, at Albia, Iowa. This meeting was well attended, about forty from other places being present, among this number our brother, Pliny Fry, of Muscatine.

Arrangements were made for doctrinal discourses for Sixth-day evening. Two subjects were treated upon, "The Atonement," by Pliny Fry, and "The Second Coming of the Lord," by Edwin Loft. The presence and power of the Lord were deeply felt as these precious doctrines were presented. Seventh-day morning meeting for worship the speakers were Pliny Fry, Edwin Loft and Anna K. Symons. During the afternoon session many testimonies, glowing with the love of Jesus, were given. At this time Brother Fry made mention of the conviction of his heart that great prosperity and success awaited Oklahoma Quarterly Meeting if it would be faithful and meet the conditions. In the evening Minnie Picket Bowles, who has spent five years as a missionary in Japan, gave a very interesting talk concerning the work there. In speaking of some ways of helping the work she mentioned that of prayer. How many times, she said, did the worker feel that some one at home was praying for them? Surely we have not done all we can until we have prayed all we can.

Sabbath morning helpful messages were given by Edwin Loft, Pliny Fry and Anna K. Symons. This was a time of great refreshing. An altar call was made, and eleven souls seeking pardon or entire sanctification came to the altar. Showers of blessings fell upon us. Minnie Picket Bowles led a children's meeting in afternoon, telling them of the Japanese children, the idols, etc., and using the text, "Little children, keep yourselves from idols." Brother Loft conducted the night service, and five souls came forward. Truly the Lord is good. "He crowneth us with loving kindness and tender mercies."

ELOISE TINSLEY.

Oskaloosa Quarterly Meeting was held at Albia, Iowa, on the 24th, 25th and 26th of Second month. The power of the Lord was felt in every session. A revival meeting commenced on First-day following. The meetings were conducted by Evangelist Edwin Loft, of New Sharon, assisted part of the time by Brother Sanders, of Des Moines. The Lord wonderfully blessed the work. Forty-six souls were converted, reclaimed or sanctified in eleven days. The meeting is still going on, and a fuller report of the work will be given.

Our friend, Amanda Way, writes from Boise City, Idaho, that for two Sabbaths large audiences have attended the new meeting there, and the Sabbath School has been large. The work, she says, is opening gloriously, but they are hoping and praying for some live, earnest workers to help build up a strong church in this new city.

KANSAS YEARLY MEETING.

Dorwin Gidley has removed with his family from Cottonwood Falls to Claffin, Kansas, to engage in pastoral work in Bethel Monthly Meeting, which belongs to Sterling Quarterly Meeting.

WESTERN YEARLY MEETING.

Bloomington, Ind.—On the 19th of Second month a series of meetings was commenced at this place, which continued two weeks. Two sessions a day were held the first week and one each evening on the second week.

The work was done by our home workers, led by Alice A. Mendenhall.

The teaching was clear, simple, and of a nature to bring conviction of the truth to teachable minds.

This was supplemented by quiet but effective personal work.

Without undue pressure, the invitation to "Come to Jesus" and find in Him the supply of need was cordially and lovingly held out.

A number took definite steps, and are giving unmistakable evidence of a real change of heart and life.

A deep under-current of serious thoughtfulness and candid consideration exists, and we believe that much good will be the result of influences brought to bear by this special effort.

On behalf of the Evangelistic Committee.

JOSEPH PARKER.

NEW YORK YEARLY MEETING.

Batavia, N. Y.—Our friend, Luke Woodard, conducted sixteen meetings at Batavia (in New York Yearly Meeting) besides attending two social gatherings, in which he took part.

His dear wife was able to attend nearly all of the meetings, but has since returned home on account of sickness in the family.

The preaching of our brother, Luke Woodard, is in the demonstration of the Spirit and with power, devoid of any attempt at sensationalism. Definite work was done in the salvation of precious souls and the strengthening of believers.

Our brother has gone to Glens Falls, and after completing his service there expects to visit Elba and Macedon, and attend quarterly meeting at Farmington. [Many in this Quarterly Meeting, who were brought to the Saviour under the ministry of our brother in former years, are glad to greet him once more and listen to his sound and clear presentation of gospel truth. Added years and experience inspire confidence in his instructive sermons, his former earnestness being still manifest, for which we praise God and ascribe to Him all the glory.] H. H. LEGGETT.

NEW ENGLAND YEARLY MEETING.

Sandwich Quarterly Meeting will be held for the first time as a "united meeting" at New Bedford, Mass., on Fourth month 13th, 1899.

Friends within the limits of the Quarterly Meeting are earnestly requested to attend at that time, and others are cordially invited.

Meeting begins at 11 a.m.

NORTH CAROLINA YEARLY MEETING.

Deep River Quarterly Meeting was held at Springfield on the 4th inst. The mud in the roads was so deep that but few attended—about 60.

David E. Sampson, minister, from Yadkin Valley Quarter, led in a fervent prayer for the members of the Quarterly Meeting present and absent—that it might be so led and blessed of the Lord as to increase in power and numbers. He seemed specially moved in the close of his prayer to invoke divine protection for James Read Jones, who at that time, according to arrangement, was embarking from England on his homeward voyage.

David Sampson presented strongly in his sermon the great importance of teaching all nations, "baptizing them in the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost," claiming that Friends are stronger Baptists than the other denominations—because they insist on that baptism which is of the heart, the life, and not of the flesh.

Having this baptism—the "One Baptism" that is essential—and then praying in the "name" of the Father, He will give, and then "Lo, I am with you alway" will be realized. He said, "I believe if we are thus baptized, and thus ask, we shall always receive just what we pray for." So he exhorted those of us who hitherto have asked nothing in the "name" of Jesus to ask and receive, that our joy may be full.

George Wood, minister, of the quarterly meeting, insisted forcibly and earnestly that we should "stand fast in the liberty wherewith Christ has made us free, and be not entangled again with the yoke of bondage," and not sell out and try to worship by proxy. There was little out of the ordinary in the business meeting, except the lack of love and unity was all reported as among the men and none among the women.

One Friend deplored the meagre attendance of younger Friends—not at this meeting especially, but at meetings generally. Another Friend joined in the same strain and expressed the fear that the idolatry of culture is one of the hindering causes.

Another Friend thought young Friends not less pious but more pious than young Friends in the past, and believed the picture drawn was of a gloomier shade than it ought to be. One of the younger Friends asked whether the cause of small attendance of meetings was in the young people or in the meetings. An older Friend said the manner and methods of conducting the business meetings are responsible for the lack of attendance on the part of younger people.

The previous session was on ministry and oversight. In it the importance of putting a high estimate upon the Holy Scriptures was discussed, and the weight of the meeting was for high regard for the Scriptures and against the elimination of much of them, as advocated in some quarters of the Christian world. The sense of the meeting appeared to be against substituting or using matter from books and papers other than the Bible in devotional or religious meetings, or on occasions in families, at opening or closing daily sessions of schools, colleges, etc., and also against ministers reading extracts from papers in their sermons.

Died.

BARNARD.—Franklin Barnard, son of Asa and Hulda Barnard, died in Shelby Co., North Carolina, First month 17th, 1899, aged 84 years, 6 months and 26 days.

He gave his heart to God in early manhood, and he lived a consistent life, serving a number of years as elder in the church of his choice. We believe his life, as a follower of Christ, has been one to imitate.

He was a member of Little Blue River Monthly Meeting.

BRANSON.—Eva J. Hall was born near Azalia, Indiana, Eleventh month 30th, 1863. She came to New Providence, Iowa, in 1869, with her parents. She was married to John L. Branson, Tenth month 31st, 1880. She was the mother of six children, four of whom are living. She was a life-long member with Friends, and departed this life Third month 2d, 1899, aged 35 years, 3 months and 2 days.

BUTLER.—Lucinda P. Butler, wife of Robert Butler, fell asleep in Jesus, First month 22d, 1899, at their home at Barclay, Kansas, aged 51 years, 2 months and 3 days.

Her Christian life, and especially the last year of it, was such that the meeting, in which she was an overseer, the Bible School, in which she was a teacher, and the community, in which she revealed the Christ-life, all join with her husband and only daughter in mourning the loss of the loved one.

GRAY.—John E. Gray, son of Lilburn and Malinda Gray, died suddenly, Tenth month 6th, 1898, aged 32 years, 5 months and 1 day.

He joined Friends in Tenth month, 1890, and was a member of Olive Branch, Indiana, Monthly Meeting at the time of his death.

HADLEY.—Lucy Hadley died, First month 26th, 1899, aged 9 years and 27 days.

Hattie Hadley died, Second month 13th, 1899, aged 11 months and 19 days.

Hervy Hadley died Second month 18th, 1899, aged 11 years 5 months and 20 days.

These were all children of Erwin and Edith Hadley, and were members of Medway Monthly Meeting, Syracuse, Hamilton Co., Kansas.

Neighbors and friends extend their sincere sympathy, and the bright, happy faces of these dear children will be sadly missed in the Sabbath and day schools.

HUNNICUTT.—Mary A. Hunnicutt died Third month 9th, 1899, at the residence of her son-in-law, John Nicholson, Baltimore, Md., aged 82 years.

She was a member of Baltimore Monthly Meeting.

PAINTER.—Joanna T. Painter, at her home in Marshalltown, Iowa, Third month 9th, 1899, in the 69th year of her age. She was a daughter of Ashly and Lydia Johnson (both deceased), and was united in marriage, in 1852, to Isaac Painter, and settled in Iowa in 1870.

She gave, during her protracted illness, repeated assurances of her complete salvation. Her whole life, indeed, had been a beautiful exemplification of the religion of Jesus Christ. She was an elder in the church.

News and Events.

The army beef Court of Inquiry took testimony last week at Fort Leavenworth, Kansas, and Kansas City, Missouri. Direct evidence was produced at the former to the effect that beef furnished the army was in certain instances chemically treated. A sergeant in the First United States Cavalry testified that an agent of Armour & Co. had told him that a consignment of beef at Lakeland, near Tampa, which was covered with a glossy surface like paraffine, had been treated with "preservative." This witness's evidence was particularly direct and convincing. It has further been brought out before the Court that what has been so long called canned roast beef is really only canned boiled beef. On General Eagan's order a large amount of this meat was forwarded to the army directly without inspection, and a supply of unsold canned meat at Liverpool was likewise bought for the use of the army without question. General Eagan appears to have favored the packers. His retirement from service because of the fierce attack which he made upon his superiors is appearing daily more justifiable.

An act passed by Congress in the last hours of its session provides Alaska with its own code of laws in place of Oregon's. This action came none too soon, for the misgovernment of this country is becoming unbearably notorious. It is said that the citizens of Fort Wrangel, one of the most important of the Alaska towns, are drawing up a petition praying that the town be ceded to Canada, under whose protection it is claimed the place would be more likely to prosper. The petitioners claim that "the territory has been abused and neglected, and that the present laws are unfit to live under." It is a striking commentary on this action that out of sixty officials, in whose hands is the government of Alaska, only half a dozen are residents in the country. The spoils system in its worst form has prevailed in the territory for years. It is sincerely to be hoped that a better form of government will be established in our more recently acquired dependencies.

Popular demonstrations in Havana last week in honor of General Gomez show that the late action of the Cuban Assembly in deposing him is not generally acceptable to the people, and that he remains the idol of the island. The police of Havana, however, are not such ardent supporters of this Cuban Nestor, and while interfering with the demonstrations brought on serious rioting. Many persons were wounded, and some seriously. The police are unpopular, and their action has been severely criticized. Gomez has conferred with Major-General Brooke, and it is said will arrange, himself, for distributing the $3,000,000 allotted by the United States to the Cuban soldiers.

An important item in the treaty about to be finally ratified is the clause providing for the adjustment by the United States of all claims brought against Spain for damages during the recent conflicts in Cuba. Already the total amount of these claims comes to $20,000,000, and even with a liberal paring down in the settlement, the expense thus involved will add another large burden to our exchequer.

The Queen has signed the Paris Treaty of Peace, and the exchange of ratifications will not long be delayed. The French Ambassador at Washington, M. Cambon, will represent Spain, and will present the copy of the treaty upon its arrival in this country. It will have been just one year, on the 19th of April, since war was declared, and it would be significant if the treaty should be ratified at or near that date, as now seems quite possible.

The American troops, under General Wheaton, advanced last week upon the rebel lines, and drove them from their position near Manila. Pasig, just east of this city, was captured, and the waters of Laguna de Bay are now in our control. Many Filipinos were killed, and a greater number taken prisoners. The censored despatches picture the situation most hopefully, and indicate an early conclusion of hostilities. It is certain that the American troops advance more aggressively than Spain's ever did, but so long as the rebel leaders remain safe, and with the influence over their followers retained, the end of the war will continue to remain uncertain. Aguinaldo has everything to gain and nothing to lose, and he appears to have a strong hold upon the natives.

"Oh, my friends, there are some spectacles that one never forgets!" said a lecturer, after giving a graphic description of a terrible accident he had witnessed. "I'd like to know where they sell 'em," remarked an old lady in the audience, who is always mislaying her glasses.—"Tit-Bits."

Drinking is, after all, only a pronounced symptom of a large vice—self-indulgence; and self-indulgence is always fatal in the long run to all the habits and activities which men properly honor.—R. F. Horton.

Nineteen years ago Mrs. Charles Goodnight, then living on her husband's great ranch of 40,000 acres in northwestern Texas, set out to preserve a herd of buffaloes. These animals had then almost wholly disappeared from the plains, where vast numbers of them had ranged a few years earlier and Mr. Goodnight, with much difficulty, captured eight or ten. From this beginning there has grown up a herd of forty-five pure-bred buffaloes in the tract of 600 acres which was originally set apart for them at Mrs. Goodnight's request. There is also on the ranch a herd of sixty cross-breeds, in which the qualities of both the buffalo and of Polled Angus or Gallo-way cattle are seen. Mrs. Goodnight was the first white woman to become a resident of the region in which the ranch is situated, and the church and schoolhouse on her husband's land are her especial care.—"The Independent."

"The Living Church" tells this story of a bishop who sought to go about his somewhat neglected diocese doing good:

The bishop of—never mind where—being a newcomer, thought to inspire his clergy to take occasional services during the week by periodically visiting out-of-the-way parishes and taking one himself. On one of these occasions, having formed quite a good congregation, and having been moved to much eloquence in his sermon, he felt a little not unnatural desire to know if he had made any impression on the usually unimpressible yokels, and put some leading questions to the old clerk, who was helping him to unrobe in the vestry.

"Well, I hope they've been pleased with yer," said the old man, patronizingly, "and I'm sure we tuk it werry kind o' yer worship to come down and preach ter us; but yer know, a worsser one would ha' done for the likes o' we, if so be," he added, with becoming humility, "one could ha' bin found."

The "Century Magazine" has arranged for a series of articles on the present war, somewhat in the manner of its famous "Battles and Leaders of the Civil War." The series will be entitled, "Battles and Leaders, Places and Problems of the Spanish-American War," and a number of important articles are already promised for it.

The Foni of Corfu vouches for this anecdote of the late Empress of Austria. On one of her majesty's walks she stopped to look at a rosy-cheeked, barefoot lass who sat plying her distaff just inside her cabin door, near Gastouri. Presently the Empress entered, drew a wooden stool toward her and sat down. The girl was bewildered, and could only exclaim, "Oh, gracious Queen, you deign to do that?" "And why not?" returned the august visitor, in the fluent Greek that so greatly delighted the Corfiotes to whom she spoke. "Are we not both women? And you, in a sense, the superior—for your hands can do much of which mine are incapable?" And the girl went about telling every one what the Empress had said to her.

JOTTINGS.

Our new ambassador to the Court of St. James, Joseph Choate, has already made himself popular in England, and his speech last week at the banquet of the Association of Chambers of Commerce of the United Kingdom, has been well received and most favorably commented upon by the English press.

Princess Kaiulani, of Hawaii, died of inflammatory rheumatism on the 6th of last month. She was declared heir-apparent to the throne by Queen Liliuokalani before the dissolution of the monarchy; and, after the establishment of the Republic, was awarded a pension. She was in the twenty-fourth year of her age.

President McKinley is taking a vacation which he has long needed. He has been with Senator Hanna, at his home in Thomasville, Ga., for several days.

The battleship Oregon arrived at Manila on the 18th, "in fit condition for any duty," as reported by Admiral Dewey.

Herbert Putnam, of Boston, has been appointed by the President Librarian of Congress. He is generally acknowledged to be the most efficient candidate that could have been selected. As Librarian of the Boston Library he receives a salary of $6,000 a year, while that paid by the Congressional is only $5,000. It is likely that the latter will be increased to the amount paid by the Boston Library.

A frightful fire occurred in New York City on the 17th, when the Windsor hotel was completely consumed with flames in an incredibly short time. A number of persons were killed, and many are reported still missing. The Windsor was one of New York's most fashionable hotels.

The exports from the United States now exceed the exports from Great Britain, according to the figures of the Bureau of Statistics. The growth of America's foreign trade in twenty years has been 62 per cent., while Great Britain's increased about 22 per cent in the same time.

It appears that the condition of the Pope continues to improve, notwithstanding the occasional alarming reports to the contrary.

Shortly before his assassination Lincoln had a strange dream, which he related to his wife and Mr. Lamon, his former law partner.

"I retired late, for I had waited up for important dispatches, and I soon fell into a light slumber. I dreamed there was a death-like stillness about me, but still I could hear the subdued sobs of a number of people. I left my room, went all through the house in my dream, everywhere the same weeping and wailing, but I could see nobody. Finally I went into the east room, and there I saw a coffin with many soldiers as guard.

"Who is dead in the White House?" I asked.

"Why, don't you know, said one of the soldiers, 'the President has been assassinated.' Then a loud burst of grief came from the crowd, and with that I awoke."

Mrs. Lincoln remembered the dream on the fatal night of his death, and cried out:

"His dream was prophetic!"

HULDA:

The Pentecostal Prophetess.

BY BYRON J. REES.

152 Pages. Bound in Cloth. Price, 50c., postpaid.

A short life story and seventeen of the sermons of Hulda A. Rees, together with her portrait and picture of her early church. This book needs no other introduction than for the reader to know that seventeen of her sermons, which Sister Rees preached with such accompaniments of power and blessing, are for the most part to compose it. The life-story is short yet comprehensive, the writer of it avoiding anything of a eulogistic nature and making the facts of the life serve as an appropriate introduction to the character back of the sermons.

Mrs. E. E. Williams, in a beautiful poem, which is also a part of the book, gives some refreshing glimpses into the character of Sister Rees.

Esther T. Pritchard also contributes a "Tribute," glowing with fervor and truth.

The following epitaph, by Pope, was highly commended by Johnson. It was written to keep alive the memory of Elizabeth Corbett, who sleeps now in St. Margaret's, Westminster:

Here rests a woman, good without pretense,
Blest with plain reason and with sober sense;

No conquest she, but o'er herself, desired;
No arts essayed, but not to be admired.
Passion and pride were to her soul unknown.

Convinced that virtue only is our own.

WHEN YOUTH IS GONE.

How can we know when youth is gone—
When age has surely come at last?
There is no marked meridian
Through which we sail, and feel when past

A chillier current swifter run;
They meet and glide like tide with tide,
Our youth and age, when youth is done.

A WOMAN'S LIFE WORK.

Including Thirty Year's Service on the Underground Railroad and in the War.
BY LAURA HAVILAND.

This is a story of a wonderful life. The author was an active Anti-Slavery agitator and through her underground railroad work assisted hundreds of slaves to escape from bondage. During the war she spent about two years taking care of the sick and wounded. Through her efforts more than 2,000 Union Soldiers were liberated. She accomplished a great work in providing for the Freedmen of Kansas after the close of the war. She was the founder of the State Public School, at Coldwater, Mich., an institution which was the first of its kind in the world. The Industrial School for Girls at Adrian Mich., almost utterly owes its first existence, and especially its name to her efforts. Haviland Academy at Haviland, Kansas, was named in her honor, as also the town in which it is located. At the World's Fair she was introduced by President Palmer as "The Mother of Philanthropy," and well she deserves the title. Her experience as told in this book will be read with thrilling interest.

This book is printed on good paper and contains 625 pages. It is bound in cloth with red edges. The retail price of the book is $1.50. We will send it postpaid, for $1.00. Address,

WHY OUR YOUNG MEN SHOULD NOT RUSH TO OUR COLONIES.

In the opinion of those amply qualified to judge, it would be unwise for people to rush to our new possessions with the expectation of readily finding profitable business connections, for many months to come.

It should be remembered that there were several millions of people on the various islands long before we had our present interest in them; that a large amount of capital was invested in local industries, some of great extent; and that, since American occupation or possession became apparent, numerous syndicates, backed with unlimited capital, have quietly secured control of all those interests that promised the best immediate results for the investors.

Large capital may yet find profitable employment; but without it the probabilities of success are very slight. A great reorganizing work has yet to be accomplished,

Lord, I know not what I ought to ask of Thee; Thou only knowest what we need; Thou lovest me better than I know how to love myself. O, Father, give to thy child that which he himself knows not how to ask. I dare not ask either for crosses or consolations; I simply present myself before Thee. Behold my needs, which I know not myself; see and do according to Thy tender mercy. Smite or heal; depress or raise me up; I adore all Thy purposes without knowing them; I am silent; I offer myself in sacrifice; I yield myself to Thee; I would have no other desire than to accomplish Thy will. Teach me to pray; pray Thyself in me.—FENELON.

WHERE JESUS IS FOUND.

Never in a costly palace did I rest on golden bed.
Never in a hermit's cavern have I eaten idle bread.

Born within a lowly stable, where the cattle round me stood,
Trained a carpenter in Nazareth, I have toiled, and found it good.

They who tread the path of labor follow where my feet have trod;
They who work without complaining do the holy will of God.

Where the many toil together, there am I among my own;
Where the tired workman sleepeth, there am I with him alone.

I, the peace that passeth knowledge, dwell amid the daily strife,
I, the bread of heaven, am broken in the sacrament of life.

EASTER SONG.

How fitting 'tis thou art so fair,
O white, white leaf of the lily!
Since thine it is to bloom in prayer,
And make the Easter morning rare,
O white, white leaf of the lily!

A fleckless fold God fashioned thee,
O white, white leaf of the lily!
To symbolize the sanctity
Of Christ arising victor free,
O white, white leaf of the lily!

I would that all my soul were white,
O white, white leaf of the lily!
That dew of duty fall to-night,
And cleanse it into Easter light,
O white, white leaf of the lily!

OUR THOUGHT OF GOD.

It is an old and much-discussed question, whether it is our thought, or our will, or our emotions that determines our life, and makes us what we are. One man maintains that the "thought" is the root and spring of the whole being. "Only think right and the life will be all right." Another man finds this teaching entirely wrong, and concludes that the "feelings" are the main thing. "The life is shaped by the emotions, by what we care for, by what we love."

"Oh! no," says the third man, "not that at all. The life is determined by the choices you make, by your resolves, by your decisions, by what you WILL."

Now the mistake in all this comes from breaking the man up into three distinct parts and treating one of them as though it were the whole man. Thought and Will and Feeling never work singly or independently. They are all three together in all our acts and in all our life. They can no more be separated than the sky and air, or light and color can be separated.

The question has never been settled which one of these functions lies at the root of character, or of religious life, for it would be impossible to get a complete character or a genuine religious life with any one of the three functions gone. Anyone who has difficulty in comprehending the doctrine of the Trinity will find, if he looks at it, the same difficulty in comprehending how ONE SELF in his own nature can have three indissoluble, interwoven strands—in fact, three entirely different manifestations, which together make one consciousness.

But notwithstanding all this, we want still to emphasize the fact that it is tremendously important how a man THINKS. Wrong thought and wrong belief make imperfect lives every time. "My people will not think!" is Isaiah's constant burden.

Analyze an imperfect, weak, unproductive Christian life, and you will always find that his thought of God is wrong, or at least very crude and imperfect. Let a man, on the other hand, once get his mind filled with Christ's conception of God, and his life begins to unfold and expand. It is like bringing a plant out of the cellar into the sunlight. Go back without any prejudices and preconceived ideas and see how simple Christ's idea of God is. He is a heavenly Father and His will is to have all His children like Himself. His kingdom comes wherever His will is done. True life consists in being about the Father's business. He is like the light which floods the earth, and He seeks to penetrate every dark spot. His heart is touched with all our burdens and sorrows, grieved over our errors and our waywardness, and He gives His own Son, His very self, to win us and draw us to Him. The essence of His nature is Love, and He reveals Himself and His Love that we may learn Love and so become like Him.

DO WE EVER UNDERSTAND EACH OTHER?

Is it possible to look at anything in this world without coloring it with a tint from our own ideas? Can we ever see what another person means just as he means it, and do not we rather always see his meaning through our own colored glasses? In other words do we ever fully understand each other? Probably not. But we jump to the conclusion that the person in question meant "so-and-so" and then we go to work to pass judgment as though we were infallible.

It would be amusing, if it were not so serious, to consider how "infallible" mortals pass judgment on each other, as though they were gods and knew "the thoughts and intents" of every heart, and yet it can easily be shown that not one of us ever truly knows the deeper nature and meaning of another human heart.

We disagree and waste a multitude of words on some theological question at issue, and grow hot against our fellow when really the main disagreement comes from the different use of words rather than from a vital difference of view, and after hours of talk we find that we mean pretty much the same thing.

Most of the things we talk about have no labels on—no "trade-marks" to help us recognize the real article which we want—and so we are quite at the mercy of our prejudices. We make up our mind beforehand, and we try to make everything conform to these cut-and-dried ideas of ours. Instead of making our ideas square with the facts, we make the facts square with our ideas.

A man comes along with some teaching which does not seem to fit with our hard and fast idea, and we say: "See here that will never do; the truth is thus and so, and your teaching does not fit with it." "But," says the man, "you do not understand what I mean; I have got hold of a deeper truth than that which you hold. Let me show it to you." "No," answers the objector, "it does not sound a bit like the truth I have always held from my youth up, and I do not want any of your new labels or trade-marks. I want the straight goods."

This warfare between the new and the old, between the smaller and the larger truth, has always gone on, and perhaps always will go on, because it is so difficult to remove our colored glasses. But after all the world gets on this way, and in time the larger truth always does displace the smaller truth. The eternal years of God are with the truth. The little dams which we build out of our prejudices and the dikes which we make with our narrow, unyielding ideas only swells the force of the resistless current of eternal truth which in its own time will sweep through all obstruction and leave our old conceptions high and dry, as driftwood rubbish on the shore.

TWO MISSIONARY HELPERS.

OUR Friends, Timothy B. and Anna M. Hussey, of North Berwick, Maine, are again at their home after nearly two years of loving and valuable service in the Ramallah Mission in Palestine. Few missions have been more fortunate than this one. As soon as Eli Jones, whose interest in this work had practically no limits, was called away by death, Timothy B. Hussey and his wife devoted themselves heart and soul to it. Theirs again is no ordinary interest. When the mission has needed them they have gone there willingly, and carried on the work until they could leave it safely to other hands.

The success of this extensive mission work in and about Ramallah is largely due to the fact that it has had the careful, patient, persistent oversight of such practical, successful and genial persons. And we must not pass over the devoted labors and sacrifices of these two Friends as though it were an ordinary thing for them to leave an extensive business, a comfortable home, a large family circle at their period of mature life to wrestle with the problems of a great mission in another hemisphere of the world. But this is precisely the way to do the Lord's work, namely, to consider it work of the first importance, and for which everything else must be left. These Friends have been much missed in their home and in their Yearly Meeting, but they have been about their "Father's business," and their work will not cease to bear fruit.

No one has ever endured persecution with submission and patience but the world has been made better. Every tear shed in witnessing to the truth has fertilized one spot of the earth. Every drop of martyr blood that has fallen to the ground has caused some plant of righteousness to grow more luxuriantly.—J. R. Miller.

For THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

THE ACTIVE WORK OF PHILADELPHIA FRIENDS. XI.

J. HENRY BARTLETT.

The concluding sentences of William Wistar Comfort's recent interesting article in THE AMERICAN FRIEND, seem to form an introduction to some notice of the hospital work of Philadelphia Friends. The translated sentences are, "The Friends (Amis) have at Philadelphia many institutions pleasantly situated in open places and surrounded by gardens where they cultivate medicinal plants. A health officer visits these asylums regularly, where aid of all kinds is given to those who are admitted according to the nature of their needs." This doubtless is a French visitor's understanding of the earlier form of that indispensable modern institution, the city hospital, and it cast an amiable light upon the benevolences of early Friends.

As a matter of fact the hospital work of the city originated in Friends' Meeting and it reflects a little light upon the attitude of Friends of that day toward denominationalism to observe that almost immediately the concern was taken out of the hands of the meeting and entrusted to a board of managers. This indeed seems to have been the course with the numerous undertakings in which the members of the Society engaged at that time. As one has said in regard to another matter, they labored for "the supremacy of those Christian doctrines (and practices) which transcend denominations and sects." We see in this aspect of Quakerism the practical side of that universal philosophy for which the Quaker stood, and of which George Bancroft has written so eloquently in his United States History. The "taint of sect" was not upon their work, and if this breadth of view weakened their organization they believed that it made them more complete as men and women dedicated to the Master's service.

The history of the great Pennsylvania Hospital is a record of merit for a long list of worthy Friends. Dr. Morton, in his recently published work, recites the fact of its origin in a monthly meeting, and apparently gives Friends the credit that belongs to them in the matter. It is needless to recount, even in abstract, the salient points of this history. Two things, however, we may properly observe. The type of the work all the time has been that which speaks out from the great picture of West's that hangs in the old operating room. "Christ Healing the Sick" is very properly the emblem of the whole place. The scientific atmosphere so proper to a hospital does not conceal—makes no effort to conceal—the Christ spirit that pervades it. The chastened saint and the hardened sinner may lie in cots side by side. The one goes on his way rejoicing, the other can hardly escape without an emphatic "Sin no more." Doubtless much of this is an unconscious influence, but none the less it is real and it would be easy to cite instances to portray it.

Besides this religious atmosphere about the place the other noteworthy characteristic is its progressiveness. Doubtless, experts could be found to complain of its conservatism, but even a slight study of the management convinces one of the wholesomeness of this conservatism. Real progress there has been all the time, and a happy preservation from "fads" is hardly a sin in hospital management. If one needed evidence of progress, the enormous outlay for new buildings in the past decade, aggregating, we understand, a million dollars, is certainly tangible enough.

It may seem to some minds a bold assumption to credit a great institution like the Pennsylvania Hospital to the Society of Friends. Certainly, as we have said before, its foundation principles were too broad to make it right to classify it as denominational work at all, but half the members of its Board of Managers are Friends, and some tithe of Friendly influence reaches each of its four hundred beds and its more than that number of patients in the Insane Department. As an example of what I mean by a "tithe of Friendly influence," I might cite the testimony of an unfortunate in the Eastern Penitentiary, who told me that he had received some Christian instruction under the "Quakers" at the Pennsylvania Hospital. In this instance the instruction had not kept the man out of trouble, but it had remained in his experience as a starting point for better things.

Beginning with the great Pennsylvania Hospital, our city has become a City of Hospitals. Four others, at least, have the mark of the Friend upon them and have claimed much of time and money at the hands of many Friends. The effort of these good people has, of course, been to do good hospital work, but the motive that has drawn them on all the time has been a sense that it is part of their Lord's mission to heal the sick. There is naturally some difference of opinion as to the wisdom of mixed association in boards of management, but the faithful Friend is often touched to find how large a place of appreciation there is amongst others for his special testimonies. Thus, out of deference to the Friend, a simple Bible reading, with a pause of silence for prayer, has in not a few cases been substituted for a formal prayer at the opening of board meetings, and in the hospital boards above mentioned the proceeds of charity balls and similar undertakings for raising money have more than once been refused from the same cause.

The qualities of the real Friend, even in George Fox's conception, required contact and association with the world for their development, else how could they be supposed to shake the country for ten miles round? This shaking process, as years go on and society becomes more highly organized, may gradually be so concealed as to be entirely overlooked. Thus, to outsiders, a given people or denomination may seem lethargic or dead. They have effaced themselves, but their influence and their work is not lost. Not unlikely in the final estimate they are to be counted as of great moment in hastening the day when "they shall all be one," and it has seemed to us that Philadelphia Friends, in their hospital work, must be included in this count.

FOR THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

HOW THE INDIAN IS BEING EDUCATED.

BY M. Z. KIRK.

Haskell Institute, the government Indian school, is located at Lawrence, Kansas. Dr. C. R. Dixon, the physician, and now the assistant superintendent of the school, is a widely-known Friend, and he was our guide through the Institute.

As we approach the Institute we see the little stone

office, beyond which is the girls' dormitory, built at a cost of $35,000, then the small boys' dormitory, the school building, the large boys' dormitory, the assistant superintendent's residence, and the new auditorium, which has just been dedicated. To the rear of these are the various shops and barns, and to one side the hospital.

To many of us the word "Indian" recalls tepees, wick-i-ups, and red men adorned in feathers and paint and clothed in buckskin and blankets. In fact, many of the children we are now about to visit have been raised in just such homes, but we shall see how Uncle Sam treats them. On entering the kindergarten department we find about twenty little Indians, who are instructed by one of the most efficient teachers in this line, Mary G. Richards, one of our Friends from Richmond, Ind. The children are well provided with all the modern kindergarten appliances. The teacher is ably assisted by students from the normal department. From this we pass from room to room and find these little red men instructed according to the most modern methods and by competent instructors, under the charge of a superintendent of schools. Two of the twelve rooms are taught by Indians. The work here not only includes the common school branches, but a three years' normal course is given. The graduates go out from this department, return to the territory and teach in mission, public and government schools; others return to home life, while several take advanced work in normal schools, colleges and universities. The commercial department gives a two years' course in writing, bookkeeping, typewriting, shorthand, etc. The music instructor visits all the rooms, and at the end of the year all above the kindergarten are expected to be able to read music at sight. A special instructor is engaged for the band of thirty pieces.

We have found the school work very similar to that in any town where there are 570 school children. The shop work will be even more interesting. The Sloyd department is one of the neatest and most interesting. Here they are supplied with knives, saws, planes, chisels and hammers, and are taught carving, turning and polishing, as seen in the accompanying cut.

The laundry is well equipped with the best machinery, and the boys are taught to manipulate the machinery while the girls attend to the ironing and folding.

In the shoe shop the boys make the shoes for both the boys and girls. In this way a number of shoemakers are turned out each year. As the product from this shop is necessarily of a coarse nature, the children who are able very much prefer to buy their own shoes elsewhere. The Indian naturally has a small and beautifully shaped foot, and they invariably take great pride in wearing a fine and well-fitting shoe. A nice shoe would be much preferred to a fine suit or new dress.

In the tailor shop all suits are made for the boys. The blue cloth is of an excellent quality, and such tailor-made suits would cost from $25 to $30 at retail. They not only make the regular blue suits, but all officers' and band boys' uniforms.

From six to ten boys are constantly employed in the harness shops. - Of course, they do not need many harnesses on the farm of 650 acres, so the harnesses are sold to the government to be used in other departments.

About two years ago a set of type and a good printing press was put in, and now the students do all their own printing and publish a monthly paper, the "Indian Leader," which is devoted to the news and interests of the Institute.

The carpenter shop is provided with all the appliances necessary for the repair work about the farm and buildings.

In the wagon shop we find the Indians dressing the raw lumber, putting on the irons and painting the finished wagon. These are also sold to other departments for government use. Many of the boys take great delight in doing the ornamental painting on these wagons. They also do a great deal of painting and drawing about the shop. The favorite drawing on the blackboard is usually a wild west cowboy on a broncho, who is holding a Texas steer with a lariat around its horns.

The quartermaster's building is where all the supplies for the Institute are kept. It reminds one very much of a well-stocked country store. This is in charge of Nancy Kennedy, a Friend from Shawnee, Oklahoma.

To the rear of the shops are the barns, in which are all kinds of stock, and the boys are instructed in all kinds of stock-raising, farming and gardening.

The hospital is at some distance from the other buildings. It is well appointed and capable of accommodating about forty. As one sees from five to fifty of the boys and girls coming in for treatment, one wonders if they would like to go back to the old system and have the "heap big medicine man" pound them or dance about them in gorgeous apparel and shout and sing and scream to scare away the evil spirit. So carefully are the sanitary conditions looked after that but little sickness occurs other than colds, sore eyes, bruises, etc.

In the girls' hall they are busily engaged in dress-making and all kinds of housework. As is the case with the boys, they work a half a day and go to school the other half. Nothing shows the influence of civilization like the neatness of the girls' rooms. They are allowed to buy rugs and pictures to place on the floors and walls. The rooms are arranged to accommodate from six to thirty girls. They are kept very neat and clean, and no pains are spared to send them back to their tribes as good housekeepers.

Ample provision is made for the various kinds of sports. In one corner of the grounds we can see the little girls swinging, jumping the rope, dropping the handkerchief, playing basket ball, etc. In another place the small boys will be playing base ball, while the larger ones are engaged in a game of football. A little later in the season nearly every boy will have a "shinney" club. In baseball they are especially graceful and very quiet. In football they are tough, quick and swift on their feet. At "shinney" the Indian is perfectly at home, because this is his game. In the spring the small boy seems to retain the same instinct as his forefathers and turns his attention to making bows and arrows. In writing, drawing and in games the Indian delights in perfection, regardless of the time it takes.

At this time of the year, as the sun is slowly sinking in the West, the bugler calls them all to supper. By observing strict military orders the entire 570 boys and girls are quickly seated at their tables in the dining room. They are arranged in family groups of eight. As far as possible, members of the same family are placed at one table. Care is also taken to arrange the little five- or six-year-old boy or girl by the side of some of the largest pupils. In the dining room one has the best opportunity to see and study the faces of the Indians. About one-third of them are full-bloods, while the remaining two-thirds range from half- to sixteenth-bloods. Many of them do not show their Indian blood at all. Others show that they have been crossed with the negro or Mexican, while still others are very beautiful indeed. Those who are practically white come here because they can get a good education at no expense. Students with one-sixteenth or more Indian blood can come here from any part of the United States, and Uncle Sam pays the fare both ways. They are expected to remain five years unless they have some good excuse or are discharged.

While we are looking at these boys and girls in the dining room some may wonder what they have to eat and who cooks it. They have everything that can be raised in the garden and on the farm, together with plenty of other good plain food. The chief cook has the students to help him in all the cooking and baking, and thus they send out trained cooks and bakers. The meat and vegetables and coffee are prepared in huge brass kettles which hold about a barrel.

Now that supper is over, they march out and are soon engaged in games, walking, wheel riding, etc. During the summer season the excellent band of thirty pieces often furnishes entertainment for the school.

At 7.30 they all repair to the school rooms to study an hour. When done all march out and at 9 o'clock they retire. Thus we see that our government is taking very good care of the Indian, and most of their graduates go out to be useful men in the world. As it is with the white men, some of them return to their old habits and never become successful men. Taking all things together, it is wonderful what progress they have made in seventy years, which covers the period when the whites began making a general effort to educate the Indian.

The writer has visited this institution very frequently during the past five years, and is indeed gratified to see the great improvements made by the present officers. It is hoped that many who read this article will have the privilege of visiting this Institute.

FOR THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

DISPARAGING CHRISTIANS.

BY JOHN RATLIFF.

Recently I picked up No. 51 of THE AMERICAN FRIEND, and on the first page found an article headed, "Despairing Christians." The article gave many quotations from ministers and others who evidently have but little qualification to make the world better. The progress of the world in goodness is very much like the growth of vegetation. The farmer who has a field of corn just emerged from the ground cannot discover much growth in a day, but if he absents himself for ten days he finds on return some growth, and later on he finds the growth much more rapid—a kind of geometrical progression. So with reforms. I mean by reforms all improvements towards Christian civilization.

The wars of 3,000 years ago, waged by the highest types of humanity, would to-day be considered barbarian. The world is now more humane in modern warfare.

During the dark ages, prior to the Reformation under Luther in Germany, about all that was called religion was centred in the Romish church with the "Holy See" at Rome. The sale of indulgences to commit crime for a stipulated sum of money to build St. Peter's at Rome, was authorized by the "Holy See." The good to be derived by the building of such a magnificent structure at Rome, with a capacity to accommodate 54,000 persons, was considered sufficient to atone for the crimes committed under the guise of religion. Such proceedings during the period from the thirteenth to the sixteenth century points to a low standard of Christian morals. History informs us that the state of morals was such, about this time, that indulgences were purchased of the church for money by priests to live with women not their wives. One of Luther's contemporaries states that eleven thousand such were purchased in one year in Germany. While this practice of the dark ages seems to us to indicate a low state of morals, there are some mitigating circumstances when we consider that our own Christian civilization sells to more than two hundred thousand individuals annually indulgences to make drunkards twelve months for a stipulated sum of money ranging from $100 to $1,200 a year.

The Roman indulgence was sold for money and conferred the privilege to commit crime without incurring punishment, while our indulgences sold for money confer the privilege upon and protect the purchaser in making drunkards and debauching humanity twelve months without incurring punishment. Of the indulgence system of Rome and our indulgence system, were all the conditions to be considered, the pessimist would have an equal chance in the argument that the world is at least tardy in growing better. Great nations or organizations consider but one great question at a time, and sometimes hardly that.

Let us now consider the advancement not only of our own nation, but of most of the civilized world, in the last two hundred years on another great question. In 1620 African slavery was planted in the United States. The same year the Pilgrim fathers, in search of religious liberty, landed on Plymouth Rock and established a religious colony. For two hundred and forty years these two institutions marched side by side, each seeking a more firm hold in the new world, neither seeming to be able or to possess the will to supplant the other. Some two hundred years later the Methodist Episcopal Conference, the largest Protestant organization on the globe, from time to time done some battling with slavery. In 1808 the General Conference directed a number of disciplines to be printed, "with the sections and rules on slavery left out for use in South Carolina,"—a magnanimous concession to slave-holding Methodists. In 1836, after Methodism had been somewhat stirred by the Anti-Slavery agitation, the General Conference at Cincinnati exhorted the members of the church "to abstain from all abolition movements and associations," and censured two of its delegates for taking part in Anti-Slavery meetings. In January, 1844, Bishop Andrews, "by marrying a Southern lady, became identified with slavery, and the Conference in May following declared, by a vote of 111 to 69, that he should desist from the exercise of his office as Bishop while connected with slavery. The Southern delegates protested and insisted that the jurisdiction of the Conference over the Conferences of the Slave States was "inconsistent with the success of the ministry" in those States. The Conference provided for a separation of the church, and the Methodist Episcopal Church South was organized at Louisville, Ky., in 1845, founded on the right to hold slaves as chattels.

In 1852 the great political parties to which the mass of Christian voters clung with tenacity declared in their national platforms adherence to slavery, but eleven years later, in 1863, the Emancipation Proclamation was issued and accepted.

The position of the Methodist church was substantially the same as other churches on the Anti-Slavery reform. Almost all churches have condemned the saloon on paper. The Supreme Court of the United States declared there is no inherent right to retail intoxicating drinks. Insurance companies have, by more than a generation's experience, demonstrated that the use of liquors shortens life. Twenty-five of our great railroad companies have set their heavy foot down on drinking employees. The consensus of opinion is that the saloon is an evil, per se, and points to a time when some political organization, now dominated by the saloon, will share the fate of the "Brazen Serpent" under King Hezekiah, and the religious world will cease to burn incense on its altars, and the saloon, like slavery, will vanish as an institution unfit for a civilized state of society. The religious world is not yet ready for this condition.

Now a word to those who always see the dark side. It took forty years to get the Children into the promised land. All the old carcasses had to fall in the wilderness, except Caleb and Joshua, but the children of the next generation went over. It took Luther thirty-four years to secure the legal recognition of Protestantism in Germany, from the diet at Worms, in 1521, to the diet at Augsburg, 1555. It took thirty-six years of struggle in the House of Commons to declare the slave trade piracy, and nine years longer to abolish slavery in the West Indies.

In 1833 the American Anti-Slavery Society was organized at Philadelphia, with sixty-two members (twenty-one of them Quakers); thirty-three years later, in 1863, the Emancipation Proclamation was issued and accepted. Owen P. Lovejoy was shot at Alton, Ill., in 1837, for editing an Anti-Slavery paper, and in 1897, just sixty years later, the next generation erected a $30,000 monument to his memory. William Lloyd Garrison was mobbed in the streets of Boston. His biographer says, "He commenced his career in the North amid rotten eggs and brickbats and ended it the next generation in Charleston, South Carolina, on a bed of roses."

Reform movements do not culminate in the generation that commence them. The old carcasses have to fall in the wilderness.

Crucifixion, persecution and ostracism of reformers have been the order in times past. The greatest opposition to entering Caanan was in the camp of God's own people. The greatest opposition to Jesus was the Sanhedrim. The greatest opposition to Luther was the Romish church.

MY RESOURCES.

Thine are the star-sown spaces;
The salt-sea depths are Thine;
Thy riches none can measure;
A little need is mine.

Swift lightnings do Thy bidding,

All forces act Thy pleasure;
My need will be supplied.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Havana, Cuba; Third month 16th, 1898.

To the Editor of THE AMERICAN FRIEND :

Never did I see the words of Caleb so wonderfully true as here, and I repeat, "Let us go up at once and possess it, for we are well able to overcome it," "it is an exceeding good land." I find this town wonderfully clean for a foreign city, the people ready to delight themselves with our message, and all that is needed is workers and money. Dr. De Barritt came here from near Boston six weeks ago, has now a church of over 500 members, and has aided the United States in feeding over 5,000 poor. He has just received from a friend of his the money to establish a laundry, and is getting work for a great many. A very bad class of Americans are coming here and there is a great deal of licentiousness. With such a class coming in here, should not we Christians not only come but be active? Whosoever doeth, not studieth, my will shall know of the doctrine. As a further proof of God's love, and that He has sent me down here, a Cuban gentleman said to-day if I would raise the money to establish an orphanage for 500 children he would raise the money to pay for the land. Ground is very high around here, from $500 to $5,000 per acre, so it would be quite a gift. I said one hundred acres would be required. There is no question about the necessity, and Friends now have a wonderfully open door to enter. The money will go twice the distance now, for it will give starving people work and make homes for hundreds of children who will then have Christian education at almost no cost. I will, in the next day or two, get from the United States Government officers the cost of a building proper for the purpose and then report further, but I would suggest that an active campaign for funds be started and these children relieved. Dr. Mazzorana, who is sitting by me, says we can obtain Christian farmers who will willingly go and teach the children farming for their food and clothing (you can have no idea of the poverty these poor people are in), and there can be but little question that the home would shortly be self-supporting. I do, therefore, hope Friends will consider the matter very carefully. I think I can promise that for every dollar we receive in this work as much will be given by the rich class of Cubans. They seem to be a very kind-hearted people. Let us show them our Christian beliefs put in practice. I expect to go to Matanzas next Second-day, but will probably be back in a week's time.

Very truly,

JNO. B. WOOD.

· ANOTHER OPPORTUNITY.

To the Editor of THE AMERICAN FRIEND :

My dear brother:—Through the columns of THE AMERICAN FRIEND I wish to communicate a matter of rare interest to benevolently disposed Friends of large or ample means who are specially interested in educational and missionary lines of Christian effort.

The situation is this: California Friends find themselves in close proximity and touch with many and large openings, nay, appeals, for evangelical effort, especially among the 40,000 Spanish-speaking people of California, as well as among the Chinese of this coast, and in our very promising and imploring field in Alaska. On the other hand, we find our resources limited, except in an increasing willingness to work. Very few Friends of more than scant means have as yet located here. Our hands are full, for which we are thankful, yet our hearts almost faint when we look at the ripened fields and the scant resources for garnering.

Many Friends are very much awakening to the emergencies, and they are praying and casting about for a means of meeting these demands. The special development of this moment is this: We find ourselves without a sufficient force of trained workers. We seem to need urgently a training school with its necessary equipments, a library and teachers. I am glad to be able to announce that steps are taking now, here at Whittier, to organize such an institution. It is an effort requiring much faith and prayer, and especially as at this time we have lost by death him to whom we had been looking as our Joshua in the founding and conduct of such a school. We stand in hushed and inquiring wonder before the providence that takes from our front the strength and promise of usefulness we seemed to see in that rarely spirit-filled and qualified man of God, David J. Lewis. God knows all about it, and we accept His dispensation tearfully, trustfully.

But now, see how the responsibility may be shifted in an important part, perhaps, to the reader of these lines:

At David J. Lewis' death he left a valuable collection of 1,000 volumes, specially valuable for a training school for Christian workers. Had he been spared to life and health he wished to bring this library and his consecrated powers to the establishment of this school. Now these books are for sale, by his advice and because of the limited resources of his wife, Ella Lewis, of Long Beach, California, who, very much in sympathy with his thought, wishes that the library may go intact to such use. It can be secured for this purpose at what is doubtless half its original cost, or seven hundred and fifty dollars.

Under the stress of current demands upon Friends her in the maintenance of the Alaskan field, the College, the Spanish work in hand, and the building up of outpost and mission work in adjacent neighborhoods, we do not see the necessary funds for securing these books, which seem so opportunely available and helpful as a nucleus to, and adjunct in, the formation of this newly-organizing "school for the prophets." So now we are looking for some one to whom God has given the money and the motives for philanthropic effort, inspired by pure love for Christ and for those for whom He gave all, who will secure this needed property for this needy cause of His.

Doubtless, it should be noted here that this collection of years from many sources is rich in commentaries, Biblical dictionaries, lives of Christ, sermons, essays, biographies, lectures, theology, ancient and sacred history, etc., etc.; nearly all of sterling and permanent value to Christian students. It would be very difficult to anything like duplicate it, for it was the result of many years' careful selection from many sources.

It would seem best, perhaps, to make this library (at least until the training school is incorporated) the property of some incorporation, as California Yearly Meeting, or the Whittier Educational Association (Whittier College), to be held in trust for the uses and final property of the training school.

While the owner wishes very much that these books should go to the uses indicated above, she seems urgently called East by sickness there and it seems necessary for prompt action. She, or I, would be glad to furnish further information or answer questions in these interests. May the good hand of our all-wise Father constrain both heart and hand of thyself, dear reader, and ourselves, in this interesting emergency as we stand in His love and fear before this open door to service or sacrifice in His dear name.

CHRIST THE GREAT DELIVERER.

"He hath sent me to heal the broken-hearted, to preach deliverance to the captives, and recovering of sight to the blind, to set at liberty them that are bruised."—Luke 4: 18.

Whatever application the words of the prophet which Jesus read had to the prophet himself and to his times, we cannot escape the fact that, in their deepest sense, they applied to Jesus Christ as the One through whom deliverance from sin must come. In the highest possible sense He was to open the eyes blinded by sin, enrich the poverty of soul for which sin is responsible, and break the chains of Satan's captivity. A false idea of the awfulness of sin leads to a low conception of the grandeur of salvation. In salvation God does not simply wipe out the old stain, but the power of sin is broken, its penalty averted; the germ of eternal life is implanted and the glorious result is assured. We become a new creation; and as every germ of life develops after its kind, so the germ of the new life which Christ's salvation brings to the believer develops according to the pattern of the eternal, glorious life of the Son of God. No human mind can take in the full meaning of salvation. In its consummation it means to be like Jesus; to have a body like unto His own glorious body; to live the life that He lives; to have the power that He possesses—who can tell what this means? This is God's blessing for you if you will take it through faith in Jesus Christ. What will you do about it?—A. S. Gumbart, D.D., in "The Watchman."

The International Lesson.

Lesson II.

Fourth month 9, 1899

THE ANOINTING IN BETHANY.

John 12: 1-11.

GOLDEN TEXT.—She hath done what she could.—Mark 14: 8.

DAILY READINGS.

Second-day, Fourth mo. 3.—The Anointing at Bethany. John 12: 1-11.

Third-day, Fourth mo. 4.—Christ's Commendation. Mark 14: 1-9.

Fourth-day, Fourth mo. 5.—Grateful Love. Luke 7: 36-50.

Fifth-day, Fourth mo. 6.—The Good Part. Luke 10: 38-42.

Sixth-day, Fourth mo. 7.—All for Christ. Phil 3: 1-12.

Seventh-day, Fourth mo. 8.—All She Had. Mark 12: 38-44.

First-day, Fourth mo. 9.—He first loved us. John 4: 10-19.

The incident described in the present lesson is also given by Matthew (26: 6-13) and by Mark (14: 3-9). These latter closely resemble each other. Neither gives the name of Mary or Martha, but both state that the feast was at the house of "Simon the Leper." There are differences in the accounts, especially as to the time, which are hard to reconcile, but they are of comparatively minor importance, and any discussion of them must be left for lack of space, as they are wholly independent of the undoubted teaching of the lesson.

The passage is an interesting one, as giving a glimpse into the social life of Christ, and incidentally as showing that He approves of social pleasures if properly indulged in.

1. "Then." Referring probably to verse 55 of chapter 11. "Bethany." A village on the east slope of the Mount of Olives, about one mile and a half from Jerusalem. "Passover." The celebration began on the 14th of Nisan at sunset; this would make the day the 8th of Nisan—some say that it would be Third month 31st; but all statements as to exact chronology must be accepted with great caution.

2. "They." Who? Scholars differ as to the answer. Some think it was the villagers; others, that "Simon the Leper" (see Matthew and Mark) was the husband of Martha, or the father of Lazarus and his sisters, or a near relative, and that it was this family which gave the feast. It is impossible to speak with certainty.

3. "Mary." The fact that it was Mary is stated by John alone; he alone gives the amount of ointment. "Spikenard." The literal translation is "pistic nard," but what "pistic" means is uncertain; the most likely meaning is "pure." "The feet." Matthew and Mark say "head," and do not mention the feet; John does not mention the head. The three accounts, taken together, give a full description. John, as is often the case, mentions the circumstances which give the more spiritual or more significant teaching. Mary could hardly have shown her devotion more clearly. "Filled with the odor." This is a touch which could hardly have been given by any but an eye-witness.

4. From Matthew and Mark we gather that this feeling was shared in by several of the disciples; Judas was their spokesman.

5. "Three hundred pence." Literally, "300 denarii"; a denarius was worth about seventeen cents, which would make the sum $51.00, but as a "penny" was the payment for a day's labor, the amount would be equivalent to about $300 at the present day.

6. "Bare what was put therein." "Took away what was put therein." Revised Version. In the original the word translated "bare" may have the meaning "to carry off," and hence, to steal. This from the context would seem to be its meaning in this place. It has often been asked why Judas should have been selected as the treasurer. It is possible the disciples may have chosen him and that Christ did not interfere, but the question must be left with the remark that it is wholly improbable that his character was known to the disciples at the time.

7. "Let her alone." A strong expression. "Against the day of my burying hath she kept this." The meaning of this sentence is not clear, and the rendering of the Revised Version—"Suffer her to keep it against the day of my burying," does not help us, but rather the reverse. The old rendering is the easier. She hath kept this ointment to prepare my body for the burial which is to come. This would rather imply an unconscious meaning on the part of Mary. She seems to have done it simply to show her love and devotion.

8. "For the poor," etc. A distinction is drawn between philanthropy and love. This was the occasion to show personal love to Christ. Mary seized the opportunity, and Christ understood her love and blessed it. Just now love was the "one thing needful" and she chose that. Compare Mark 14: 9. "Me ye have not always." Referring to His presence among them in a human body.

9. "Much people." As it was the time of the Passover there would be many people coming to Jerusalem. The Revised Version says, "The common people." This makes the contrast with chief priests stronger but does not essentially alter the meaning.

10. "Chief priests." As Sadducees, they did not believe in the resurrection of the dead, and hence Lazarus, who had been raised from the dead, would be specially objectionable as well as Christ.

11. "Went away." The meaning is "kept going away." It is an imperfect tense.

PRACTICAL THOUGHTS.

1. Christ approved, by His example, legitimate social recreation.

2. Sacrifices, when made in the right spirit, are acceptable to Christ.

3. Fault finding generally comes from a selfish heart.

Doing our duty is better than merely knowing it. The only advantage of knowing our duty is in order that we may do it. Therefore the best kind of knowledge is the knowledge of our duty; and the best kind of doing is the doing of our duty.—"Sunday School Times."

FOR THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

"THE FEDERATION OF THE WORLD." *

BY HENRY N. HOXIE.

In this booklet, of about 150 pages, Dr. Trueblood undertakes to show that Tennyson's fancy of an ultimate Parliament of Man and Federation of the World is no longer an iridescent dream;—that men of light and leading anticipate in a few generations at least its partial or final consummation, and that the historic evolution of events, especially in Europe and America, even now points with considerable certainty in that direction.

Whatever tends, therefore, to bring this subject widely before the public mind as perhaps the most important of present-day issues will, without doubt, find favor with all thoughtful people.

We accordingly welcome this little book with real satisfaction, not merely as a prophecy of a probable future, but, however brief, as a luminous interpretation of events actually going on now and here and under our very eyes in our busy work-a-day world. He who runs may indeed read, but it is he who reads most and best between the lines, microscopically and largely and clearly, what is occurring in human affairs, interpreting it in the light of its Providential order and development, who reads and interprets to the best advantage.

Dr. Trueblood has done this very carefully within the proper scope of his subject, and the picture of coming events he throws on his canvas will, we think, arrest the attention of the thoughtful and the thoughtless, giving new meaning and vision as well as dignity to very simple as well as extraordinary events of every-day life.

The volume originated, as we learn, from the preface, in two lectures delivered by the author, in 1897, before the Meadville Theological School, at Meadville, Pennsylvania.

Doubtless, the author's position as Secretary of the American Peace Society in Boston has given him a special survey of the field of his subject, and an emphasis and authority to his attention and opinions otherwise improbable.

The preface also warns us that, except incidentally, the subject treated in the work is not that of peace and war, but directly that of international federation. We are thus at once lifted to the high levels of modern thought in Christian politics and ethics.

To abolish war and the thousand evils that succeed and environ it; to repair waste and ruin and to restore domestic and international harmony, Dr. Trueblood, by federation (confining it, for the sake of illustration, to Europe rather than taking the world at large), means some such scheme as the formation of an over-state—say, in Switzerland—an over-state like our own Federal Government at Washington, in the neutral territory of the District of Columbia. Place England, Germany, France, and, on the same plan, the United States also, in organic and legislative harmony or relations with this capital or with this over-state, according to general constitutional powers, like those granted it by our own several states to the United States: organize Europe on the basis of our own Federal system for the same and better purposes,—purposes, we may add, of Christian legislation and progress, and we have a scheme or conception by no means native to the present century, but one stated with fair precision by Henry IV. of France and Elizabeth of England; by Kant,* in an essay published in 1795, and again, in 1695, with singular felicity, by our own William Penn.†

Moreover, if Herbert Spencer and Binet have, during the last twenty-five years, taught us anything at all of good and lovely report, it is the nature of societies as an organism, and that an enlightened altruism binds together individuals, societies and the world.

This is the thesis of the book in question, with its brief enumeration of the political, social and economic elements in our complex modern life which, in our author's judgment, are federalizing the world. With long sweep of vision and with prophecy of the far-off Divine intent to which creation moves, he discerns the universal world-state administered, as admitted by publicists on both sides of the water, on the model somewhat of the Constitution of the United States.

Dr. Trueblood believes such a federation probable in a few generations from the present time, and states his reasons for the same. Among the very first of these he places, as has been observed, the fact that the very nature of man is social and humane, naturally reaching forward to friendly association and co-operation; that war and human dissonance are in antagonism with human destiny; that the representative nations of the world as a whole are intuitively, however slowly, seeking and establishing federal relations with each other, and in the onward march are developing the necessary federative elements; that throughout the history of the last century there are social, political and international movements now making for organic unity throughout Christendom—thus making federation a reasonable hope.

Some of the advantages accruing from the formation of such a federated world system may be mentioned as:

- (1). The reduction of European armaments, now increasing at an immense pace, to a minimum.
- (2). The consequent abolition of conscription wherever it obtains throughout Europe.
- (3). The immense reduction of the enormous taxation now sapping the vitality of every nation of Europe to maintain the war system, and the release of their normal energies and activities to peaceful pursuits.

(4). Greater uniformity and steadiness of state legislation and the settlement of international undertakings such as railways, shipping, colonies, fishing; the solution of long-standing grievances,—as the control of Egypt, Morocco, the Eastern question, and the partition of China.*

Something of the argument may perhaps be seen from the titles of the ten chapters comprising the volume. Following the preface and introduction, we have twelve or fourteen pages on "The Solidarity of Humanity," in which, on social and international grounds, the interdependence of the various nations of the Old and New Worlds on each other is stated and illustrated. Then comes a chapter on "This Solidarity Unrealized," with its indictment of the wreckage of human brotherhood because historically every man, as a rule, has been for himself,—the expansion of Kidd's principle of the stress and strain of organic evolution, and violations of Spencer's law of human altruism and Drummond's struggle for the life of others. The chapters on "The Causes of Disunity" and "The Development of the War System" naturally fall together, and succeeding these we have those on "The Influence of Christianity in Restoring the Federative Principle," with two others, covering some twenty pages perhaps, with the titles, "War Ethically Wrong" and "War Anti-Federative." These are again followed by three bright chapters on "The New World Society," "The Growing Triumph of Arbitration," and "The United States of the World." The author is seen at his best, we think, in these last two or three chapters, and to these the reader most quickly may turn for the gist of the argument. A brief summary of this last chapter may be thus stated:

Having already shown the present-day use of arbitration as a method of settling international difficulties, Dr. Trueblood raises the question, "After Arbitration, What?" He calls attention to the multitude of people in civilized society whose personal relations with all in their peaceful, Christian character are, peradventure, quite beyond the sphere of arbitration altogether. Without dissonance of mutual attitude toward anybody, they abjure courts of law and have nothing to arbitrate—their every-day dealings and lives being Christianly co-operative. These people are increasing in every country—they leaven the lump. As a result there is a gradually growing disappearance of international prejudices and falsely assumed preconceptions and suppositions, and a steadily increasing community of interests is arising in their place. The author states with special force, it seems to us, some of the positive evidences of this culminating movement, viz.: the nature of man himself, interpreted in late years, with the wonderful uplift of evolutionary science; the growing sense of common brotherhood; the sympathy, well nigh universal, with suffering humanity; the recent modes of rapid travel and inter-communication; the industrial, social and humane movements of our time, the expansion of international law; advancing international co-operation through friendly commissions, boards of arbitration and modern diplomacy, with the constant and multiple tendencies towards unity and cosmopolitan brotherhood everywhere.

Dr. Trueblood mentions, among other factors of this movement, and very rightly, we think, the unification of law now generally going on throughout Europe and America; the development of international citizenship; treaties of commerce already weaving, for purposes of trade, the business of the world into organized systems; the postal, labor and telegraph unions and Red Cross societies, to which many nations are already parties, and the modern consular service, uniting all nations in political harmony and substantial kinship.

The book is clearly written and is most suggestive. Should we offer a criticism upon it, it would be that its grip on the facts of history illustrating the points at issue are not sufficiently strong. Perhaps some cabinet minister behind the scenes of European or American diplomacy could best give these, but a greater abundance would be helpful, since they reinforce the argument. These are not wanting in history, sociology or science, and the cause of which this book is an exponent is of sufficient importance to be stated with great emphasis. A literature has already sprung up about the subject, which we hope to see greatly extended. Meanwhile, Dr. Trueblood's little volume strikes a timely and a ringing note.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC FOR FOURTH MONTH NINTH, 1899.

THE HOLY GARMENTS.

Eph. 4: 20-24; Rom. 6: 4.

Second-day, Fourth mo. 3.—The priests' garments. Ex. 28: 1-5; 31-38.
Third-day, Fourth mo. 4.—The wedding garment. Matt. 22: 11-14.
Fourth-day, Fourth mo. 5.—Putting on Christ. Gal. 3: 23-29.
Fifth-day, Fourth mo. 6.—Putting on the new man. Col. 3: 1-11.
Sixth-day, Fourth mo. 7.—The righteousness of the saints. Rev. 19: 6-9.
Seventh-day Fourth mo. 8. They shall walk in white. Rev. 3: 1-6.

The "Put-offs" and "Put-ons" of Scripture are of themselves an interesting study. We are to "put off the old man" (Eph. 4: 22 and Col. 3: 9). "Put off all these, anger, wrath, malice, railing, shameful speaking out of your mouth; lie not one to another" (Col. 3: 8), and here the word has the sense of unclothing one's self, or of putting away. Then we are to "Put on the Lord Jesus Christ" (Rom 13: 14); "Put on the new man" (Eph. 4: 24); "Put on, as God's elect... a heart of composure, kindness, humility, meekness, long-suffering, forbearing... forgiving

* Vide "The Federation of the Powers," by C. D. Farquharson, London and New York.

...and above all these things, put on love, which is the bond of perfectness" (Col. 3: 12); "Put on the whole armor of God" (Eph. 6: 11).

Garments are sometimes called habits, as when we speak of a riding habit, and the garments of our souls are the habits of our lives; more than that, they are the character whose choices make habit and in turn is confirmed by the choices made.

Much is said in Scripture about clear, white or beautiful garments. Sometimes the illustration deals not with the change of garments but with the washing of them. "Our garments are to be washed white in the blood of the Lamb." We are to be sanctified and cleansed with the washing of water by the Word. There is no hint of cleansing in the future world. The white-robed hosts of the heavenly world had all first washed their garments while yet on earth. The foundation of cleansing is in this world, not a future one.

The garment we are to put on is the gift of the King. The man who "had not on the wedding garment" had refused the generous hospitality of his host, who had furnished wedding garments for all who would come to the feast. The garments of "our own righteousness are as filthy rags." Let us accept the King's offered gift.

We are to "put off" before we can "put on." The picture of an "imputed righteousness" covering our sins as a cloak is not a Scriptural idea by any means. No garment can long remain clean on an unclean man. It is not a righteousness that covers up iniquities, but a righteousness inwrought in our lives, that we need.

But it is also true that as every bride in olden times spun and wove and made every article for her bridal costume, so we also weave the warments of our soul-life. With reference to the sins of the past, they are washed away by the blood of the Lamb; with reference to the character of the soul as determined by the choices which led to these sins, we are to put away or put off every evil habit which made our lives so unclean; with reference to the future, we both "put on the Lord Jesus Christ" by one act of full surrender and faith, and yet we also, by constant faith, obedience and appropriation of His life, weave the garments of our souls, in which we shall appear before Him when He comes for His bride. The daily events of our lives are the warp into which we are ever weaving the woof of our appropriations of the divine life of Christ. The loom of Providence goes ceaselessly on. Shall I draw upon Christ for the weaving?

All this is but another way of saying that we must ever keep our garments clean and white, and yet also ever weave more beautiful ones against the day of His coming. "The King's daughter within the palace is all glorious; her clothing is wrought with gold. She shall be led unto the King in brodered work."

Let us not weave in the coarse, rough threads of selfishness, rudeness, unkindness and harshness towards others.

ALASKAN CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR ALACRITY.

Just think of it! A wee bit of a society born in a canvas tent, up in the frozen north, doing a rescue work which puts them on a par with the St. Bernard monks of Switzerland. The tidings come by way of Mrs. J. Stanley Edwards, of Denver, Col., that the little society at Valdes, Alaska, has built a relief station half-way across the twenty-five-mile glacier near by. This glacier is traversed by many gold-seekers, bound for the interior, and many lives have been lost in the terrible storms that sweep down its icy sides. The little station is provided with fuel and food, and has already saved several lives.

Keep your eyes open for an illustrated account of a baby Endeavor Society in Alaska, whose cards Mr. Marsden has sent out.—"The Christian Endeavor World."

IN JAMAICA.

Dr. and Mrs. Clark sailed for Jamaica on Third month 8th, expecting to reach Port Antonio on the 13th. On Third month 23d our friends expect to sail for Cuba, and to return home by way of Santiago and Havana, where doubtless they will find some opportunities to sow Christian Endeavor seed. Mrs. Clark will make it her special business to help the Junior cause wherever she may have opportunity.

DETROIT, '99.

The Detroit Christian Endeavor Convention Committee has decided to issue a monthly bulletin of information about the forthcoming Convention, which they think is destined to be the grandest yet held. The bulletin will be called "Detroit, '99," and will be mailed free of charge to any one sending his address to Mr. Fred H. Cozzens, Majestic Building, Detroit, Mich.

Secretary Baer recently received an amended report from the railroad association on the rate for the Convention. The railroads have consented that tickets deposited may be extended for the return trip until Eighth month 15th. Heretofore the limit has usually been Eighth month 1st. This, with the one-fare rate from all points, makes it the most advantageous railroad rate ever granted to a Convention, and will no doubt offer an inducement to many who wish ample time to enjoy one of the most attractive midsummer tours ever offered.

The Superintendent of the Missionary Department sends this note:

Any person interested in organizing a Mission Study Class, but finding it difficult to interest others, can do good work by getting one of the books and studying thoroughly the first chapter. Give special invitation to those who ought to belong, to meet in a private house for a social hour. Have maps and charts and a thoroughly prepared talk that will interest all. This may be continued through the entire book where persons do not wish to bring books.

GENERAL CHURCH NOTES.

The election of Brigham H. Roberts to the United States Congress by the people of Utah has focused attention upon the condition of Mormonism, and has indirectly resulted in bringing out much significant information regarding the present status of this religious enormity. It is surprising to find how powerfully effectual its organization has become, and how replete with results are the efforts of its missionaries. There are now more than fifteen hundred Mormon missionaries in all parts of the world. They claimed to have baptized 10,000 proselytes in 1897, and in 1898 a still larger number. They make house to house visitations in addition to holding public meetings, and appear to find no difficulty in imposing upon the credulity of the ever large number seeking novelty and new experiences. The Mormon converts are often, if not usually, proselytes from other churches. To the Mormons, with their undeserved power of statehood, their immense wealth and property holdings from the Rockies to the Pacific, the future appears roseate, but their progress will be watched with apprehension by a great number of people.

The unlimited centralization of power in the head of the Salvation Army resulted in this country, not many years since, in the secession of Ballington Booth and the establishment of the Volunteers. Last year a revolt occurred in India, and there, too, a separate organization was formed, called the Christian Realm, which has become a fairly formidable rival of the Army. General Booth all along has opposed any concession, and has pertinaciously held to his absolutism, but now news comes of the incorporation of the Army in this country. This is important because heretofore all funds and property were held in trust by Booth Tucker, an alien, for General Booth, also an alien, without any recognition being given the Army by the law of the country. However, the step has been taken, it is said, "simply to avoid certain complications in regard to the Army's property in this country," and no change of policy is contemplated in managing the body as a military organization.

It is of interest to note in connection with the raising of memorial funds to celebrate the close of the century that Bramwell Booth, or the Salvation Army, is asking, in honor of the General's approaching 70th birthday, in April, for 70,000 new soldiers, an increase of 70,000 in the circulation of the Army's newspaper, and $350,000 to be placed in the General's hands, "to be used in such work and fashion as he may in his wisdom think desirable." General Booth has made excellent applications of funds entrusted to his care, and has effected an immense amount of good, but he is apparently blind to the evils lurking in his system of unlimited control of every function of his Army.

Much alarm has frequently been expressed at the rapid spread of Catholicism in the United States, but with the growing "Americanism" of the Catholic hierarchy and laity as well, and with the true facts before us, there need be but little apprehension that this stronghold of liberty and Protestantism will ever suffer from Romish institutions. In only thirteen states do we find Catholics exceeding any one of the leading Protestant bodies. These are: Arizona, California, Idaho, Massachusetts, Montana, Nevada, New Mexico, New York, Rhode Island, Utah, and Wyoming. In those states where papacy has existed longest, like Florida, Maryland, Ohio, Oregon, Washington, Pennsylvania, she is far behind separate Protestant churches, and her rate of growth is comparatively slow. The Baptists alone exceed the Roman Catholics in twenty states and territories; the Lutherans alone in four states; the Methodists alone in thirty-two states; and the Presbyterians alone in eighteen states. Add to these facts the constantly deepening fraternity of the Protestant bodies, and the Romish peril appears afar off.

News from the Field.

William G. Hubbard, widely known for his Peace and Temperance Work, and for his efforts to stop the sale of bad "literature" on railroad trains, has moved from Cleveland, Ohio, to 133 Eureka Avenue, Columbus Ohio, which city was formerly his home.

Dr. George A. Barton has a scholarly and suggestive article on the "Spiritual Development of the Apostle Paul," in the March number of the "New World."

Any Friends who may desire to make application for the position of Superintendent and Matron of Friends' Orphanage—near High Point, N. C., can do so by addressing their letters to Alice R. King, Secretary, Archdale, N. C.

A very interesting work is being carried on in Boise City, Idaho, under the leadership of Amanda M. Way, who is well known for her extensive work in assisting the colored refugees in Kansas. A meeting-house has been built at Boise, and the meeting and school are well attended. Amanda Way says that they need financial help on the meeting-house, and it seems to be a work which deserves sympathy and help.

Emory J. Rees, a minister in Western Yearly Meeting, and wife, and Oscar Roberts sailed from Philadelphia, Seventh-day, Third month 25th, for Johannesburg, South African Republic, South Africa. The outfit and travel for Emory J. Rees and wife, and about $600.00 of their annual expenses comes from Vermilion Quarterly Meeting, Western Yearly Meeting. Oscar Roberts goes with the expectation of supporting himself.

THE AMERICAN FRIEND of First month 19th and 26th, gives two articles concerning this work undertaken by the Western Yearly Meeting. Kindly look them up if they have not already been read. Martha E. Newin, Kokomo, Ind., is treasurer. Please send to her the names and address of all contributing one dollar or more, that the letters from the field may be sent.

INDIANA YEARLY MEETING.

Pleasant Plain, Ind.—We began a series of meetings at this place Twelfth month 29th, 1899. Wm. Carson and wife came on the 1st of First month, 1899, and Lindley Swafford on the 2d, and on the 5th of the month Harry and Allie Burgman—with whom arrangements had been made by our Quarterly Meeting superintendent.

The meetings continued until the 29th of the month; commencing small, but increased in interest and numbers until our house was filled.

Brother and Sister Burgman were wonderfully favored to preach a full gospel. The two brothers that assisted did excellent service in exhortation and song. The meeting was a wonderful uplift not only to the Friends, but also to the other two churches in the town, who perhaps, received as much benefit from the meeting as the Friends. There were thirty conversions and renewals, and some claimed the blessing of the baptism with the Holy Spirit.

West Grove Monthly Meeting, White Water Quarterly Meeting, Greensfork, Ind.—There has been a very successful series of meetings held a Greensfork which has just closed.

Job Dennis of Dalton, and the pastor, Stella Manly, began a series of meetings the 15th day of last month. After holding the meetings two weeks, Daisy Barr of Marion, came and conducted the work sixteen days longer. The result of the work is: fourteen accessions to the church, thirty conversions, and deep conviction on many more.

One man about 70 years of age, a prominent citizen, professed his allegiance to Christ and joined the church.

A searching, cleansing Quaker gospel was preached, the effect of which will no doubt be lasting. CYRUS A. BALDWIN.

WESTERN YEARLY MEETING.

Indianapolis.—It will soon be time for planting gardens and making flower-beds. Remembering gratefully and thankfully the many flowers sent to Indianapolis Junior Endeavorers for flower mission work in the various institutions of the city last summer, we have thought this year to appeal to still more of the societies, both Senior and Junior, within a larger radius of the city, to plant us special quantities of flowers for this blessed work.

Can we not co-operate thus in this precious work of scattering these messages of love among the sick of the hospitals, unfortunate and shut-in ones of our capital city? Plant for Jesus daisies, nasturtiums, pansies, sweet peas, and many other varieties, and in time, send them with your prayers to us and they will reap a rich blessing.

Last year hundreds and hundreds of sweet June roses came to brighten many a sick room and homeless, friendless girl that would otherwise have wasted their perfume and scattered their petals where they grew. Soon wild flowers will be here, they have a rare sweet message that may reach some one's heart. Send the flowers in by some one passing to the city, by mail if no other way.

Be sure to enclose card stating from whom the flowers come that proper credit may be given.

All communications and flowers sent to address below will be taken care of carefully.

Lillie Willits, 30 Jackson Place, opposite north entrance Union Depot, Indianapolis, Indiana.

Washington, Ind.—We have organized a Friends' Meeting here and hold regular services every Sabbath. This is a new field, but the Lord has greatly blessed and strengthened us. But it will take a steadfast and determined mind to build up a self-supporting church here, as Quakerism was never heard of here before; and I want to say right here, dear brothers in the Lord, if you believe in home mission work, right here is the best place you could lend a helping hand. We have been self-supporting up to the present time, but can not tell how it will be in the future; any one wishing to help us in any way can forward the amount to the undersigned, and you will hear good reports from it. We have the promise of our beloved Superintendent, David Hadley, that a visiting minister will be with us Fourth month 1st, and hold a series of meetings lasting one week or ten days. We ask all Friends to pray for us who are here trying to plant Christ's banner of truth. Our beloved pastor lives out in the country four miles, and although the mud all winter has been nearly knee deep, and his beloved wife has been sick, he has been so devoted to the upbuilding of a church here that he has hardly missed a Sabbath, and the Lord has truly blessed us, although we are few in number. What we ask is a little aid from the Brothers and Sisters who may be better situated in other parts, and hope they may aid us in whatever manner the Lord may present it to them as right. We have the promise of a series of meetings soon, and we need to get our house ready before they begin.

C. F. AGETON.

Eagletown, Ind.—Thomas J. Holding held a successful series of meetings at this place commencing Second month 14th, and closing Third month 2d. Brother Holding preached the gospel with demonstration of the spirit and power on the line of repentance to the sinner, and entire consecration to the believer. Some backsliders were reclaimed, but the greatest work was among the church members, as many as eight entering upon a life of Holiness with God. E. E. B.

NORTH CAROLINA YEARLY MEETING.

New Garden Quarterly Meeting was held at Greensboro on the 11th inst. The meeting on Ministry and Oversight at 10 a.m. Nothing out of the ordinary practice was considered except the discussion of the suggestion that the procedure in recognizing gift in the ministry should commence in the Preparative Meeting, thence go to the Quarterly Meeting on Ministry and Oversight, thence to Yearly Meeting on Ministry and Oversight, and if approved come to the Monthly Meeting at large for consideration.

At 11 o'clock the meeting for worship assembled and was led in prayer by Caroline Edwards, Joseph H. Peele and Annie Armitage, followed by some words of testimony and exhortation from Mary M. Hobbs, repeating a text which had been quoted in a prayer, "And this is life eternal, that they might know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent."

Then Annie Armitage, a minister from Ohio, who has been doing acceptable work as an evangelist in North Carolina the past year, read from second Peter, first chapter, and spoke from the fourth verse, "Whereby are given unto us exceeding great and precious promises," etc. She dwelt briefly, touching upon various promises of grace to suit divers conditions; convicting, converting, sanctifying grace—dying grace—grace that looks for and confidently expects His coming. She expressed the belief that if North Carolina Yearly Meeting would only accept this grace in the fullness throughout its membership no evil could stand in its presence.

Joseph H. Peele, minister in Greensboro, spoke from "If we be dead with Him we shall also live with Him." He wished us to think how many of us have actually suffered for Christ's sake, and insisted that we must be in touch with Christ by his spirit if we would do things for His sake and in His name or in His power, and referred to the "hair line" connection in the city of Berlin that conveys power, because of its connection to the dynamo, the source, to the vast and varied machinery of the city so small and insignificant as we are if connected with Christ, the source of power and love, we shall be able to dispense and distribute the same to his glory. He also claimed that if we love him we shall love his appearing. Closing prayer by Albert Peele, Superintendent of Evangelistic Work.

During the intermission Friends of Greensboro served refreshments in the meeting-house.

At 1.30 p.m. the business session opened, and continued with nothing unusual except, in addition to the answers to the queries, there was appended a long written report of the New Garden and Greensboro Monthly Meetings, especially so in the case of New Garden, showing the condition of families and individuals religiously—the missionary, evangelistic, educational and ministerial work going on in the meeting and in its immediate limits, and by individual members remote in California, Indiana, Kansas, Pennsylvania, Georgia, Florida, India, and in different parts of our own state. One meeting—Dover—not heard from and many of the distant members had not had time to reply, so it was directed that a fuller complete report be prepared for the next Quarterly Meeting with the further view of forwarding it to next Yearly Meeting. With grateful thanksgiving the meeting closed to meet with New Garden Friends at Guilford College, Seventh month 8th next.

OREGON YEARLY MEETING.

Newburg, Oregon.—Martha Newby, of Rosedale, Ore., is among us acceptably assisting our local committee in house to house visitation of our membership. The Lord is greatly blessing the work. Herbert and Sadie Cash, who have lately come to us from England, and who have been laboring so acceptably in different parts of the Yearly Meeting, have located at Springbrook, Oregon. The Lord is greatly blessing them amongst us. Pacific College closes the winter term's work with the largest enrollment of any winter term in its history. The school year, so far, has been a prosperous one. Revival services began at Scott's Mills last Sabbath evening. C.

ALASKA MISSION.

J. E. Coffin, of Douglas City, Alaska, a full blood Indian, was first known as a mission boy in the Friends' Mission of this city nine years ago. It was this school in which he began his education and where he remained for three years, after which he was employed as interpreter for Charles Edwards in his work among the Kake Indians. For six months he served in this capacity. Desiring a better education, that he might be more able to devote his life to the uplifting of his race, he was then sent to the Industrial Government School at Chemawa, Oregon, where he remained two years, during which time he learned the shoemaker's trade.

After he returned to Alaska he was again engaged as interpreter for the Kake Indians, this time by the Friends' Missionary Board of Oregon Yearly Meeting, where he remained for more than two years employing his spare moments to the application of his trade.

He has proved himself to be a young man of rare ability; a capable interpreter having a general knowledge of both the Thlingit and English language, an excellent pilot for small boats in the S. E. Alaskan waters, and exhibits a talent for music which might be enviable to one of the more enlightened race.

After completing his engagement with the Missionary Board he engaged in the mercantile business at Ketchikan. On the 15th ult. he returned to Douglas City, and, to the surprise of his many friends, was married on the 22d (Washington's birthday) to Irene H. Beard, a full blood Indian girl, who has been for five years in the Friends' Mission on this island.

KANSAS YEARLY MEETING.

Masham, Oklahoma Territory.—So many Friends in the older portion of this country are looking toward, and making inquiry concerning, Oklahoma that I ask for a little space to answer, in a general way, some of these questions.

I have spent nearly two years in Christian work in the "Strip," having traveled eight or ten thousand miles in it. The soil is generally fertile, but in many parts good water cannot be had. Building stone and timber are scarce in some localities. Some persons have hauled "Black Jack" (oak) timber a distance of forty miles for fuel.

I have spent the last few days in the limits of Harmony Monthly Meeting, in Pawnee County. This is the extreme southeastern limit of Stella Quarterly Meeting. It seems to me that here is the best opening for Friends of small means, that I have seen anywhere in Oklahoma, for these reasons: A fertile, easily tilled soil, an abundance of pure soft water, building stone easily quarried, and a surplus of good "hardwood" timber. And, I may add, a moderate climate, with plenty of rain. There has been very little snow the past winter, and not cold enough to spoil the prospect of a bountiful crop of peaches. There is now no Government land open to homestead entry, but there are large tracts of Indian allotment lands which can be leased for three years at a time, probably as long as it shall be held by Indians, as they seem not inclined to farm on their own account. There is good water, some prairie land and some timber on nearly every allotment of 160 acres. The timber may be used for fuel, or for making any improvement on the allotment. The terms of lease are thirty cents per acre annually, cash payment.

Much of this land lies just south of the Arkansas river, and in convenient reach of Harmony Monthly Meeting.

Those who are imbued with a missionary spirit can find ample opportunity to work for the cause of Christ. The Friends in Oklahoma have never been able to answer all the earnest calls for help in town or country.

Harmony Monthly Meeting is composed almost wholly of new members, who know nothing of Friends until since coming here.

My address for some time to come will be William F. Lewis, Masham, Pawnee County, O. T.

IOWA YEARLY MEETING.

West Grove, a mission station of Cedar Creek Monthly Meeting, Salem Quarter, Iowa.—R. M. McDorman, a minister of Kenima Monthly Meeting, Nebraska, arrived here on Christmas eve and commenced meeting Christmas night, and continued six weeks. The first two weeks were spent in reviving the members and in getting them in a condition to join in the work in helping sinners, and it is believed to be time well spent, for the church at this point surely has shown a great change, and after the two weeks of hard and close labor, sinners and backsliders began to come and confess their needs, and seek and find pardon. Some old men, grandfathers, that had gone through many revivals without finding peace, sought and found it in this. There are six that have been received into membership and more are looked for. We are not favorable to giving numbers hastily; only such as are received into membership, but conversions and renewals are many. Such a time of gathering souls has not been seen in this place. The brother went from here to Hickory Grove, in Van Buren County, for two weeks, then attended Quarterly Meeting at Salem, then joined in a Union Meeting at that place for a few days, then came back here for four days, and finished up in this Quarter and returned to his home a workman that need not feel ashamed. He attended three monthly meetings while here: two at Cedar Creek and one at Salem. He was ably assisted while at this place by our neighbor, W. B. Rossell, a local preacher in the M. E. Church, a regular attendant with us in Sunday School and meeting, not being near one of his own denomination.

JOHN M. CORSBIE.

PHILADELPHIA YEARLY MEETING.

Philadelphia Yearly Meeting begins at Arch Street meeting house on the 17th of Fourth month.

Cyrus W. Harvey, of Galena, Kansas, has been liberated by his Monthly and Quarterly Meetings, to attend Philadelphia, New England and Canada Yearly Meetings. (Small body.)

Catherine Stanton from Western Yearly Meeting of Indiana, is expecting to attend Philadelphia Yearly Meeting.

Friends' Teachers' Association.—A meeting will be held at 140 N. Sixteenth Street, Philadelphia, Fourth month 1st, 1899, at 2.30 p.m. Subjects:

1. Methods of Teaching Modern Languages, by Miriam Elfirth, of Westtown Boarding School.
2. Teaching German, by Wm. F. Overman of Moorestown Academy.
3. Shall Greek be Taught in Friends' Schools? by Prof. Seth K. Gifford of Havertord.

George A. Barton attended Twelfth Street Meeting on First-day the 19th.

Married.

FARLEY—BAILEY.—At the home of the bride's mother, Ackworth, Iowa, Third month 2d, 1899, Fred Farley to Mabel Bailey.

FRAZER—STEWART.—Third month 9th, 1899, at the home of bride's parents, near North Loup, Nebraska, Oliver M. Frazer, a minister in North Loup Friends Meeting, to Laura E. Stewart.

Died.

CLARK.—Jesse Cates, infant son of W. D. and Ella Clark, died on the 28th of Second month, 1899. "God touched him with His finger and he slept." He was a member of Friends' Meeting and Sabbath School at Winchester, Ind.

COOK.—Eliza A., wife of Amos B. Cook, died at the home of her daughter, near Argonia, Kansas, Third month 4th, 1899, aged 46 years.

In early life she was converted and joined the Methodist Episcopal church. A few years ago she became a believer in the Friends' faith and doctrine, and joined Friends.

She told her husband and friends that Jesus was with her, and that she was hiding in the Cleft of the Rock. She had an unwavering faith in the exceeding great and precious promises.

FARIS.—Melissa, daughter of Jonathan R. and Sarah Ann Wells, and wife of John W. Faris, died at the home of her daughter, in Ridgeville, Ind., Third month 5th, 1899, aged 61 years, 10 months and 1 day.

About thirty years ago she gave her heart to God and joined the Methodist Episcopal church. In the year 1890 she, with her husband, joined the Friends and assisted in the organization of a meeting at the Pleasant Valley School House, near Balliee, Ind., of which she was a member and overseer at the time of her death.

HALL.—Died, at her home in North Fairfield, Maine, Second month 26th, 1899, Lena R. Hall, wife of Horace M. Hall, after a brief illness with pleuro-pneumonia. She was a member of Fairfield Quarterly Meeting. She leaves not only a companion, but three beautiful children to mourn her loss. Beloved by all who knew her for her genial spirit, her untiring devotion to her family, and for her Christian character, we have the blessed assurance that she has gone to be with Jesus. Fully aware of her approaching dissolution, she expressed her resignation to the divine will and her readiness to meet her Lord.

SEABURY.—Died, at her home in New Bedford, Mass., Third month 6th, Susan M. Seabury, widow of the late Capt. Humphrey W. Seabury. She was a birthright member of the Society of Friends and valued its doctrines and privileges, but she trusted for salvation only in the atonement made for sin by our Lord Jesus Christ.

Faithful in His service, she was most useful and helpful in the affairs of the meeting, and especially in the Bible School, where she rejoiced to see her scholars converted, one after another. She was also devoted in the work of the City Mission and spent much time and strength in looking after the poor and needy. Liberal in the use of the means entrusted to her, there are members who will miss her kindly and unobtrusive aid. She was a "succorer of many," not only of those about her but of those who were sent here with messages from the Lord, and her words of cheer and her wise help will be long and gratefully remembered.

News and Events.

One of the most notable signs of the times and one fraught with tremendous consequences, is the mania for combines which is attacking the country in every phase of business. Not a day goes by that there is not announced the formation of at least one gigantic trust. The capital generally consists of watered stock in large amounts, and this in many cases is sold in blocks to gullible investors. The famous Hooley, of London, is being outdone, and unless the tide is in some way stemmed we may look for serious results. The combination of industries is almost incredible. In 1898 the authorized capital of the newly-formed organizations of the year amounted to $916,000,000, while in the first two months alone of the present year this figure has been exceeded by the enormous total of $1,106,300,000, and now rumors are current of the organization of a single trust—The American Copper Company—with a capital of $1,000,000,000. New Jersey is the mecca of the trusts, and here, on account of the lenient laws, most of the large combinations are consummated.

With our eyes on the Philippines, and while we proclaim our self-lauded interest in their regeneration, we may well pause and consider the horrible state of affairs in certain sections of our own country. Lynch law appears to gain force daily, and a veritable epidemic has now broken out. At Palmetto, Ga., one morning not long since, the jail was stormed by a mob and nine negroes were shot. Four were killed outright and the other five seriously wounded. It is said that the law was amply able to punish the prisoners, who had been arrested on the charge of arson, and the Governor of the State has offered large rewards for the apprehension of those implicated in the lynching. Again, during the latter part of last week, as the result of a threatened race war in Little River County, Arkansas, seven negroes were slaughtered by whites in cold blood and twenty-three supposed conspirators were hunted down. One report says: "It is probable the entire number have been killed." Once more, and again as a result of a race war, three negroes were lynched near Silver City, Mississippi. Feeling runs high in these sections, and further disturbances are not unlikely.

Three State legislatures have adjourned without electing Senators, and another promises to continue its deadlock to the end of the session. In Utah, California and Delaware, selfish partisan interests have transcended real patriotic impulses, and after repeated ballottings and frequent charges of fraud, the States named have been left without their full quota in the National Senate. The most disgraceful condition of affairs has existed in all three States, but perhaps notably so in Delaware. There Addicks, the gas king, has played with a daring hand for the Senatorship, and on the eve of victory was defeated with the disclosure of bribery and the consequent degradation of three Democrats who had been won over to his side. In Pennsylvania balloting continues, but Quay is no nearer his goal than at the beginning, and he is unwilling to accept a substitute. Perhaps the time is not far distant when Senators will be elected directly by the people, and then we shall be saved the humiliating wrangles in which the State Legislatures are almost sure to become involved whenever it is necessary for them to fill a vacancy in the Senate.

The campaign about Manila is on in earnest. A general attack upon the Filipinos began on the 17th and has been continued up to the present writing. The insurgents have suffered great losses, and the Americans have had at least 45 killed and 145 wounded. The insurgents are being driven northward, and an effort is being made to divide the rebel army by pushing a wedge through their lines. The American forces have occupied the town of Molinta, but, most important of all, they are now in control of the only railroad on the island. While retreating before the American advance, the town of Malabon was burned by the natives, and rice fields and buildings have been fired to cut off supplies from the attacking army. At Iloilo, on the island of Panay, in the early part of last week, an engagement was precipitated by the enemy's attack on an outpost. On this occasion 200 Filipinos were killed and 300 wounded. The American loss was slight. The island of Negros, too, threatens trouble, and a state of unrest appears to prevail throughout the archipelago. The rainy season begins in May, and already the tropical heat is proving an effective ally for the rebels. Major-General Otis realizes the need of pushing the conflict to a conclusion as soon as possible.

The Army Court of Inquiry met in New York last week and took testimony from Governor Theodore Roosevelt regarding the charges made by General Miles that the beef furnished the soldiers in the Cuban and Porto Rican campaigns was unfit for use. When asked, "Could you not eat it when served with onions and potatoes?" Governor Roosevelt replied, "I think at that time I could have eaten my hat, if I could have had onions and potatoes. The men would have eaten anything with fresh vegetables. They stewed some of the meat with mangoes and ate it. Some of the men seemed to eat the meat without difficulty or distress, but it was not suitable for sick or half sick men." He further said, replying to a question, "I wish to say unhesitatingly that it was utterly unfit and unwholesome for troops. My experience proves beyond a shadow of a doubt or question that at its best the canned roast beef was unpalatable, and at its worst it was uneatable and unwholesome."

Mr. Greville was persuaded, when he was over sixty years of age, to attend a spiritualistic seance. Foster, the presiding medium, was in great form, and the revelation was astounding. Greville sat silent, and his aged, wizened face was emotionless as a mask. Suddenly the medium grew excited, and said to the old gentleman:

"A female form is bending over you. O, the extraordinary likeness!"

Greville sighed.

"She lifts her hands to bless you."

Greville sighed again.

"It is your mother."

"Ah, poor thing!" said Greville. "I am glad."

"She smiles. She says all is well with her."

Greville sighed again, and said, "I am delighted."

"She says she will see you soon. You are old and you must meet her before long."

Then Greville quietly observed, "That's very true. I'm going to take tea with her this evening."

A woman in Paris or London may discover that the tail of a bird "sets her off." She walks forth, and lo! tails are the rage, and millions of birds have been slaughtered for the mere gratification of tender-hearted woman. It is not an exaggeration to say that in whatever part of the world beautiful birds are found, there will be found also the agents of the draper and the milliner. The part they play is that

A WOMAN'S LIFE WORK.

Including Thirty Year's Service on the Underground Railroad and in the War.

BY LAURA HAVILAND.

This is a story of a wonderful life. The author was an active Anti-Slavery agitator and through her underground railroad work assisted hundreds of slaves to escape from bondage. During the war she spent about two years taking care of the sick and wounded. Through her efforts more than 2,000 Union Soldiers were liberated. She accomplished a great work in providing for the Freedmen of Kansas after the close of the war. She was the founder of the State Public School, at Coldwater, Mich., an institution which was the first of its kind in the world. The Industrial School for Girls at Adrian Mich., almost utterly owes its first existence, and especially its name to her efforts. Haviland Academy at Haviland, Kansas, was named in her honor, as also the town in which it is located. At the World's Fair she was introduced by President Palmer as "The Mother of Philanthropy," and well she deserves the title. Her experience as told in this book will be read with thrilling interest.

This book is printed on good paper and contains 625 pages. It is bound in cloth with red edges. The retail price of the book is $1.50. We will send it postpaid, for $1.00. Address, of supplying the demand. Woman wants. The striking expression, "murderous millinery," is current in speeches and writing on the subject. "Feather-headed women," as, indeed, they are in more ways than one, is a term which might be used more frequently than it is with much advantage. Surely they invite some such public stigma by exhibiting themselves as they do in the relics of murdered innocence.—"London Saturday Review."

A DEED FROM WILLIAM PENN.

A deed by William Penn by his commissioners, Edward Shipen, Griffith Owen, Thomas Story, and James Logan, was brought to the Delaware County Trust, Title Insurance and Safe Deposit Company, along with other title papers. This deed was dated 1702, and, owing to its great antiquity and excellent state of preservation, became an object of great curiosity among the clerks.

A singular feature in connection with the deed is that the original grant of land conveyed by Penn was made to Thomas Minshall, and is now held by Thomas Minshall, a descendant, the deed never having passed out of the possession of the Minshall family. The grant is in Middletown Township, and consisted of seven hundred and fifty-three acres of land. The parchment is a huge affair, and connected with it by a piece of blue string is the seal, red wax, four inches across. The face bears the inscription, "1699, Truth, Peace, Love and Plenty." In the center are three ears of corn and a vine. On the reverse side is inscribed, "William Penn. Chief Propriator and Governour of Pennsylvania." These words are in the center, while top and bottom are the words "Mercy" and "Justice." The seal is carefully preserved in a round tin box, and does not bear a scratch.—Philadelphia Press.

It is to me a continual torture to contrast, in traveling, the amount of energy displayed in the sale of soap, pills, and whiskey, with the slow and sleepy once-a-week style of gospeling, so largely prevalent amongst the followers of Jesus Christ. Let us make the world remember Calvary.—William Booth.

that each season has its own attractions, and help them to group the characteristics of each. The opening buds, the returning birds, the streams that run full and free after their icy fetters are broken by the warm winds of spring, the full leafage and abundant bloom of summer, the mellow prime of autumn, with its gathered harvests, and the white silence of winter, with its wonders of ice and snow. The delicate days possibly be "bound each to each by natural piety." The Gentlewoman.

JOTTINGS.

Cecil Rhodes, England's great empire builder, who, only a few months since, was in doubtful repute in his own country, and cordially hated by the Germans, is again in high favor, and has even been favored with a personal interview with Emperor William regarding the proposed Cairo-to-Cape railroad, Rhodes's pet scheme.

Should the project to connect the ends of the Dark Continent be consummated, a vast system of railways and lake boats, covering a stretch of 5,000 miles, would go far toward dispelling the gloom in which Africa is now shrouded, and would open up great possibilities for the spread of civilization.

Professor Othmer C. Marsh, of Yale, who died on the 18th, was one of the most noted scientists of the day. He was an indefatigable investigator, and his researches in paleontology, geology, and kindred subjects, have added more to the knowledge of such branches of learning than those of any man living.

Sir Wilfred Laurier, believing that a total majority vote of only 13,916 in the whole Dominion of Canada in favor of the recent prohibition plebiscite did not represent the true consensus of opinion, has refused legislation prohibiting the liquor traffic. The rural sentiment in Canada strongly favors prohibitory measures, but this is counterbalanced by a decidedly opposite sentiment in the cities.

An anti-imperialist address has been issued by some of the most eminent citizens of the United States, calling upon the Government to take immediate steps for a cessation of the present Philippine war, to confer with the Philippine leaders regarding the future of the islands, and recommending the establishment of independence under the protection and assistance of this Government. The signers to the address include the names of such men as Geo. F. Edmunds, Chas. Francis Adams, Carl Schurz, John Sherman, Charles Elliot Norton, Theodore L. Cuyler, etc.

King Oscar of Sweden and Norway has signed the decree by which the Norwegian flag is purged of the "Jack" which formed the outward sign of the union with Sweden. Norway has long been restive under a sense of inferiority, and of an indefinable jealousy of her imagined rival. The Norwegians want independence, and it is likely that the union of the two countries will soon be merely nominal.

The mausoleum of the Mahdi has been mutilated by artillery, his grave has been opened and the head has been cut from his embalmed body and sent to London, partly for "scientific purposes," partly to render the Dervishes more willing to accept civilization by destroying their belief in the Mahdi's divine mission.

The National American Woman Suffrage Association will hold its 31st Annual Convention at Grand Rapids, Mich., April 27th to May 4th, inclusive. The call for the session is issued by Susan B. Anthony, the veteran president of the organization. The ballot for woman is her slogan, and no person living is better able to defend the cause than she.

"Take it back

—go to some grocer who will give you Pearl-ine." That's the only way to do when they send you an imitation.

The popularity of Pearl-ine begets the habit of calling anything that's washing-powder, "Pearl-ine." Those who notice the difference in name, think perhaps "it's about the same thing." It isn't. Nothing else equals Pearl-ine, the original and standard washing compound. 578

HULDA:

The Pentecostal Prophetess.

BY BYRON J. REES.

152 Pages. Bound in Cloth. Price, 50c., postpaid.

A short life story and seventeen of the sermons of Hulda A. Rees, together with her portrait and picture of her early church. This book needs no other introduction than for the reader to know that seventeen of her sermons, which Sister Rees preached with such accompaniments of power and blessing, are for the most part to compose it. The life-story is short yet comprehensive, the writer of it avoiding anything of a eulogistic nature and making the facts of the life serve as an appropriate introduction to the character back of the sermons.

Mrs. E. E. Williams, in a beautiful poem, which is also a part of the book, gives some refreshing glimpses into the character of Sister Rees.

Esther T. Pritchard also contributes a "Tribute," glowing with fervor and truth.

The Virtues of a Good Cream Separator.

(Just What a Farmer Wants.)

Stillwater, Pa., 1898.
"We have the De Laval 'Humming-Bird' cream separator, and I am satisfied that it is one of the best investments that a farmer can make. First, we gave it a test and we gained one pound on every six pounds of butter, and we got a much better quality of butter. The washing of crocks and cans and all this extra work is done away with, and we have the warm skim-milk to feed to calves and pigs, on which they do so much better, and it takes only from ten to fifteen minutes to churn. It seems a small chore now to churn. I would not do without a machine for what it cost for a great deal. I am well satisfied it is just what a farmer wants, and with the extra butter and time and labor and expense it saves us it will easily pay for itself in one year."

HARVEY R. ASH.

(Perfectly Simple in Operation.)

Warrensburg, Mo., Jan. 19, 1899.
"We have now used the De Laval 'Humming-Bird' three years and have not missed a single milking in that time. Last year we made 1,800 pounds of butter. The machine is simply perfect and perfectly simple in operation. Our little girl ten years old can operate it, take it apart and clean it and put it together again."

MRS. EZRA ROOP.

(A Very Durable Machine.)

Leeds, Mass., 1898.
"We have used the 'Alpha-Baby' No. 3 for over four years with the best of results; in fact, we could not get along without it, as it saves so much labor. We can make more butter and of a finer quality than in any other way. It is a great saver of ice, also, as there is only a very little required to keep the cream at an even temperature. It is a very durable machine. We have had no expense whatever except for oil and bowl rings. Can see no reason why it will not last us a lifetime."

JAMES CLAPP & SON.

(Alpha-Baby Superiority.)

White Pigeon, Mich., Dec., 19, 1898.
"I am using an 'Alpha-Baby' No. 2 and take pleasure in writing of its excellent qualities. I was using a Cooley creamer, but consented to try a 'Baby' last Fall. The first week I made 5 pounds more butter than I had the week before with the creamer, and the butter was of finer quality, finer grain, n'cer flavor, and could be kept longer without getting strong. We find a good market for separator butter the year round at from 22 to 25 cents per pound. I had tried other makes of separators, but never found anything which possessed the same merit as the 'Alpha-Baby.' It runs easier, skims cleaner, at different temperatures, and can be washed in no time. If a farmer has ten cows well taken care of and a separator he will find this to be the most profitable branch of his business."

Richard Croker, of Tammany Hall, has just leased for a term of ten years an entire floor in one of New York's largest buildings at an annual rental of $20,000. Croker's influence may wane in the next decade, but he evidently does not mean that the waves of political strife shall leave him stranded in want. His future is evidently well secured, and with his large interests in the Automobile Company, he is likely to add considerable more to his already large property.

John Sherman, who has been dangerously ill while on a pleasure trip to the Antilles, is doing nicely, notwithstanding a false report which one day last week startled the country with news of his death.

On the 19th of April the silver members of the Democratic National Committee will meet at a banquet in New York City. Wilham Jennings Bryan has consented to be present and the affair will be known as the "dollar dinner," to distinguish it from Tammany's more elaborate occasion of a similar sort.

The Peace Conference which has been called by the Czar of Russia will convene at The Hague on the 18th of May. Russia will be represented by M. de Staal, her Ambassador in London.

"Let us be frank with ourselves," says the New York "Churchman." "Either we believe that our episcopal elections are under Divine guidance or we do not. If we think that God leaves to human wisdom alone in those days of trial of men's souls, then all the honest electioneering methods of the political caucus and the nominating convention are lawful and right. Only we must not expect to escape the political evils of that system. We, too, shall have our struggle for the primaries and our capturing of delegates. Possibly, also, we shall have what is charitably called 'undue influence.' And we may be sure that men so elected will care more for the office than for its duties, and will be men to whom, as Milton said of those in his time, 'the hungry sheep look up and are not fed.' It, on the other hand, we believe that the Holy Spirit still works in and through the church, we must act on this conviction, and endeavor by every means to keep episcopal elections upon this high plane."

THE THRESHING FLOOR.

Oft you may see wherein some barn's wide-door,
In winter, underneath the snowy eaves,
The great floor covered thick with summer's sheaves
And moving horses, tethered four and four,
Tramping in endless circles, o'er and o'er,—
A seeming bootless task, as one believes,
Yet at end, when day her sickle sheathes,
Behold! the yellow wheat upon the floor.
My soul, be thou contented, and full fain
Though yearning for the boundless prairies sweet,
Trudge round life's circles still, with willing feet;
And from the sheaves of trial and of pain,
By patience strong, and by endurance meet,
Tramp out, ere evening comes, the golden grain!

THE ORIGIN OF COLD WAVES.

It is frequently asked, Where do cold waves originate? The coldest portion of the North American continent is, in all probability, in the Saskatchewan Valley, east of Mount Hooker and Mount Head, both of which are situated in the Rocky Mountain range that divides British Columbia from this valley and the Alberta country. The height of this mountain range prevents the eastern trend or flow of vapor from the Pacific Ocean from crossing over into this valley, as it would were it not for the presence of this high range of mountains. Yet it must not be supposed that extreme cold always prevails here, because at certain intervals the vapor from the Pacific flows east by way of the Alaskan peninsula through the upper valley of the Athabasca River into Alberta and the Valley of the Saskatchewan, and there, meeting with a more southern and eastern flow of vapor that flows through the gap in the mountain range, made by the Bay of San Juan, it warms and expands the atmosphere, crosses the path of the cold wave, and a warmth of from 20 degrees to 40 degrees is the result, as we often see graphically marked on the weather map by red dots here and there on its surface.

UGAR is not improved by the addition of sand; neither is White Lead improved by the addition of Zinc and Barytes, yet there are hundreds of such mixtures branded and sold as "White Lead," "Pure White Lead," etc.

But this does not satisfactorily answer why it is that the cold wave leaves its home in the above-mentioned valley to go on a southern tour at a time of the year when the normal temperature should be sufficiently cold. To find the cause of those successive cold waves which we are experiencing from time to time this winter, we will have to look in quite another direction, down to the northern tropical latitude, where the great evaporation of those warm currents and ocean surfaces is carried westward from the Atlantic Ocean by the trade winds, and is massed together between those winds and the eastern offshore winds, blowing sometimes from Florida and at other times from Texas, but in either case promoting a cyclonic action, which has the effect of enlarging the area of the storm, and the immediate result is an enormous expansion of the atmosphere usually denominated "low." As this low atmosphere moves across the surface of the Middle or Eastern States it pours down large quantities of water in the shape of

"Have a soul of your own. Be your true self. Think, realize, reflect, until you have a measure of unborrowed conviction, which establishes a centre of repose, and is a source of happiness and contentment—a centre which yields to no outer tumult, but is ever receptive to the Divine Self; which never harbors fear or doubt, no matter what the wavering self may say; which never wavers, never forgets that the individual belongs to the Universal, never relaxes its hold of the deepest, the truest, the most spiritual in life, come what may, be it sorrow, illness, or any calamity which life may bring; a centre which you will probably discover at last rests on the love of God for its strength, making it part of eternity and of all power and substance, though it be but a point in the infinite whole. And, when you lose this poise, regain it, as though you would say, 'Sit still, my soul; thou at least must not lose thy composure nor thy awareness of the eternal presence of God.'"

FOR THE AMERICAN FRIEND.
I STAND WITHIN HIS LOVE.
BY E. H. J.

I stand within His love,
A helpless child and weak;
I dare not take one step alone,
Yet Christ is all I seek.

I stand within His love,
Oh wondrous love and free!
How could the Saviour stoop to save
A little child like me?

I stand within His love,
Oh length, oh breadth, oh height!
Christ is my strength and He my stay,
He holds me by His might.

THE NEW BIRTH.

WE have sometimes spoken of a Christian as a man at his best morally and spiritually. A "constant reader" objects to the expression as "incorrect in fact and in doctrine." First, because many Christians are not at their best and secondly, because it ignores the doctrine of the new birth.

The trouble with this first objection is that the maker of it is talking about imperfect, nominal, ordinary Christians who do not realize "the hope of their calling," while we are always talking about the Christian as he ought to be, as he was meant to be, and as he might be, if he would use the Divine power offered him. We do not ever propose to use this low type Christian as our standard of measure, and when we say "Christian" we shall always mean a man who is living in the power of Christ and who is either at his best or pressing on with his eyes fixed toward the mark to become at his best.

The expression which we have used is not open to the second objection at all. No man can be at his best without a "new birth." The best life does not begin until a man is born anew. We should as soon think of ignoring the sunlight in the world as of ignoring the new birth. It is not only a cardinal truth in doctrine, it is also a mighty fact of experience. Every man who has seriously tried to be moral and righteous by his own efforts, by rule or by law, has learned the bitter lesson which Paul learned—that at his best on this line he is a wretched and miserable man. The victory does not come this way, for the dominion and law of sin are too profoundly real to be escaped by a set of "good resolutions" however long.

The only way to get a "new man" is by "a new creation," and this is the very essence of the Gospel and the fundamental idea of the Apostle Paul. We are not able to define or to explain the new birth, simply because we cannot explain or define Life anywhere. It is just as difficult to explain the first birth as it is "the birth from above." "We cannot tell whence it cometh" with our organs of sense. But Life comes always from Life and the fact is that the soul's new life, its power of expansion, its sense of freedom from the power of sin and its consciousness of "translation into the kingdom of God's dear Son," is as really a birth, as truly a new creation as the first birth was, and there is but one source from whom such a change, such a transformation could come. "He that hath the Son hath Life."

Well, now the way is open for such a man to be AT HIS BEST, to become a complete and typical man. He has Life and he may have power as fast as he utilizes it. He may more than overcome. He may live joyous and free in the midst of trial and temptation. He puts on Christ's righteousness. This is our idea of a man at his best.

A CHRISTIAN MINUS SOMETHING.

In a recent editorial we maintained that a Quaker is not a Christian plus something, but simply a complete Christian of the apostolic type. The article has naturally been misunderstood, for we thought and spokesolely of the ideal Christian—i. e., the Christian as he ought to be, and some of our readers thought instead of the ordinary Christian as he really is. The article, however, clearly defines what, to us, the term Christian means, and with that in view we believe our position to be the right one.

But we are forced to admit that some Quakers do not come up to our definition—in other words, they are Christians minus something, and sometimes, indeed, the subtraction is so great that they hardly deserve the great name “Christian” at all. A Christian is a man whose life is in Christ, though the word is sometimes used for one who merely lives in a Christian country as distinguished from a heathen.

Now, it is possible to sit every “First Day” through a whole life time in a Friends’ meeting, to say “Thee” and “Thou” scrupulously, to wear the “plain dress” and to bear a strong testimony against war, oaths and a hireling ministry without being in Christ at all. In fact, one might do all these things and still be, if a Christian at all, a Christian minus almost everything essential, and such persons there have been.

There are, too, very many Friends who are in no sense “formalists,” who glory, in fact, that they are free from traditions, who yet are decidedly minus Christians. They need to learn that uncircumcision does not avail any more than circumcision does. But the most serious trouble with us is probably what Paul would call “babyism” and what modern writers call “infantilism.” It is the failure to go on toward the goal of spiritual manhood, it is arrested development after birth. It is true that a baby belongs to the genus homo, but what could be more pitiful than a fifty-year-old baby! It is true, too, that a person “born anew” is a Christian, but how lamentable it is to see such a person fail to “put on the new man.” The baby is at the mercy of a lot of child’s diseases which he escapes when he matures, and in somewhat the same way the infantile, unformed Christian is in danger of a lot of childish religious notions—spiritual diseases, if the words are allowable—which never trouble the more mature Christian. It is the minus Christian who is constantly running off the track and who has never-ending troubles to adjust his faith.

But how are such persons to be helped? What they need is not scolding and whipping, but better food and more spiritual nourishment. The only cure for “infantilism” is something which will set the normal currents of life going in the little body, and life soon shows itself in growth. The only way to help our minus Friends is to carry them straight to the heart and centre of spiritual life, and when the normal growth comes, as it will come, the truth will be evident that the complete, full-grown Christian is what we have always meant by the word “Quaker.”

GENERAL CHURCH NOTES.

In view of the somewhat prevalent misunderstanding regarding the use of the Bible by the Catholics, it is pertinent to notice that the Pope has lately addressed a brief to the Cardinal Bishop of Paris, granting special indulgences to those “who shall read the Bible devoutly for a quarter of an hour” each day. The important point to observe in this whole question of Bible reading by Catholics is that they are merely forbidden the use of any version not authorized by the Church.

The Ninth International Sunday School Convention is scheduled for April 26th to 30th. It will be held in Atlanta, Ga., and will be attended by many delegates and interested workers from the United States, the British North American provinces, and Mexico. The convention meets once every three years, when reports are read, the condition of the Sunday Schools commented upon, the needs discussed, and valuable suggestions offered, methods of study explained, and committees appointed. The most important committee is that which has charge of preparing the International Lessons. This is elected for six years. It is now engaged in selecting the lessons from 1901-1905. As now arranged Sunday School work is progressing rapidly in numbers, in methods, and in the spirit of unity. More than 1,500,000 officers and teachers and 12,000,000 scholars are enrolled in the United States. This marks a gain since 1896 of more than 100,000 officers and teachers, and 1,000,000 scholars.

The old question of a reunion of the two great Presbyterian bodies in the United States—the Presbyterian Church North and the Presbyterian Church South—has recently been revived in a number of journals representative of both branches. The separation occurred during the Civil War, and it is felt by many that the causes which led to the rupture no longer exists, and that union would be conducive to strength and harmony. The general trend of opinion of the Presbyterian Church South, however, appears to be against reunion, and though a feeling of friendship exists it does not seem desirable to take the new step proposed. It is said that those in the South who do favor making such an effort, feel that it would not succeed, and that it would result in discord among themselves.

“The Christian Observer” (Louisville) states as its belief that “if a majority should in any way push the union in question in the near future, a minority would remain behind, so that we would have a division in our own territory.”

There may be good reasons of territorial or geographical boundaries to limit the extension of legislative unity, but it seems a pity that the Presbyterians of the two sections could not show a more hopeful spirit in advancing church unity by joining in some measure of fraternity.

THE VALUE OF THE ANSWERED QUERIES.*

BY JAMES CAREY, JR.

"And He said unto me, Son of man, can these bones live? And I answered, O, Lord God, Thou knowest . . . So I prophesied as He commanded me and the breath came unto them and they lived."—Ez. 37: 3, 10.

The subject assigned to me for the evening, "The Value of the Answered Queries as Representing the State of the Church," naturally divides itself into two heads: the queries themselves and their answers, and I propose considering the subject under each of these heads.

When I was first notified of my selection to present this subject, the vision of Ezekiel came into my mind, feeling, in common with so many others, how lifeless these queries had become with their stereotyped answers, known to us almost as well as the queries themselves. Could it be possible that there was any real life in the queries when so evidently all life had disappeared from their accustomed answers? After reading and re-reading them and endeavoring to subdivide them according to their subjects, it seemed as if the breath had already begun to come back into them, and I was soon surprised to see them stand out in a wonderfully living way, representing so many of those great truths and testimonies which our Society so long in advance of others lived for, and if I fail to add to your information or to increase your interest in these queries, I will feel repaid for my work by the new light which has come to me about them.

The twelve queries required by the Discipline to be answered in our monthly and quarterly meetings cover a very broad field, as broad almost as the view of our religious Society. Whether any or all of them should be categorically answered according to our present practice, or should rather be relegated to those already designated as "unanswered," no one who gives them a careful consideration can help being impressed with the high religious and moral standard which they uphold, and with the breadth of spiritual view they cover. Strict honesty in business, care of poor members—every-day, practical duties, enjoined side by side with the necessity of Christian love, church obligations, care of the children and their guarded education. Does not the very fact of a church upholding, and to a remarkable degree living up to, such a standard of living for so many years afford some evidence of the value of these queries—whether answered or not—of the state of the Religious Society of Friends?

For the convenience of considering them I have divided the queries into three classes:

* The following paper and the paper published in Number 4 of THE AMERICAN FRIEND, on "The Origin and Object of the Queries" (By John Nicholson) were read before a "Conference" held during Baltimore Quarterly Meeting, First month, at Baltimore. It was felt by a number of Friends attending the Conference, that the Papers would be of interest to the readers of THE AMERICAN FRIEND, and it was suggested that the committee in charge of the conference, with the consent of the writers of the papers, should forward them for publication. (A third paper was read before the conference, on the unanswered queries, but was not forwarded with others owing to the writer of the paper not being able to recopy it in time for publication.)

1st. The Statistical (1, 6, 7, 11 and 12), covering attendance on and behaviour in meetings, care of poor members, education of children, acknowledgment of ministers and appointment of elders, and the establishment and discontinuance of meetings.

2d. Those referring to Moral Delinquencies (2, 5, 9 and 10), embracing the necessity of Christian love, the discouragement of talebearing and detraction and the settlement of differences, the disuse of intoxicants and avoidance of all places of resort calculated to injure the morals. Honesty in business, living within one's circumstances, care in the selection of a trade or business within one's ability to manage, and, finally, the careful and loving oversight over those who are offenders with regard to any of the subjects queried after, as well as over those who infringe other moral obligations recognized by all Christians.

3d. Those referring to our Special Testimonies 3, 4, 8), covering the following subjects: moderation and simplicity of life, the avoidance of harmful reading and evil companionship, freedom of the gospel ministry, the sinfulness according to the Christian law of oaths, military services, clandestine trade, prize goods, lotteries and slavery.

As will be seen, this division is not entirely accurate. I have put among moral delinquencies the query referring to the use of intoxicants,—for so many years testified against almost alone by our Society; while in the class of special testimonies I have inserted those against clandestine trade, lotteries and slavery,—all of which are now contrary to the law of the land, and yet were, in the early days of our Society, commonly practised by men standing well in the business, and perhaps I might say also, in the so-called religious world.

As a whole these twelve queries would seem to cover a large part of our daily walk and conversation. They start with the child who is a member only by birthright, and inquire whether his parents are bringing him up by example as well as by precept to be a good Friend, which ought to mean to us a true Christian and a good citizen. They seek to procure him a good and guarded education, to keep him from books or associates which will harm his morals. If he is needy, they would present his case for aid; if out of work, see that he is aided in securing it, with due care exercised in its selection, so that he may be protected from the financial ruin which is sure to follow engaging in business or trade beyond his ability to manage. They desire that he shall be instilled with the highest regard for justice and honorable dealings in business, requiring him to make his word as good as his neighbor's oath. They call on him to be careful to live peaceably with all men, and to keep his tongue from evil; and finally, though the query stands first on the list, he is enjoined against the too frequent practice of forsaking the regular assembling together for worship of those who profess to be following the Great Head of the Church.

As I have said, the queries deal more especially with the outward and practical life of our members, and it is not intended to be intimated that our child and youth and man can learn from them all or a greater parts of the truths of the Christian religion, but if he is faithful in the attendance on meetings for worship, and there is in these a live gospel ministry, if he is trained from his youth to read and study the Holy Scriptures, it is his own fault if under such careful nurture and admonition as called for by these queries he grows up careless and indifferent to his highest duties—love to God and love to man.

It is but a casual glance which we have been able to give at these most comprehensive “questions” which have for many years played so important a part in our Church Discipline. To understand them as they should be understood will require most careful study, and I hope that this will be a result of this conference. It will be necessary now to pass to the second branch of our subject—their answers.

If we read our Discipline (p. 55), we will find it provides as follows: “The following twelve queries are to be read, deliberately considered, and answered in each Preparative and Monthly Meeting of men and women Friends once in a year, in order to convey an explicit account in writing to the Quarterly Meeting next preceding the Yearly Meeting, and from thence an account is to be forwarded to the Yearly Meeting. The first, second and tenth queries are to be read, considered and answered in all the other Quarterly Meetings, and in the Preparative and Monthly Meetings which report thereto. This regulation does not apply to the Baltimore Quarterly Meeting which immediately succeeds the Yearly Meeting.” Immediately preceding these directions are the following paragraphs, numbered 1 and 2:

1. The intention of our Yearly Meeting in directing the following queries to be answered relative to the life and conduct of our members, is not only to inquire into the state of our meetings, but also to encourage our members to examine themselves as to how far they act consistently with our religious principles.

2. Individual faithfulness to Christ and daily dependence upon the help of the Holy Spirit are necessary to growth in the truth and vitality in the Church; but we believe that this inquiry will tend to promote the religious life of our members and the upholding of our Christian discipline in a lively and healthy condition.

At the foot of the page is the following note: “The preceding paragraphs, numbered 1 and 2, are to be read in the Quarterly Meetings next preceding the Yearly Meeting, and in the Monthly Meetings reporting thereto, previous to answering the queries.”

I have quoted thus extensively from the Discipline on this subject that we may know just what the intention of the Yearly Meeting was in directing these queries to be answered, and how this shall be done so that we may realize what a different practice in this regard has of late grown up, and consider whether the very change is not largely responsible for the lifelessness of the answers which we forward to our Superior Meetings.

In these busy times, busy with Church affairs as well as with daily duties, how little time and thought do we seem to be able to give to these queries in our Monthly and Quarterly Meetings. It seems difficult to deliberately consider and transact the other business which comes before us each month without prolonging the Meeting beyond the time at the disposal of our members, and we have delegated the deliberate consideration of the queries and the preparation of their answers to our overseers, reserving the right to make such changes in the answers in the Meeting as we may think best; but in the hurried time which we can give them, it is not often that other than verbal changes can be considered.

We hear a great deal in these days of progressive revelation of adapting our religion as well as ourselves to the age in which we live,—so much so that the references to ideas and practices of the past often meet with but scant favor; and yet I am going to risk this objection in quoting a well-known saying of George Fox: “Friends hold all your meetings in the power of God.” It has always been a root principle of our Society that in our business as well as our religious meetings we are to seek for and endeavor to act under the guidance of the Holy Spirit. I would not even imply that in so doing our mental natures are to play an insignificant part, and that we are to trust to an immediate divine guidance in the matter before us, but rather that our best and most trained intellects shall be placed at the disposal of the Great Head of the Church, and that in the transaction of business, as well as in the times of worship, we shall all endeavor to know what is the mind of the Spirit in the matter before us, and not depend entirely upon our own independent judgment, which is so often warped by prejudice and preconceptions.

If the retrospect which I have suggested simply shows us the impossibility of connecting the past with the future and the necessity of moving forward in accordance with the spirit and tendency of the age,—if our Monthly Meetings are to be so conducted as we conduct the meetings of our philanthropic and charitable associations, trusting that we shall be prepared in advance for the transaction of the business which shall come before us,—it seems to me that the deliberate consideration and answering of these twelve queries, as required by the Discipline, can find no true and lasting place in such meetings, and that we must be content to forward to our Superior Meetings such a report as a careful committee can prepare for us. I may be wrong, but it seems to me that the very nature of these queries and the method of answering them which is called for by our Discipline, requires a meeting for business in which due time can, and will, be given to their deliberate consideration, for personal examination as to our standing towards them, and for a conscientious and united preparation of their answers for the benefit of our Superior Meetings. I am not sure but that the careful consideration of the state of the Society which these queries involve, whether in the Monthly, Quarterly or Yearly Meetings, is not, after all, the great object of their existence. It must needs be that a similarity shall exist in the answers prepared from year to year, for I do not understand that it is the intention that such answers shall deal with individual delinquencies unless the advice of the Superior Meeting is desired; but rather that they should present the general state of the meeting. It may be, therefore, that the time has come for the committee's report to take the place of the answers to the queries, but I am sure that it will be a sad day for our Society when the only place where we can find the queries themselves will be in an out-of-date Discipline, or in an ancient Yearly Meeting report. It is easy to criticize; it is easy to advise; but it is hard to recommend, and especially so at this present juncture, for, as you know, the whole subject of the queries is no doubt claiming the careful consideration of the Conference Committee on a proposed joint Discipline. While, however, our present Discipline remains in force, it seems to me that there are several points upon which we might all agree, by which the queries and their answers will better serve the purpose of their creation.

1st. More time should be allowed in our meetings for business, for the careful and prayerful consideration of the queries, and more care exercised in the matter than in the manner of their answers.

2d. That in the meeting in which all the queries are to be answered for the Yearly Meeting, the two sections of the Discipline which I have quoted shall be read, and a serious effort be individually made to seek for that divine help which will enable us each one to know how to properly answer the queries for themselves and for the meeting.

3rd. In preparing the report of the Quarterly Meeting, instead of summarizing the answers for the various Monthly Meetings, which, as is usually felt, makes them lifeless, the plan suggested in the last Yearly Meeting shall be carried out and an epitome be made of these answers whereby the Yearly Meeting will have in the words of each meeting a short statement of its condition.

It might be wise to go a step further and adopt the practice of London Yearly Meeting for avoiding the tediousness and loss of time in reading over in the Yearly Meeting the very similar answers for the different Quarterly Meetings, which, with changes to meet our needs, would read as follows:

"A copy, duly signed, of the answers to the queries agreed on in each Quarterly Meeting of Friends is to be forwarded to the clerks of the Yearly Meeting, within one week after such meeting, with the view to the preparation of an epitome of all the answers for the Quarterly Meetings. This epitome is to be read in the Yearly Meeting previous to the meeting entering upon the consideration of the state of the Society.

It may seem that the suggestions which I have made are impracticable—that it is a hopeless task to endeavor to revive the spiritual life of those old and venerated worthies of the past, the twelve answered Queries, and that we must rather be thankful that their work has been so well done in the past. It may be so, but for my part I shall look with hope and confidence for the spiritual breath to come into them, whereby they shall continue to live as a power in our Society for many years to come.

THE LIFE LAID DOWN.

BY RITA E. JENKINS.

"My life is not my own, but Christ's, Who gave it;
And He bestows it upon all the race.
I lose it for His sake, and thus I save it;
I hold it close, but only to expend it:
Accept it, Lord, for others through Thy grace."

The Lord has said, "Reckon yourselves dead indeed unto sin, but alive unto God." The losing of the life for His sake is the saving of it. The lower self, the carnal nature, must die that the Heaven-born nature may have room to live. "The alabaster vase must be broken that the ointment may flow out: the grapes must be crushed that there may be wine; the wheat must be bruised before it can become bread." Our lives, if unbruised and unbroken, are of little use to God or man. "Except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die it abideth alone." The seed planted in the earth dies and is resolved into the elements, but from it springs the tiny blade which thrusts itself upward, seeking light and air, and adding growth to growth until it becomes a thing of beauty and in due time bears the golden grain. So our natural life must die that we may have the abundant life which shall overflow in blessing to others. We must place ourselves unreservedly in the hands of God for the reception of His sanctifying work in us; soul and body must be entirely committed to Him. This implies giving up our money, time, talents, friendships, all for Him to use as He may see fit. If we sink into nothingness at the feet of Jesus He will lift us up. It is our part to lay ourselves down. It is His work to raise us up.

In the sacred word we have some wonderful examples of the "life laid down." Pre-eminent among them is that of Abraham, who, at God's bidding, turned his back upon country and kindred and went out he knew not whither; who, in obedience to God, sent forth Ishmael, the idol of his heart, never to see him more.

But the crucial test of his obedience to God was yet to come,—the giving up of Isaac—not merely his only son, "the goal of his longing, the hope of his life, the joy of his old age, but the heir of all the promises,"—in simple but absolute faith in God's power to raise him even from the dead. Thus was the promise purged, so to speak, from all that was of the flesh; and Abraham's faith was perfected and purified.

Where can we find a life more completely laid down than that of Moses, the deliverer of Israel? Exchanging the royal palace with all its splendor and luxury, with the prospect of some day wielding the kingly sceptre, for the life of a herdsman in the dreary solitude of a desert; refusing to be called the son of Pharaoh's daughter, knowing that his motives would be misunderstood, that he would be considered most ungrateful to his foster-mother, who had rescued him from death, and who had spared no pains to fit him for the proud position of heir to the throne. Yet he preferred rather to suffer affliction with God's chosen people than to enjoy all the riches and honor Egypt could bestow.

As we consider the disciples, who, at the Master's command, forsook all and followed Him, and who after Pentecost went to the uttermost parts of the earth, preaching Christ in the face of suffering, persecution and hardships untold; beaten, stoned, imprisoned, counting not their lives dear unto themselves, that they might witness for Him; and as we see the great army of later martyrs, who unflinchingly went to the stake rather than deny their Saviour, and who sang amid the flames the praises of Him whom they loved better than life; the countless missionaries who in love for their Master have willingly forsaken all this life holds dear to enter upon unrelenting toil and hardships, we have some conception of what is meant by the "life laid down."

The unbelieving world may look upon these lives as wasted. But was Livingstone's life wasted when he gave it, a sacrifice to God, for Africa? No! the very sacrifice made him not only one of our greatest missionaries and explorers, but that sacrificed life has influenced hundreds of young men and women to carry the glad tidings to lost souls.

Some said Harriet Newell's life was wasted when she gave it to missions, then died and was buried far from home,—a bride, missionary, mother, saint, all in one short year,—without having told even one heathen woman the story of the cross. Was that beautiful young life wasted? No! "All this century her name has been one of the strongest inspirations to missionary work. The story of her consecration has kindled in many other women's hearts the flames of love, sending them to carry Christ to dark lands. God broke the alabaster casket that held her life that the fragrance might flow out over the world."

But all these examples pale in lustre before the Great Sacrifice who was offered up on Calvary for our redemption. He left the bosom of the Father and the bright realms of glory, and lived on earth a man of sorrows, and acquainted with grief. He was despised and rejected of men. He was wounded for our transgressions, was bruised for our iniquities, and was brought as a lamb to the slaughter. He suffered thus not only that He might enter sympathetically into the deepest needs of our nature, but that He might teach us how to live victorious and reign, being more than conquerors through Him that loved us.

So let us gladly lay down our lives: put ourselves wholly upon the altar Christ Jesus, that thus we may be sanctified—be so filled and thrilled with His love and life that we shall be an inspiration and a blessing to all whose lives are touched by ours, and know what is the hope of His calling, and what the riches of the glory of His inheritance in the saints, and what is the exceeding greatness of His power to us who believe.

AN ADDRESS ON PEACE IN THE FRENCH CAPITAL.

BY WILLIAM WISTAR COMFORT.

The banquet annually held by the University Club of Paris, on Washington's Birthday, was postponed this year till the first of Third month on account of the national mourning of the French people for their late President.

There was quite a notable gathering of men and women at the banquet, and the list of speakers numbered more than one name well known on both sides of the Atlantic. The guest of honor was W. T. Stead, editor of the English edition of the "Review of Reviews," who, in his earnest remarks on "Universities and Universal Peace," gave something of permanent value to every one within the sound of his voice. What he had to say came from him with such authority and was seasoned with so much reasonable enthusiasm for the cause of universal peace, that I have thought his sentiments might well be repeated in a journal which voices the peaceful aspirations of the Society of Friends. Of course it is not difficult to learn from his public writings what Mr. Stead stands for, and has been standing for in the political and social movements of his time. He is in the first rank of the reformers in England to-day.

From his editorial window he surveys the whole world, and from time to time he descends on America, on Russia, on France, or on the English universities in order to feel the pulse and diagnose the complications of the social fabric.

But though it is easy thus to know the general attitude of this remarkably well-informed and four-square man, it is a rare privilege, especially at this moment in the affairs of men, to hear fresh from his own mouth his honest convictions, and his earnest hopes for the happy solution of the pending problems. Remember that Mr. Stead has a hobby, and that his hobby just now is Universal Peace; but remember, too, that perhaps no one in private life has a better right than he to just this hobby that he is riding. I shall try for the sake of vividness to give Mr. Stead's thoughts as far as possible in his own words.

"I can hardly imagine any one more unfit than myself to speak on the relation of the universities to universal peace. Compared with the rest of you in this gathering, I am an ignoramus. I left school at fourteen to become an errand boy, and never attended any school or university after that time. I have always been on the outside of the universities, only visiting them occasionally, as I did the other day, to see them at Cambridge bestow the degree of Doctor of Laws on General Kitchener for his recent victories in the Soudan. I confess I do not see the connection between the university and universal peace in this instance, nor is the case different at Oxford, the hot-bed of our reactionary thought to-day, as it has been for centuries." (The speaker then spoke of several periods in English history when the University of Oxford had sided with the party of strife and turmoil against the party of tranquillity, law and order).

"Since I am entirely outside of the university circle, and have been educated exclusively in the great university of the world, I shall do well to pass on to the second part of my subject.

"General Porter has been relating to us in what he called his 'conversational style,' but which seemed to me a fine example of after-dinner oratory, some traits of the personality of George Washington. On this point let me say that the English people of to-day are very far from regarding your celebration of the Fourth of July as an anti-British celebration. Long ago we realized the true greatness—may I not say the superhuman greatness—of your first President? For while General Porter was trying to emphasize the human side of Washington's character, he produced in one of his anecdotes the most damning testimony to the contrary. For shall we not regard as superhuman any man who could keep his personal accounts for a term of seven years, involving expenditures to the sum of eighty thousand dollars, without making a single blot and with only one erasure of four words? Yes, Englishmen of to-day recognize in Washington the greatest Englishman of the eighteenth century; and in this day of annexations, we want to annex George Washington and place him in our calendar of saints.

"It may interest some of you to know that there still stands in London the church where Robert Browning was baptized. In this church, now called Browning Hall, there is held every Fourth of July a meeting and celebration in honor of your national birthday, attended solely by British subjects, and presided over for the past five years by myself. I speak in behalf of the great middle class of Englishmen to which I belong by birth and training, when I say that the verdict in regard to the war of American Independence has long since been reversed. We realize now that it was an internal contest of Englishmen against Englishmen,—you fighting for just those rights of self-government which have always been most sacred to Englishmen, and we under the impulsion of a foreign monarch, George III, seeking to wrest them from you. We were whipped, well whipped, and let me say I wish we had been whipped sooner.

"Futhermore, the people of the middle classes in England do not regard America as a foreign country nor the Americans as a foreign people. For you have adhered far more closely in your institutions and government to the ideas of the English, than have we ourselves. On the occasion of my visits to America, I have felt much more at home among you than I ordinarily feel in England. The reason is you have avoided some institutions like the Established Church and the House of Lords which are barriers in the line of development we recognize as natural to the English people. On the other hand, you have created and upheld some institutions which are your safeguards and the glory of your national history. I mean your Supreme Court, your Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs, and your written constitution, which assures your liberties and gives permanence to the government fabric. Lord Salisbury, our Prime Minister, rarely makes a speech in which he does not pay a tribute to the superiority of some of your American institutions. If Lord Salisbury indulges in such praise, you may take it as well founded. I have spoken in this strain to show you that I, in common with the great body of Englishmen, see and admire in America the practical working-out of our own ideals and our own hopes.

"I should not like to miss this opportunity of giving voice before such a representative and intellectual gathering as this, to some thoughts of wider range and just now of vastly greater import. I hope I may trust that, in so far as your sphere of influence may permit, you will strive to disseminate the principles of which I am about to speak. There has been a great deal said of late about an alliance of the English-speaking peoples for defensive and offensive purposes against the other nations of the world, the idea seeming to be that we shall step in and possess the land and then keep the others out. But, my friends, there is something for us to do far more important and more noble than that. It is by standing together, to strive to prevent any great clash of armies on the continent of Europe. You in America can be of great service in this endeavor. For you have two mighty considerations in your favor which we English as a nation lack. I mean your good understanding with this Republic of France, and your good relations of long standing with the Russian Empire. I pray to God that it may continue to be so. The situation between England and these two countries is by no means so good. With centuries of strife behind them, England and France have found it hard to be reasonable; but as the result of recent negotiations I have strong hopes for a better understanding in the future. As for Russia, as you know, we are conflicting with her at every point along our frontiers in the far East. The tension is higher and we stand in need of the good offices of America as mediator.

"This leads me to say a word in regard to the Russian Emperor, towards whom personally, as some of you may know, I have recently been in a peculiar relation. Mr. John Morley, when he was chief secretary for Ireland, once said to me: 'I find it takes all my time and my best energy to look after the interests of the five million people in Ireland. What must be the weight on the shoulders of that young man who has recently been called upon to watch over the 129,000,000 inhabitants of the Russias?'

"Upon the occasion of my recent interview with the Emperor I quoted to him these words of Mr. Morley's. His answer suggests that letter of your own Washington, already quoted by General Porter, in which the great man wrote from Norristown: 'My situation is such that I would not wish my greatest enemy on this side of the grave in my place.' The answer of the young Emperor was almost in the same words: 'The burden, indeed, is a heavy one,' he said, 'how heavy no one knows who has not had to bear it; but I assure you I should not wish my greatest enemy in my place.' You may imagine what an impression this made upon me, coming as it did from the sad, earnest face of the young Emperor.

"And now I must close, for I have another speech to make at another banquet. My parting words are to stand together for peace, and in so doing we shall carry out the principles of him whom we have gathered here to honor.

FOR THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

A CHRISTIAN BUT NOT A QUAKER.

BY GERTRUDE W. CARTLAND.

An article bearing the above title, in a recent number of THE AMERICAN FRIEND, contains the following statement, viz.: "A good many persons, in some parts of our denomination, talk as though a Friend were a Christian plus something. They say, when referring to certain individuals, they are good people, and thorough Christians, but they are not Friends." The idea thus conveyed the author pronounces "false and untenable, and intelligent people should cease to express it, since a Friend is not a Christian plus something."

I apprehend those of us whose associations have been largely beyond the pale of the Society of Friends have known many, under different names, whom we have regarded as sincere Christians, doing excellent work for the Master, and of whom we should speak as good Christians, if not Friends. And the same would be true in other branches of the Christian Church. Suppose, for instance, members of the Baptist persuasion should neglect observance of the ordinances which they consider important, and should advocate their disuse, might not their fellow-members be warranted in saying of such, whom they believed to be conscientious in their action, "We acknowledge them as Christians, but they are not Baptists?"

Friends have, as our author admits, "removed all distinctions of clergy and laity, swept priesthood and sacerdotalism out of existence, denied the importance of so-called rites and ordinances, reduced to practice our Saviour's teaching in regard to oaths and the treatment of enemies, and declared against a salaried ministry and pre-arranged services in our meetings for worship, acknowledging the Living Christ as the only Head of His Church."

Having thus interpreted the Divine Teaching, we must allow that Friends, from the time of George Fox until the present day, have been Christians plus many things, which other denominations still fail to recognize, and without which distinguishing views we should have no valid claim to a separate organization.

The faithful maintenance of what Friends thus regard as vital truths is incumbent upon all "who wish to be called by that name," and if any of our members should conscientiously abandon the standard of Christian faith and practice which Friends have been called to uphold and adopt, and promulgate the views and methods of other religious bodies, it would seem "no sin against the law of love" to say, while thankfully acknowledging their Christian zeal and exemplary lives, "There are good Christian men and women, but they are not Friends," and to recommend their connecting themselves with the work of some denomination, whose principles and methods were more fully in harmony with their own.

Lesson III.

Fourth month 16, 1899

JESUS TEACHING HUMILITY.

John 13: 1-17.

GOLDEN TEXT.—I have given you an example.—John 13: 15.

DAILY READINGS.

Second-day, Fourth mo. 10.—Jesus teaching humility. John 13: 1-17.
Third-day, Fourth mo. 11.—The humble exalted. Luke 14: 7-14.
Fourth-day, Fourth mo. 12.—Humility in prayer. Luke 18: 9-17.
Fifth-day, Fourth mo. 13.—Grace for the humble. 1 Peter 5: 1-7.
Sixth-day, Fourth mo. 14.—A rebuke to pride. Mark 9: 30-37.
Seventh-day, Fourth mo. 15.—Greatness of service. Matt. 20: 20-28.
First-day, Fourth mo. 16. Christ's example. Phil. 2: 1-11.

The account of the public ministry of Christ comes to an end with the twelfth chapter of John. In the following five chapters we have the account of the last hours which Christ spent with his disciples.

Chapter 13 begins the second great division of the gospel, concluding with chapter 20, which is followed by an Epilogue (chapter 21), as part I was preceded by a Prologue (1: 1-18). Part second has been subdivided into (1) "The inner glorification of Christ in his last discourses (13-17); (2) The outer glorification of Christ in his Passion (18, 19); (3) The victory completed in the Resurrection (20)."

It is a striking fact that John alone of the Evangelists gives no account of the Last Supper, and gives no hint of the institution of any permanent rite, such as what is known as the "Lord's Supper." It is almost beyond belief that he could have made such omission had Christ really established the rite especially one claimed to be of permanent obligation. John is the only one who gives an account of the feet washing.

The exact time of the supper described in the lesson has been the subject of much discussion. It is a question which cannot be entered upon here. It is impossible to say positively upon what evening it took place; did the gospel of John stand alone the most obvious meaning would be that on some evening just before the Passover, Christ and his disciples took an evening meal together, at which the incidents occurred.

1. "Now," etc. These words may qualify "knew" or "having loved," or the whole narrative; the latter is preferable. "Knew." Better "knowing," as in Revised Version. "How." The time when the sacrifice was to be completed. "That." In order that; it was part of the Divine purpose. "Depart out of."

Literally "pass over out of it." (Compare John 5: 24). "Unto the end." Better as in the margin of the Revised version "to the uttermost."

2. "And supper being ended." "And during supper." Revised Version. It would seem to be better to render it "Supper being served"; that is, being ready. It would hardly be likely that the feet washing should take place at the end or even during the meal. It was the custom for a slave or menial to go round at the beginning of a meal and wash the feet, soiled on account of the custom of wearing low sandals. It was certainly before or during the meal that the service was performed in this case. It is thought by some that this meal took place immediately after the dispute between the disciples as to who should be greatest (Luke 22: 24); if this is so, the lesson in humility must have come with double force. "Put into the heart." The evil purpose came from without, but the heart was ready to receive it. "Iscaiot." It is now generally agreed that this word is a place-name, and means "the man of Kerioth," a village in Judea. He was the only one of the disciples who was not a Galilean.

3. This verse shows the marvelous love and condescension of Christ. 2 Cor. 8: 9; Phil. 2: 9-11.

4. "Laid aside," etc. His outer garments. Compare verse 27.

5. It was customary to pour the water over the feet, which were then wiped.

6. "Dost thou wash my feet?" A strong emphasis should be laid on "thou," and a somewhat less one on "my." Compare Peter's expression on another occasion. Luke 5: 8. Peter, in his impetuosity, speaks out his inmost thoughts.

7. "Thou shalt understand hereafter." The words translated "hereafter" mean, literally, "after these things" and so the verse would seem to refer to verses 12-17 rather than to a later period.

8. "Thou shalt never wash my feet." Literally, "Thou shalt certainly not wash my feet for ever." The strongest kind of a negative. Again we see Peter's impetuosity. Compare Matt. 16: 22. "If I wash thee not, thou hast no part with me." These words seem to mean if thou dost not accept this manifestation of my love, thou art not fit to be my disciple and share in my work. Obedience is the test of discipleship.

9. Again Peter rushes to an extreme, and gives advice to his Master.

10. "He that is bathed needeth not save to wash his feet." Revised Version. The meaning is "As he that has been bathed needs only to wash that part which has become soiled, as his feet; so he who has once been forgiven and is accepted, need only ask forgiveness for the sin committed since his acceptance. "Peter's love shows his acceptance; his boastfulness, his impetuosity wrongly directed, etc.," need the washing comparable to that needed by soiled feet. "Not all." This is explained by the following verse.

13. Literally, "Ye call me the Teacher and the Lord."

14. Literally, "If I therefore, the Lord and the Teacher have washed your feet, ye also ought to wash one another's feet."

15. "For I have given you an example, that ye also should do as I have done to you." Revised Version. With but small exception the Christian church has rightly looked upon this action of Christ as symbolic only, and upon his words as inculcating a spirit of humility and service, and not as enjoining an outward ordinance. As the words stand, they are a far more explicit command (for they are really thrice repeated, verses 14, 15, 17), than the words relative to bread and wine.

17. As if to say, "If ye really understand what I have done, blessed will you be, if in your lives you exemplify the same spirit of love and service."

PRACTICAL THOUGHTS.

1. There is no necessity of yielding to temptation.
2. "Obedience is the badge of discipleship."
3. "That glad surrender of the will,
That finds in service love's true purpose still."
4. "Knowing and doing are often perilously divorced."

(A Missionary Meeting.)

The long, weary captivity in Babylon is over. Israel have returned to their own land, the redemptive work of the Servant has been accomplished. Israel is again the bride of Jehovah, and then comes the trumpet-call of Jehovah to "Arise, shine, for thy light is come." Chapter 60 is a climax to the argument of twenty chapters that are richer in truth than any other similar production of the ancient world. It is not necessary to relegate the fulfilment of the prophecies of our lesson to some far-away future Jewish restoration. Whatever may be in the future will be in strict harmony with the principles by which God has wrought, and is now working among men. We shall do Israel no injustice to appropriate to ourselves the promises and commands of this chapter. There is enough in it for us and for them.

Israel could not shine much in captivity. She must first return to her own promised land. Neither can we shine for God until we have claimed His promises, and entered into our inheritance. 2 Cor. 3: 18, says, "We all, reflecting as a mirror the glory of the Lord." A mirror cannot reflect until it is placed in right relation to the object. Right adjustment to our Lord can alone make us to reflect His image. We are not light producers, but only light bearers. We must be right with Him in order to shine. Missionaries are the Lord's lights set not only in right relations to Him, but also rightly adjusted to those who need the light. When the Holy Spirit fell upon the church at Pentecost, it was not simply to kindle a great light in the upper room, but to scatter that company to the ends of the earth. The mysterious electrical force gathered in a great power-house can be sent out just as far as we furnish it conducting apparatus. It will shine whenever we furnish it focal points. The small carbon points used for electric lights are made of repulsive petroleum coke, a worthless product of refining the oil, but when crushed, ground, tempered, pressed into shape and baked, they are ready to be adjusted to the electric current wherever light is desired. Missionaries are carbon points set in the darkness of sin to shine for God. They have a vital connection with the home church. They can go no further than we supply posts and wires. God has ordained this vital connection. Let us see to it that we supply that which is necessary on our part to send the light of God's eternal day all over the world.

What a light a mission is in a heathen land. The missionary himself is a light as a true man living for God among those who have no such ideal of life. His home is a light, for such a thing as a Christian home with its kindness, unselfish devotion and love is utterly unknown in the heathen world. The little church is a light. It is an example of a new brotherhood, a new fellowship among men. We have often seen far off down the valley the twinkling lights of a distant city, visible here and there as our roadway winds in and out along the mountain side. They speak of home and rest, and companionship and industry. How these scattered lights of Christian missions gleam out in the world's darkness to gladden the heart of God and men. How notable some of them have become, like great beacon lights on a mountain top,—yes, even like the dawn of day for a darkened world. But they are still far apart. Only a few yet in all of China, only a few in the heart of Africa. Their rays do not even meet in the darkness. Let us send out more light.

As a denomination we now have practically as many missions as we can care for until we increase the capacity of our power-house. No power-house can use more electricity than its machinery can accommodate. Our plans must enlarge to meet the divine forces on one side, and human necessities on the other. We could start new missions in Africa and in Cuba just as soon as we can combine and furnish the machinery for the transmission of the current. Our Yearly Meeting committees, etc., need centralization and co-operation in this great work.

If war is neither the cause nor the effect of righteousness, what can be the relationship between righteousness and an advocate of war? Luke 9: 54-55.

STUDIES IN THE GOSPEL OF JOHN.—III.

There is a series of climaxes of unbelief in the Gospel of John that serve as a clue to a clearer understanding of its contents. The first is at the end of chapter three, where the first Jerusalem ministry ends in a sort of superficial belief of no value to Christ since he dare not trust it with any farther revelations of himself. The lesson is a most practical one, for of how many of us must it be said that Jesus cannot commit himself unto us because he cannot trust us. The next occurs at the beginning of chapter four, where the Judean ministry is brought to an abrupt close because Jesus foresees that the Pharisees will not longer tolerate his ministry. It is practically the end of continuous ministry in the southern province, for afterwards he only appears for a brief time at Jerusalem, in the midst of the great feast throngs, where he is safer from their hatred because of the greater watchfulness of the Romans at such times. How sad it seems that he who was the Lord of the temple, whose chosen city for generations had been this same Jerusalem, could not even be tolerated in it for a few days when he came to it in the flesh. The Judean ministry, upon the whole, appears unsuccessful, judged from a human standpoint, and is thrown into vivid contrast by John's relation of the visit to Samaria immediately following this account of Judean hatred.

Another climax is easily noted at the close of chapter five, where Jesus has brought himself into what seems practically a sort of trial before Jewish authorities upon the charge that God was "his own Father" (r.v.) John 5: 19-30 is his acknowledgement of the truth of the charge and his vindication of the claim. Verses 31-39 sum up the testimony of his witnesses: John the Baptist, his own works, the testimony of the Father, and the testimony of the Scriptures—four unimpeachable witnesses. Then he turns upon them with the charge of willful unbelief, not only of himself, but also of Moses, and says their fatal error lies in their love of the praise of men which incapacitates them for faith. The fourth climax comes at the end of chapter sixth, and marks the end of the popular ministry in Galilee. The crowds fall away like a snowdrift under a hot sun until Jesus turns almost in wonder to the twelve and asks if they too are going away. Where were all the multitudes he had healed in this same Capernaum? Alas! they were absent in this hour of his rejection, possibly saving their reputation by a discreet silence. But it was not so bad as at first sight it appears, for after his resurrection there were above five hundred Galilean brethren accounted worthy to behold their risen Lord. Six months of wandering on the northern borders and absence from the crowds that once thronged him, whose love for mere wonders unaccompanied by any genuine repentance or hunger for spiritual things made him feel the hopelessness of longer ministry among them, and we find him again at Jerusalem. Chapter seven is intensely dramatic in form. We can almost see the surging multitude in the streets and temple courts as, with bated breath, they discussed his claims. All were afraid of open speech; in undertones and whispered conferences his claims were discussed. Four arguments in his favor are recorded by John as he remembered them sixty years afterward; "Some said, He is a good man." "When the Christ shall come will he do more miracles than those which this man doeth?" "Some said, It is the prophet; others, this is the Christ." "The officers said, Never man so spake." How busy it kept the Pharisees to meet these rumors among the people. They must manufacture counter statements and report them among the people like an unscrupulous opposition newspaper. The summary of counter-statements is that he is a deceiver; that he must be ignorant, never having studied at Jerusalem,—alas! how many men have never learned their wisdom at any Jerusalem school,—that his origin was known, therefore he could not be the Christ, because his origin would be unknown; that he was hard to understand; that Christ must be born at Bethlehem while this man was a Galilean; and finally, as a conclusive argument, none of the rulers had believed on him, and no prophet could arise out of Galilee. What a strong case they thought they had made out! Yet no one of them really believed their own arguments. It was a case of anything to down an opponent. But the climax in this case is delayed for six months more—until his return to Jerusalem for the last time. It is given in the twelfth chapter, verses 36-43. The careful study of these crises in the life of Jesus reveals facts at variance with the opinion so frequently expressed in those days as to the comparative innocence, or at least excusableness, of the Jews in rejecting Christ. Human language could not be found to express more positively than does Jesus in this narrative his sense of wilfulness and inexcusableness of these Jews in rejecting him. He charges upon them wilfulness, love of praise of men, unbelief in Moses, ignorance of the Scriptures, untruthfulness, and that if they believe not that he is the Christ they shall die in their sins.

It is also clear from a careful study of John that Jesus does not make much, if any, use of the doctrine of the Universal Fatherhood of God, now so often urged as a motive to repentance and faith. He more frequently tells men of their Satanic fatherhood, and asserts that God is not their Father. As for that matter, the New Testament writers generally urge, not the Universal Fatherhood, but the Fatherhood through adoption. There is no question anywhere as to the fact that God is Father of all by creation, providence, and because of his boundless love; but this is not the Fatherhood about which Jesus talked to men, or which the New Testament writers said most. "Ye are of your Father the devil, and the lusts of your father ye will do," is not a statement to be lightly passed over.

There is a Japanese Christian who puts on his door the following notice every morning before he starts for his day's work: "I am a Christian, and if any one likes to go in and read my good book while I am out, he may."

News from the Field.

Our dear Friend, William Marshall, has arrived safely in the Argentine Republic, South America. We are glad to have the following word from him:

Casilla 47, Cordoba, Argentine Republic, S. A.,
Second month 12th, 1899.

I arrived here yesterday after a very pleasant voyage of one month from Liverpool, England. Mail sent to me directed as above will reach me. Even if I leave I will arrange to have it forwarded. My health has been good, and great peace has been mine, for which I praise my Heavenly Father. In much love to all my dear Friends in North America.

WILLIAM MARSHALL.

Willis R. Hotchkiss writes from Machakas, British East Africa, where he has been laboring for nearly three years, that he is working with the Wakamba tribe of natives, who are pastoral rather than warlike. He says, "Our work has passed through wrenching trials, but our God has brought us forth more than conquerors. Three graves tell the sad story of the struggle, and for over six months your servant was the only witness left; but last month I had the joy of welcoming a new laborer, together with the American director of the work, who, after spending a brief season with us, returned to the homeland. This is Charles E. Hurlburt, of Coatesville, Pa."

INDIANA EARLY MEETING.

Cincinnati, Ohio.—Cincinnati monthly meeting is now held in the evening. A lunch is served in the meeting-house at 6.30 P. M. Two requests for membership were received at the last monthly meeting. J. L. Spicer's minute of sojourn was read. A special effort is being made to renew the interest in the meetings, of some members who from living in the suburbs rarely attend.

The Christian Endeavor is held on Sabbath evenings. The attendance and interest is increasing. The Third Sixth-day of Fourth month will be observed as Kipling evening. Riley and Field have been considered at previous socials this season. Essays, recitations and music, with cake and chocolate, contribute to the enjoyment of the evenings. A recent mass meeting of section E, of Cincinnati, crowded the house with earnest Endeavorers.

Kennard, Ind.—Oliver Hinshaw, of Lynn, Ind., has just closed at this place a ten-day series of meetings, which were peculiarly spiritual in character. A full, well rounded Gospel was preached in its purity and simplicity, to the high standard of which Friends were exhorted to fully live, and to which many consecrated themselves. Social evils—cards, the dance, personal impurity, etc., were boldly and fearlessly attacked, arguments being clear and convincing, and the Christians attitude was most forcibly presented and his duty made very plain. We believe the moral atmosphere of our community was visibly affected. Friend Hinshaw's coming was of the Lord, to whom be glory and praise. Friends are blessedly realizing that "Bond of Peace," which cements our hearts in greater fellowship, and are committed to a continued prosecution of the war against evil and to the accomplishment of the Master's work. H. W. GREIST, M. D.

Portland Monthly Meeting was held Third month 25th. Ira C. Johnson, Quarterly Meeting Superintendent, was in acceptable attendance. He, with W. W. Watts, were engaged in the ministry of the word. Nine persons were recorded members from Portland Particular Meeting; two or three were released from Glenwood, who had joined other religious societies. George R. Wright and Nancy Jane Votaw were appointed clerks. The attendance at Bible School and meetings has about doubled since E. C. and Martha B. Thornton began their pastoral care in Portland meeting.

Carthage, Ind.—Levi Cox and Asa Woodard began a series of meetings at Westland Third month 5th, and closed Third month 21st. There was some definite work done. Elwood Scott, assisted by Frank and Stella Dewees, closed a series of meetings at Carthage Third month 26th. The truth was clearly and forcibly presented, Scriptural holiness was taught, some souls were saved, others inspired to greater activity and a close walk with the Lord. Elizabeth M. Rawlston, of Spring Valley, Ohio, who labored among us last year, has been secured as pastor of Charlottes-ville, and Pleasant View meetings. Joseph O. Binford attended Westland Monthly Meeting, held Third month 25th, and preached a very encouraging sermon. This is our brother's old home. It is needless to say that he has a warm place in the hearts of his early associates in the work. The Friends of Western Grove preparative meeting of this monthly meeting have remodeled their house of worship. There are now commodious quarters for the interesting audience which assembles there. Mary P. Wilson has a beautiful place in which to carry on the work of God. Joseph O. Binford was at Little Blue River meeting on First day the 26th.

CHARLES S. WINSLOW.

West Milton, Ohio.—West Milton meeting belongs to West Branch Quarterly Meeting of Indiana Yearly Meeting. It is the oldest Quarterly Meeting in the Yearly Meeting. Our meeting-house has recently been remodeled. Joseph Pemberton is our pastor. We have had no revival meetings this winter. John L. Kettrell is coming to hold a series of meetings in about two weeks.

H. R. PEARSON, M. D.

A revival meeting of two weeks has just closed, at North Grove, Ind. The meeting was conducted by Maude Milner, of Leesburg, Ohio. Although young in years she is settled in the Gospel, and is clear in her teaching. The meeting was the most successful of any that has been held here for years. There were many conversions and renewals, and some claimed the blessing of sanctification.

C. P. H.

CALIFORNIA YEARLY MEETING.

Long Beach, Cal.—Our Monthly Meeting just passed and was a time of refreshing from the Lord. No doubt we were reaping some of the fruits of the earnest labors of David J. Lewis, whom we all miss. The meeting united in asking Thomas Armstrong to become our pastor, and he will come in the near future.

On the evening of Third month 13th, John Henry Douglas came to our meeting with cheering words from the text "But it shall come to pass that at evening time it shall be light."

We are beginning to make preparations for our coming Yearly Meeting, which will be held here, commencing on Sixth month 12th. We are praying that the great head of the church will supply all our needs in holding up the true standard of the Gospel of Christ.

A. WALTON.

IOWA YEARY MEETING.

Malinda B. Hunt, of Iowa Falls, Iowa, held a series of meetings of two and one-half weeks' duration, at Pleasant Ridge, Scranton Quarterly Meeting, commencing Third month 4th. These meetings were a great blessing and strength to the church. Although there were no great visible results, yet there were six souls converted and reclaimed, and seeds were sown in the hearts of many that will tell to the glory of God in eternity. We thank God that Sister Hunt was directed this way once more.

This is the fourth series of meetings the sister has held in six years. She has been the instrument in God's hands for pointing out the way to a better life, and of leading many souls to Christ.

IRA SAPP.

Spencer, Iowa.—Spencer meeting has recently been greatly favored by the company and Gospel labors of two devoted servants of the Lord. Richard Newby began meetings here Second month 26th, and continued 12 days, closing Third month 9th. Charles H. Stalker came Third month 17th, and tarried in service with us nine days. Both were sent of God. All the meetings were held in the power of the Holy Ghost. They have been wondrous days to the church. We are deeply conscious that there is an ever-increasing mission for the church in this place, and that her responsibility is increased by these rare opportunities.

Fifty or more definitely accepted Christ, or were reclaimed or received the Holy Ghost. Many Christians, both in our own and other churches, were deepened in spiritual understanding and power. A number are being added to the church. Praise God for the gift of His dear Son, our Saviour, and for the Pentecostal gift of both the Father and the Son, who is the Holy Ghost.

EMMA F. COFFIN.

Denver, Colo.—Charles H. Stalker, the Evangelist of Westfield, Ind., closed a three weeks' meeting at Denver, Colo., on the 12th ult. Two meetings a day were held and the power of God was manifest throughout the meetings, and especially so after the two all-night prayer meetings he'd on the nights of the 4th and 11th. Brother Stalker dwelt much upon the personality and supremacy of the Holy Ghost. His teaching was plain and clear, and accompanied with the demonstration and power of the Holy Ghost. Many believers accepted the Holy Ghost as a second definite experience and sinners were brought to the knowledge of the saving grace of our Lord Jesus Christ.

As a result of these meetings there have already been six accessions to the church, and under the management of the pastor, George D. Weeks, and his amiable wife we hope many more will be added to the church.

Brother Stalker also conducted the services on the 12th ult., and the First Friends' Church in Colorado was dedicated and set apart as God's house to be used for His glory and the salvation of souls.

Friends in Denver, who are mostly in limited circumstances, have long needed a home, some established place of worship of respectability. The new house is a brick structure, 30 by 50 feet, with an O. G. ceiling, stained windows, is seated with comfortable pews and lighted with electricity. It has been constructed at a cost of about $2,000, including the purchase price of the lots. It has been constructed by the devotion and self-sacrifice of the members and the report of the trustees showed an indebtedness of about $900 still unprovided for. Any contributions which those interested in the welfare of Friends in Denver may desire to make to help us lift the balance of our indebtedness will be most gratefully received, and may be sent to George Dickinson, Treasurer, Eighteenth and Humboldt streets, Denver, Colo.

MAHLON STUBBS.

New Sharon, Iowa.—Richard R. Newby began a series of meetings here on Second month 12th, continuing for ten days. The Gospel was preached with great plainness and power. One conversion, others reclaimed and sanctified, and the church greatly blessed and helped.

C. S. W.

NEW ENGLAND YEARLY MEETING.

Maple Grove Meeting, in Aroostook County, Maine, is feeling much stripped this winter. It has lost by death Lydia C. Varney, who has throughout its history been one of its strong and dependable members, and now William P. Varney, who was the only recorded minister in the meeting, is in very poor health, and not able to attend meeting. It is hoped that the interests and needs of these far-away Friends will be on many hearts.

OHIO YEARLY MEETING.

Tecumseh, Mich.—Lida G. Romick, who has served so acceptably more than a year as pastor of the Friends' Meeting at Tecumseh, Mich., goes soon to Highland avenue, Columbus, Ohio, to labor as pastor there. Sarah Osmond, whose labors among us have also been appreciated, accompanies her. Tecumseh Friends very much regret to part with them, but pray that they may be blest in their new field of labor. Martha E. Barber will come to Tecumseh soon, to labor among us as pastor, and we pray that the power of the Spirit may attend her work.

M. C. W.

Alum Creek Quarterly Meeting.—The Lord is wonderfully blessing His work at Weston three miles northwest of Cardington, Ohio, through the labors of their pastor, Mary E. Sipe, who labors there every two weeks. The revival meeting was commenced by Brother Shook, but the cold weather and condition of roads was against the meeting. He held meetings for three weeks and then had to leave on account of other engagements, and the members were not willing for the meetings to close without more being accomplished. So the pastor went on with the meetings for three weeks longer, and the Lord did work, many being converted, backsliders reclaimed and believers built up and the entire membership was blessed of the Lord. There will be several additions to the church. The Gospel was preached in its purity and power. The other result of the meeting will be a new meeting-house. The church building is an old one, having been built many years. Not long ago a sermon was preached from the text "Will a man rob God?" And then a subscription paper was started for a new house and nearly five hundred dollars were raised in the morning meeting, and it was a very stormy day, too. One man gave one hundred and sixty dollars, another one hundred and fifty, others twenty-five and so on. God is in the work when the pocket-book is reached in that way, as the membership at Weston is small, and has been considered weak, but they are strong in good works. God will honor their faith and good works. May the Holy Spirit work in other fields as He has in this is the wish of the writer.

WILMINGTON YEARLY MEETING.

Spring Valley, Ohio.—We began a series of meetings at this place First month 9th, and continued for three weeks. The Gospel was presented in a plain, forcible, and eloquent manner by Leonidas Spear, whose every utterance seemed to be backed by the Spirit of God. The meetings increased in interest and power. On many occasions the audience room was not large enough to accommodate the people. The members of our sister churches were in attendance, many of them taking an active part.

There were some very bright conversions. An aged father, who had seen more than four-score years, was happily converted. Another—sixty-five years old—who had devoted his life to the ways of the world, and had reached a station of influence and wealth, was happily converted; and his voice, heretofore silent to the cause of Christ, was heard in praises to his Master. A sister of culture and refinement, who had passed through a number of revival meetings without manifesting any special interest in the cause of Christ, sought and found the Saviour precious to her soul. There were a number of bright renewals. Believers were strengthened and built up in the most Holy Faith. Our hearts say "Praise the Lord."

CANADA YEARLY MEETING.

Moscow, Canada.—Eli G. Parker, of Iowa, came to Moscow Third month 11th. He came very unexpectedly to us, and we were surprised when he walked in. He held eight meetings, besides the regular meetings. We feel his coming was of the Lord, and that his work was much blessed. In his last meeting there were seven rose up testifying that they had received a special blessing.

M. L. GOUDY.

WESTERN YEARLY MEETING.

Yearly Meeting Bible School Assembly.—The Annual Bible School Assembly of Western Yearly Meeting last summer, decided to hold the next session of the assembly in Thorntown, Ind. A committee of the monthly meeting has set the time for holding it Fifth month 30th, 31st and Sixth month 1st. The program for the occasion is rapidly nearing completion and promises to be one of unusual interest and instructiveness. In the course of the Assembly two addresses each will be delivered by Prof. Elbert Russel, of the Biblical Department of Earlham College; Levi Mills, of Wilmington, O.; Dr. Alice A. Mendenhall, of Bloomington, Ind., and J. Lindley Spicer, of Cincinnati, O.

J. Lindley Spicer has traveled extensively in the Orient and will occupy one evening in a lecture on "Oriental Side Lights," illustrated with Oriental costumes and domestic articles. Ella J. Davis, Superintendent of Sabbath School work among Friends in Indiana Yearly Meeting, has consented to give one address, and papers are expected from A. L. Ellis and Mary Doan. Albert J. Brown, of Indianapolis, will deliver the Assembly sermon.

Devotional exercises, music, discussion of papers and miscellaneous business will be items of the program. Quite a number of visitors from different parts of the Yearly Meeting are looked for and an excellent time anticipated.

Stillwell, Ind.—There has been forty-three accessions to Bethel and Stillwell Meetings, by letter and request, since our series of meetings held in Second month by Martilia and Mary Cox. Others are talking of uniting with Friends at this place, but desire first to know more of the Friends' doctrine.

MAHLON GAUSE.

KANSAS YEARLY MEETING.

Fred L. Ryon and his wife have been much blessed in their labors among the Indians and the Indian workers. Their visit at the Friends' School, Hillside, Indian Territory, was much appreciated, and the results were encouraging. There were over twenty reported conversions and several renewals.

THE SHIPLEY LITERARY SOCIETY.

Years ago Murray Shipley and family were instrumental in gathering into the Friends' Public School, in Cincinnati, a number of boys, who have grown up in the school and united with the meeting. A stranger visiting the school is impressed by seeing so many young men who are interested devout students of the Bible. Catherine Shipley and her honored husband frequently opened their home to entertain and instruct these young people, and now that their hospitable home is forever closed, and feeling the need of increased knowledge and acquaintance with parliamentary usage, this organization has been perfected. Any young man over fifteen years of age who is a member of the Society of Friends or occasionally in attendance at meeting. Bible school or Christian Endeavor Society, is eligible for membership. In addition to the usual officers they have a "Budget Editor" who selects entertaining and instructive matter from clippings furnished by the members. The study of the distinguishing views of Friends, their history achievements, writings and future possibilities will be a special feature. Essays, recitations, debates, addresses and readings will make up the programs. The meetings are held each Third day evening at 7.45 in the parlor of the meeting house, Eighth street and Mound. This movement received the hearty approval of the Monthly Meeting, and is already giving promise of great usefulness.

C. C. NEWKIRK, Secretary.

NOTICE.

The response to the article entitled "An Opportunity" has been most encouraging. To those who are collecting signatures to the petition in regard to the approaching International Peace Conference, I would say—Please send them to me as promptly as possible, as they must be forwarded very soon if they are to accomplish their purpose. Richard H. Thomas, 1718 John Street, Baltimore, Md.

TRUE SILENCE.

They sit, expectant for the word
With lowly eyes and reverent prayer;
And though no outward sound is heard
God's still small voice is speaking there;
Healing each worry and distress
'Mid this—their passive earnestness.

Their hearts are bared before the Lord;
In penitential silence meet,
They strive to gain the lost accord,
And hold with God communion sweet;
Only when purified within
Can they the Heaven-sent Word begin.

All—all may speak—man, woman, youth—
To whom the Heavenly tidings come;
And some are called to preach the Truth,
For unobtrusive goodness some;
But both in quiet never cease
To bow unto the Prince of Peace.

F. H. FORTEY in "London Friend."

FOR THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

HE IS RISEN.

BY EDWARD WING.

He is risen. Send the echo
Over every hill and vale,
Enter every home and hamlet,
Send it by the ships that sail.

Sing it, mothers of the nations,
To your infants as they sleep;
Gild the skies of age with glory,
Tell it to the hearts that weep.

Bear it on, O Nineteenth Century,
To the centuries in your track.
Let the sunshine of its glory
Drive the clouds of centuries back.

He is risen all triumphant,
Never seemed our lips so weak
To convey the spirit's vision
In the feeble words we speak.

Earth with all its strife and passion,
And its tale of human woes,
Yet shall spring to life and beauty
And shall blossom as the rose.

Flowers of love and truth shall flourish
Where once grew the weeds of shame;
And the earth shall bow in reverence
At the whisper of His name.

He is risen. Heaven is stooping,
Earth shall leap to its embrace;
And a world redeemed shall crown Him
As the Saviour of our race.

See it in the islands rising,
By the breath of manhood stirred;
See it in the potent question
How the world may sheathe her sword.

Foregleams of a brighter morning,
All the east's horizon span,
In the growing recognition
Of the brotherhood of man.

Loving Spirit—clothed so human—
Treading paths we all have trod,
Thou art by thy resurrection
Drawing manhood unto God.

Certificates are not kept at all stations. If the ticket agent at a local station is not supplied with certificates and through tickets to place of meeting, he can give information as to nearest station at which they can be obtained. In such case purchase local ticket to that point, and then buy through ticket and obtain certificate. Receipts for fare paid will in no case be accepted. Going tickets in connection with which certificates are issued for return may be sold only on three days, (not including Sunday), immediately preceding the opening date of meeting.

On presentation of certificate, duly validated, not later than the third day following the agreed date for adjournment, the agent at the place of meeting, will return the holder to starting point, upon continuous passage ticket, by the route over which the going journey was made, at one-third the highest limited fare by such route.

Certificates are not transferable, and return tickets secured upon certificates are not transferable.

No refund of fare will be made on account of person failing to obtain certificate. A guarantee has been given by the Union to redeem at full fares any return tickets procured by persons in attendance at this meeting that may be found to have been transferred, misused or offered for sale. It is hoped that rates may yet be secured from New England; if so notice will be given through the AMERICAN FRIEND. If not procured, go to nearest station (New York, Albany), and purchase from that point on Trunk line.

It has been found impossible to secure rates from points west of Mississippi River (except on that river). From Western locations tickets must be purchased from nearest point of Central Passenger Association.

Died.

BLAIR.—Eunice Blair, daughter of Isaac and Mary Frazier, deceased, and (for the last nine years) widow of Enos A. Blair, departed this life Second month 3d, 1899, aged 73 years, 4 months and 5 days.

Though she and her husband were converted before they were married and were members of the Methodist Church South from early life, they had convictions clear and conclusive against war, slavery, and, in favor of the distinguishing views of Friends. They procrastinated in attaching themselves to the Society of Friends until the pressure against the Union, anti-war and anti-slavery people became severe, when they joined with Friends and lived consistent, active members until called to the church above. She was appointed overseer in Springfield Monthly Meeting in 1866, and both she and her husband were set apart as elders in 1876, and remained in that position until death.

She was one of ten children—seven sons and three daughters—seven of whom survive. She was the mother of ten children—seven sons and three daughters—eight of whom survive her, who, together with her brothers and sisters, are members of the Society of Friends. Eunice Blair was of a quiet, gentle, sweet-spirited disposition, kindly to all. One competent to judge, writing of her, says, "I have known her more than twenty years, and in all my life I have never known one I thought her equal in true-hearted, loving faithful motherhood. I never saw her do one wrong thing or fail to do the good thing," and added, "the secret of all this unselfishness, all this fortitude in trial, all this love, was that her life was hid with Christ in God."

COOK.—James Cook, a member of Pleasant Plain Monthly Meeting and Marion Quarterly Meeting, died at his home in Huntington County, Ind., Second month 24th, 1899, aged 76 years and 22 days. He was always a strong man, morally, and very honest and upright in his dealings with his fellow-man, but when 49 years of age, he felt the need of a change of heart, sought and received pardon for his sins. Early in his last sickness he told his family and neighbors that he was ready to go whenever the Lord was ready to take him.

BROWN.—Sarah Brown, of Greenstork, Ind., died of spinal meningitis, on Second month 27th, 1899, at the Sanitarium of Battle Creek, Mich., where she had gone to regain her failing health, after the death of her husband. She was aged 56 years. She leaves three sisters and many sorrowing friends. Her life was devoted to the Master and gave evidence of this by her meek, quiet, orderly and loving walk for many years of her life. She was very much interested in the work of foreign missions and gave liberally of her means for the spread of the Gospel at home and abroad. Being in early life a teacher, she took a deep interest in education, and helped many a deserving and struggling student. She was a life-long member of the Society of Friends, and at the time of her death, an elder of the same. Her last message to her friends was "Tell them to meet me in Heaven."

PEELLE.—Mary Peelle died at her home in Richmond, Ind., Third month 14th, 1899, in the 75th year of her age. She came with her parents from North Carolina to Indiana in 1829, and with the exception of two years, this State has been her home since that time. She was the wife of Henry E. Peelle, whose death occurred over three years ago. She was always a member with the Friends, and a very ardent worker until two years ago, when, on account of failing health, she was unable longer to take an active part. Her Christian experience began when she was quite young, and continued throughout her life.

HESTON.—Gideon F. Heston, son of Joseph and Rachel Heston, at Newberg, Ore., Twelfth month 19th, 1898, aged 54 years. He was converted when a young man, and since has lived a consistent Christian life. For months before his death he knew that the end would probably come suddenly, as it did, and had indicated to his family that when the hour did come, there was ready for him "A building of God, a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens."

HOLLOWELL.—Joseph G. Hollowell entered into rest Third month 1st, 1899. He was a member of Woodland Meeting, North Carolina, occupying the station of an elder. In his death a lovely soul has passed away, leaving as a priceless legacy to his family and Friends the memory of an earnest, faithful Christian life. His religion was not one of formalism. His acts of devotion towards God and the generous deeds which seemed to flow out from his heart so naturally, were but the outward expression of an ever-present indwelling spirit. The peace of God seemed always to abide with him.

MOORE.—Lou O. Moore, daughter of John S. and Lizzie Moore, the latter deceased, fell asleep in Jesus Third month 24th, 1899, in the 24th year of her age. She was a member of Woodland Monthly Meeting, North Carolina, being converted when quite young. She had ever since lived an earnest Christian life. She had been confined to her room most of the time the past four months, and to her bed the past six weeks. At times her suffering was intense, but she bore it all with Christian patience and fortitude, ever showing by her sweet submission she was "leaning on the everlasting arms."

MEADER.—Otis Meader departed this life at his home in Tamworth, N. H., Third month 8th, 1899, at the age of 68 years, 8 months and 5 days, after a painful illness of two months, which was borne with Christian fortitude.

He was a life-long member of the Society of Friends, and for many years an overseer and elder in Sandwich Monthly Meeting. He was a faithful member in the church, and his voice was often heard in the meetings for worship in prayer and praise unto Him that loveth us and loosed us from our sins by His blood.

STUART.—Zimri Stuart, son of the late Jehu and Rebecca Stuart, died at Knightstown, Ind., First month 30th, 1899, aged 75 years, 9 months and 3 days. He was a member of Knightstown Monthly Meeting of Friends.

VARNEY.—Lydia C. Varney, wife of William P. Varney, died at her home, Maple Grove, Maine, First month 8th, 1899, after an illness of only five days. She was born in China, Maine, about 60 years ago. She was a birthright member of the Society of Friends, and has been an elder about 16 years, and has been clerk of the monthly meeting almost ever since it was organized. She was one of the pillars of this meeting. She was a true-hearted woman and a great help to her husband in his ministerial work. She was evidently prepared for the "house of many mansions." She said to a friend a short time before she died "I don't see why anyone should feel sad and gloomy in the prospect of death; I should not."

WILDMAN.—Louis H., son of William and Eliza H. Wildman, entered his heavenly home Third month, 23d, 1899, after a very short illness, aged 33 years. Suddenly stopped in his busy, active life, where he had proved himself worthy of the unlimited confidence reposed in him, whether in the church, the business or the social circle, he received his "abundant entrance" into his heavenly inheritance. His own standard of moral worth, based on a high Christian character, was so marked, that to come in touch with him was an uplift toward higher, truer, nobler things—particularly felt by the young men, where a special bond of sympathy and confidence would at once become established. Truly, a short life, but rich in fruitage, leaving a holy fragrance that will continue to draw heavenward, through ceaseless ages.

WILLCUTS.—Rachael Unthank Willcuts, youngest child of William and Rachel Williams, peacefully entered into rest in her 90th year, First month 11th, 1899. When about 5 years of age her parents moved with her from Tennessee to Richmond, Indiana, then in the midst of a wilderness. Her father, who was a minister of the Society of Friends, built the first frame house that was built on the site of what is now Richmond, Ind., in the year 1817. In 1829 she was married to Jonathan Unthank and resided at Newport, Ind. (now Fountain City), until her husband died. She then moved with her family to Illinois. Many were the hardships she passed through to provide for her family. Being a woman of great energy and resource, she seemed to surmount every difficulty. Being a great letter writer, she wrote some interesting letters, telling of the incidents of her every-day life, and above all, her interest in her Redeemer's cause. After nine years spent in her prairie home, she moved again to the vicinity of her old home in Indiana, and was married to David Willcuts. Those who knew her best loved her most.

WINDLE.—At her residence, Richmond, Ind., First month 10th, 1899, Mary E. Windle, widow of the late Job Windle, aged eighty-five years and two months. A member of East Main Street Meeting, and a life-long member of the Society of Friends, though her failing health during the latter years of her life deprived her of the privilege of attending meeting, yet her quiet walk among her friends showed in whom she trusted. Her friends have the consoling assurance that through the redeeming love and mercy of her Lord and Saviour she was gathered in peace to her eternal rest.

YORK.—Meredith York, after months of painful illness, borne with marked Christian fortitude at the National Military Home, near Leavenworth, Kansas, on the morning of the Fifth-day of Twelfth month, 1898, at the advanced age of 72 years. "Father York" was converted about the year 1876, and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, in which he became an active member, and was instrumental in building a church at the cities of Hutchinson and Parsons, Kansas. "Brother York" became intimately acquainted with Friends about the year 1886, and was deeply impressed with the earnest and deep spirituality of preaching by Sister Susie Fox, the pastor of the little church of Friends in Leavenworth, and after reading our confession of faith, he became convinced that he would be more at home in our society than anywhere else, and was joined in membership at Leavenworth Fourth month 17th, 1898—but on account of fast declining health was not permitted to enjoy himself long. Father York was visited by the writer of this notice only a few days before his departure, and was rejoicing in the hope that he would soon be ready to cross over the river. His only regret was that he began work for the Master in the evening instead of the morning of his life.

News and Events.

Two representatives of the Cuban Assembly visited Washington last week upon the hopeless errand of persuading the administration to grant at least $10,000,000 to pay off the Cuban soldiers, in place of the $3,000,000, already in the hands of General Brooke for this purpose. They were courteously received in an unofficial capacity, but were quickly informed of the futility of their mission. Congress, in whose power only lies the granting of appropriations, is not in session, and it is absolutely impossible for the President to increase the already liberal amount extended to the disaffected Assembly, though it is well known that he would not do so if he might. The Assembly refuses to hand over the pay rolls of their army, declaring that they will not treat with General Brooke unless he recognize their official capacity. The latter, unable thus far to distribute the money to the Cuban soldiers, threatens to return the entire amount to Washington, and this he is likely to do unless the members of the Assembly come speedily to their senses and desist from their petty tactics. Their influence appears to be waning, and the Cubans are more and more suspicious of their motives.

The statement of the Federal Treasury for March, which has just been issued, gives a very gratifying condition of finances. The available cash shows a large increase over the preceding month, and compared with the statement of April 1st, 1898, an increase of $74,927,714. A part of this is due to the payment of $12,000,000 on account of the indebtedness of the Central Pacific Railroad. The total fund now amounts to $284,043,164, of which sum $278,306,356 is in gold. The receipts for the month, leaving out the Central Pacific payment, were in excess of expenditures, notwithstanding the heavy drains on account of the war. The internal revenues from the special war taxes are accumulating satisfactorily, and the indications are that the government will remain on a paying basis throughout the year. Apart from the vast and unusual expenses of the war incurred last year the expenditures for the nine months beginning July 1, 1897, for the army amounted to $48,896,883, and for the navy, $27,692,978, a total of $76,589,861. For the corresponding nine months of 1898-99 the expenditures on these accounts were: Army, $194,708,377; navy, $50,895,028; total, $245,603,405; an increase of $169,000,000.

The American flag was raised over Malolos, the ostensible capital of the Filipinos, at 10 o'clock on the morning of the 31st ult. During the week the United States forces, under the able leadership of General MacArthur, advanced steadily and persistently against the ever-retreating, but constantly resisting rebel army. The towns along and near the line of the railway were occupied by the Americans, one by one, including Bocave, Bigaa and Guiginto. The position of the insurgents was generally protected by very strong trenches, but though mostly well defended, they proved but slight barriers to the progress of our army. The Filipinos fought fiercely and desperately, but in every case were driven northward upon their capital. It was intended to force the issue at Malolos, and decide the outcome of the war then and there, but when at last the city was taken it became known that Aguinaldo and his leaders had retired northward two days previous. The city had been fired before the withdrawal of the Filipinos, and considerable destruction to property was thus accomplished. Though our troops have been uniformly successful and have taken the strongholds of the enemy, the more annoying task probably remains to be encountered—that of fighting guerilla bands. This method of warfare is easy to the insurgents, and it is predicted that they will continue for a long time to come to harass our army. Major General Otis, however, proposes to give them no rest, and he will prosecute the campaign as vigorously as ever.

Samoa has again been the scene of hostilities. Ignoring an ultimatum sent them by Admiral Kautz, commander of the United States cruiser Philadelphia, and supported by a friendly proclamation of Herr Rose, the German Consul at Apia, the Mataafans seized a British house, and on March 15th, began an attack on the United States and British Consulates. The warships Philadelphia, Porpoise and Royalist, the two latter English vessels, began a bombardment of the native villages, including Apia, which continued intermittently for eight days. The feeling between Mataafans and Malietoans ran high, and 2,000 of the latter, whose chief, Malietoa Tanus, had been declared the rightful king by Chief Justice Chambers, took refuge in the town of Mulinuu, which had been fortified by Americans. The action of Germany in upholding Mataafa is inexplicable, since it was at her request that the Berlin treaty expressly stipulated that he should not be permitted to become king for the reason that he had attacked and defeated a German detachment in 1888, killing a number of men. It is not likely that there will be any serious international complications as a result of these Samoan annoyances. It is probable that a joint high commission, to be appointed by the United States, Germany and England, will displace the present tripartite arrangement.

HEALTHFUL CEREAL PREPARATIONS.

The heart of barley, entirely free from bran or hulls, makes a palatable cereal food, which not only nourishes those who enjoy health, but is an efficient diuretic, emollient, nutritive and tonic agent in cases of digestive disorders or intestinal irritation. This new and valuable food is prepared by Farwell and Rhines, Watertown, N. Y. It is recommended by physicians as invaluable in Bright's disease and other diseases of the kidneys and liver, and it is a palatable, attractive breakfast dish for those in good health. Analysis of Barley Crystals shows that it contains 99.1 per cent. of the purest flesh, blood, brain, nerve, bone and muscle-building food. Farwell & Rhines are also makers of the noted "Gluten Flour," "Special Diabetic Flour," and "K. C. Whole Wheat Flour." Their goods have come to be known as the "Criss Cross Cereals," the lines on the face of each package being a part of their trade mark.

JOTTINGS.

On the 31st ult. the passenger steamer Stella struck upon the rocks near the Island of Alderney, and foundered in ten minutes, her boilers exploding almost immediately upon the first shock. One hundred lives were lost.

Baroness Hirsh, widow of the late Baron Hirsh, died at her home in Paris last week, leaving an estate valued at about $125,000,000. She, after her husband, was the most noted and beneficent philanthropist of the day. The Jews were the principal recipients of her charity, but her good deeds were confined to no particular sect or country.

News has just been received from Juneau, Alaska, of the murder of sixteen gold prospectors from Kentucky, by Indians, at the mouth of the Kuskokwim River. The United States Government will probably investigate the outrages with a view to punishing the malefactors.

Ex-President Harrison and ex-Secretary Tracy will sail on May 11th for Paris, where they will act as counsel for Venezuela before the International Court of Arbitration, which meets in Paris on May 25th. Chief Justice Fuller and Justice Brewer, who are arbitrators, will probably go at the same time.

There is considerable talk in influential circles in Nicaragua favoring annexation of that country to the United States. Senator Morgan, however, who is perhaps the warmest advocate of the building of a Nicaragua Canal considers that the absorption of the Central American Republic by this country would be undesirable, and does not deem such a movement of vital importance to the building of the isthmian canal.

Sometime recently the population of a Chinese village near I-Chou attacked with guns a German officer named Han-neman, and two others of the same nationality, while on a peaceful journey to I-Chou. Several Chinese were killed in the encounter that followed, but the Germans escaped in safety. Germany will take severe measures to prevent a recurrence of the insult.

A statement was posted at the War Department in Washington on the 29th ult. to the effect that "recruiting for the regular army is progressing most satisfactorily," and that the enlisted strength is now over sixty-two thousand, within less than three thousand of the maximum, which, at the present rate of enlistment, will be reached within ten days.

The capital stock of two hundred and fifty new companies incorporated at Trenton during March aggregated $1,500,000,000. The state received $126,000 in fees.

THE ATTENTIVE PROCESS.

What is the attentive process psychologically considered? asks Professor William James in the April "Atlantic." Attention to an object is what takes place whenever the object most completely occupies the mind by that object. For simplicity's sake suppose the object to be an object of sensation,—a figure approaching us at a distance on the road. It is far off, barely perceptible, and hardly moving; we do not know with certainty whether it is a man or not. Such an object as this, if carelessly looked at, may hardly catch our attention at all; the optical impression may affect solely the marginal consciousness, whilst the mental focus keeps engaged with rival things. We may indeed not "see" it at all till some one points it out? But if so, how does he point it out? By his finger, and by describing its appearance,—by creating a premonitory image of where to look, and of what to expect to see. This premonitory image is already an excitement of the same nerve centres that are concerned with the impressions. The impression comes and excites them still further; and now the object enters the focus of the field consciousness, being sustained both by impression and by idea. But the maximum of attention to it is not yet reached. Although we see it, we may not care for it; it may suggest nothing important to us; and a rival stream of objects or of thoughts may quickly take our mind away. If, however, our companion defines it in a significant way, arouses in the mind a set of experiences to be apprehended from it,—names it as an enemy or as a messenger of important tidings,—the residual and marginal ideas, now aroused, so far from being its rivals, become its associates and allies; they shoot together into one system with it; they converge upon it; they keep it steadily in focus; the mind attends to it with maximum power.

The attentive process, therefore, at its maximum may be physiologically symbolized by a brain cell played on in two ways, from without and from within. Incoming currents from the periphery arouse it, and collateral currents from the centres of memory and imagination reinforce these.—Professor William James in the April "Atlantic."

HULDA:

The Pentecostal Prophetess.

BY BYRON J. REES.

152 Pages. Bound in Cloth. Price, 50c., postpaid.

A short life story and seventeen of the sermons of Hulda A. Rees, together with her portrait and picture of her early church. This book needs no other introduction than for the reader to know that seventeen of her sermons, which Sister Rees preached with such accompaniments of power and blessing, are for the most part to compose it. The life-story is short yet comprehensive, the writer of it avoiding anything of a eulogistic nature and making the facts of the life serve as an appropriate introduction to the character back of the sermons.

Mrs. E. E. Williams, in a beautiful poem, which is also a part of the book, gives some refreshing glimpses into the character of Sister Rees.

Esther T. Pritchard also contributes a "Tribute," glowing with fervor and truth.

Some Facts about a Cream Separator.

(Saves Endless Work.)

Vinton, Iowa, Jan. 10, 1899.
"About one year ago I purchased an 'Alpha-Baby' No. 2, after giving it a thorough test and finding that with the same quantity of milk we were able to produce 3 lbs. more butter per day than we were getting by the old method. This was with the milk from twelve cows. I am satisfied our separator has paid for itself the first year, besides saving an endless amount of work for Mrs. Austin and her help in the house, in that there were a great many less pans, etc., to wash and keep clean. I feel that I cannot recommend the 'Alpha-Baby' too highly to any one in the dairy business."
S. B. AUSTIN.

(Big Difference in Results.)

St. Mary's, O., June, 1898.
"We have finished our test of the 'Baby' separator. We made the test from six milkings. The milk was well mixed and carefully divided. The half skimmed by the separator made 11 lbs. and 8 oz. of butter. The other half was set in crocks in the old way and very particular care taken of it. It made 8 lbs. and 12 oz. This is almost unbelievable, but my wife is willing to state the same under oath. We sell butter at 16c. to 20c. per lb., so that the separator will make us a net profit of 30c. a day over the old way. It will more than pay for itself inside of one year, with seven cows. Calves and pigs are doing very well on the skim-milk."
F. W. NEDDERMANN.

(Any Kind of Cream.)

No. Grafton, Mass., 1898.
"The Dairy Turbine 'Alpha' De Laval separator, which I purchased in September, 1896, is giving perfect satisfaction. I have separated with it from 40 to 80 cans of milk per day ever since. Some days the temperature of milk is as low as 55 and 58 deg., but the samples of skim-milk show only from .01 to .02 of 1 per ct. butter-fat. There is no trouble in making the cream of any desired thickness that I may wish, which is a great benefit to me, as I can supply cream at any price that my patrons desire. Had I purchased one of these machines several years ago it would have saved me a good many hundreds of dollars."
S. L. DAVENPORT.

(De Laval Superiority.)

Webster City, Iowa, Jan. 19, 1899.
"About eighteen months ago the creamery to which we had been hauling milk shut down. Our product was about 400 lbs. of milk per day, and we had very poor conveniences for making butter, so concluded we would try a cream separator. Being entirely ignorant as to the merits of the different machines, we thought the proof of the pudding was in the eating, so tried a Sharples, U. S. and an 'Alpha-Baby' side by side. After a thorough test of six weeks we bought the 'Alpha-Baby' No. 2, even though it cost more than either of the others. Our reasons for making such decision were, first, that its capacity was more than advertised; second, it ran with much less power; and, third, it is better mechanical construction and less liable to get out of order.
"At the time of selling milk to the creamery we were being paid for only 3.3 lbs. of butter from 100 lbs. of milk. After purchasing the 'Baby' we weighed 200 lbs. of milk, which was separated and churned, and the product was 8 lbs. of butter, cows being on grass without grain."

CHILDREN'S NATIVE INTERESTS.

The native interests of children lie altogether in the sphere of sensation, says Professor William James in the April "Atlantic." Novel things to look at or novel sounds to hear, especially when they involve the spectacle of action of a violent sort, will always divert the attention from abstract conceptions of objects, verbally taken in. The grimace that Johnny is making, the spit-balls that Tommy is ready to throw, the dog-fight in the street, or the distant fire-bells ringing,—these are the rivals with which the teacher's powers of being interesting have incessantly to cope. The child will always attend more to what a teacher does than to what the same teacher says; during the performance of experiments or while the teacher is drawing on the blackboard, the children are tranquil and absorbed. I have seen a room full of college students suddenly grow perfectly still, to look at their professor of physics tie a piece of string around a stick which he was going to use in an experiment, but immediately grow restless while the experiment was being explained. A lady told me that one day, during a lesson, she was delighted at having captured so completely the attention of one of her young charges. He never removed his eyes from her face; but he said to her after the lesson was over, "I looked at you all the time, and your upper jaw did not move once!" That was the only fact that he had taken in. Living things, then, moving things, or things that savor of danger or of blood, that have a dramatic quality,—these are the objects naturally interesting for childhood, to the exclusion of almost everything else; and the teacher of young children, until more artificial interests have grown up, will keep in touch with her pupils by constant appeal to such matters as these. Instruction must be carried on objectively, experimentally, anecdotally. The blackboard drawing and story-telling must constantly come in. But of course these methods cover only the first steps, and carry one but a little way.

UNTRAVELED WILDS OF SOUTH AMERICA.

In the course of an article in "The Youth's Companion" on "Opportunities for Young Explorers," Sir Clements Markham, after pointing out how much remains to be done in Africa and Asia, says: "It is, however, in South America that the most extensive unexplored regions still await the visits of scientific travelers. Although this continent is much richer and of far more beautiful scenery than Africa, and although it has attracted the ablest and most accomplished travelers, such as Condamine, Humboldt, D'Orbigny, Schomburgk, Martius and Bates, it has received, on the whole, much less attention than Africa, and much less than it deserves.

"Many parts of the Colombian cordilleras still need exploration, as well as the basins of several northern affluents of the Amazon; while there is an enormous tract to the eastward, which is still practically unknown. It is that wild, forest-covered region which was the scene of the adventurous searches for El Dorado in the sixteenth century. Farther south, although the region to the eastward of Cuzco, the ancient capital of the Incas, is now attracting attention, much remains to be done.

"There are also many undescribed parts of the Andes of Peru which are of great interest, especially in the little-known districts round the lake of Parinacochas. The mountain peaks of the range above Tarapaca are still virgin, and those of Sajama and Pallahuari have not yet been measured. Indeed, the whole orography of western South America is very imperfectly understood, and offers a most tempting and interesting field of research for young explorers.

"Equally unexplored is the southern part of the dividing range between Chile and Argentina, which encloses within its unknown recesses several geographical problems of great interest. The wild mountain ranges still further south and the numerous intricate rocky channels up the Gulf of Trinidad also invite exploration. Those narrow, winding channels, full of rocks and islands, look as if the cordillera of the Andes had here dipped itself into the sea.

"On the whole, the unknown or unexplored parts of South America offer the most extensive, and certainly not the least interesting, field for research, that remains on the earth's surface, apart from the polar regions."

A WOMAN'S LIFE WORK.

Including Thirty Year's Service on the Underground
Railroad and in the War.

BY LAURA HAVILAND.

This is a story of a wonderful life. The author was an active Anti-Slavery agitator
and through her underground railroad work assisted hundreds of slaves to escape from bondage. During the war she spent about two years taking care of the sick and wounded. Through her efforts more than 2,000 Union Soldiers were liberated.
She accomplished a great work in providing for the Freedmen of Kansas after the close of the war. She was the founder of the State Public School, at Coldwater, Mich.,
an institution which was the first of its kind in the world. The Industrial School for Girls at Adrian Mich., almost utterly owes its first existence, and especially its name to her efforts. Haviland Academy at Haviland, Kansas, was named in her honor, as also the town in which it is located. At the World's Fair she was introduced by President Palmer as "The Mother of Philanthropy," and well she deserves the title. Her experience as told in this book will be read with thrilling interest.

This book is printed on good paper and contains 625 pages. It is bound in cloth with red edges. The retail price of the book is $1.50. We will send it postpaid,

STEPHEN GRELLET'S MINISTRY.

"A heart of larger sympathy we have never known, or one more ready to comprehend and to minister unto afflictions which were carefully concealed. His gospel preaching was of a character rarely equaled, and probably nowhere surpassed. Its chief characteristic was its wonderful VITALITY. Perfectly free from every trace of egotism, he preached 'Jesus Christ, and Him crucified.' The sufferings of his Lord for the sake of sinful man deeply and abidingly affected his soul. His sermons manifested an extraordinary originality, scope of thought, and spiritual wealth. With demonstration of the Spirit, and with power, he illustrated his subjects with passages brought from various parts of the sacred volume, and which the hearer found presented in a light in which he never saw them before. Holding all mankind as his brethren, his public ministry and prayers evinced his large-minded sympathy with the whole human race, and his deep interest in the movements among the nations. To him, it was a PRESENT sorrow, if famine stalked through foreign lands,—if pestilence wasted distant cities,—if in any part of earth the sword devoured men for whom Christ died.

There was an unmistakable halo of good to be felt about him, by which even the irreligious were impressed.

His gentle, kindly, and true heart has forever ceased its beating, and it remains for those who mourn his loss to bow in resignation to the will of his rich Rewarder, to rejoice in the perfect joy of his salvation, and, carefully noting his shining footsteps, to follow him as he followed Christ."—Editorial from "Burlington American," 1855.

"I knew Jesus, and he was very precious to my soul; but I found something in me that would not keep sweet and patient and kind. I did what I could to keep it down, but it was there. I besought Jesus to do something for me, and when I gave him my will, He came to my heart, and took out all that would not be sweet, all that would not be kind, all that would not be patient, and then he shut the door."—

FRIENDS' IDEA OF MINISTRY.

THE ministers in the Apostolic Church are generally called "prophets" in the New Testament, and preaching is usually called "prophesying." This word "prophet" does not at all signify a "foreteller," but rather a seer of truth—one who speaks out from his heart what he knows to be true from first hand experience and from clear spiritual insight.

This is precisely the early Quaker idea of ministry—it is seeing and telling. It is a "gift" conferred directly upon a man or a woman by the Head of the Church, and without this gift no true ministry is possible. It is not primarily so much a gift for speaking as it is a gift for SEEING. If the man really sees the truth clearly enough, the speaking will take care of itself; but until the "opening" comes, and the inner eye sees and knows, no amount of easy talking would make the man a genuine minister.

The artist sees the statue in the rough block of marble, the mathematician sees the whole curve in the little arc, the scientist sees the universal law in the single fact of nature, the teacher sees the potential man in his untrained pupil, and the true minister sees in everything that comes from God a meaning and a purpose, which he interprets to men. He is a man through whom God can speak, and when he is at his very best he is a "harp of God"—a person who vibrates in accord with the Divine touch, and gives out the true sound, as an aeolian harp beats in unison with the breath which blows upon it.

This does not by any means imply that a minister is to be inert and empty, or that he has no need to prepare himself. There could be no worse blunder. The great glass in a telescope does not create the light, nor does it make the object of vision; it simply reveals, but it makes all the difference in the world how the glass has been ground and prepared, whether it reveals the object clearly and correctly or not. Any old piece of glass will not do, either for a telescope or a prism.

It is not a whit less true that it takes a peculiarly prepared man or woman to reveal God and His truth to human hearts. Nobody can reveal truth until he both sees it himself and knows how to communicate it to others. Of course, seeing it comes first. The blind person can describe no landscapes, and the deaf child will always be dumb. We must hear and see before we can speak, but it makes a vast difference how we speak, whether we are effective or not.

Now, the kind of preparation needed for the ministry is a most important question. It has often been held that none at all is needed. God gives a gift to whom He will, and nothing more is needed. He who receives this gift speaks as a mere blind and passive instrument. This theory has worked woeful harm. A minister must first of all be a man among men, who meets the struggles of life as other men do, who learns by hard experience, who utilizes all his powers and puts himself at his best, who learns to deaden love of self and who at length gets to see, by the grace of God, what this varied life means, and what the spiritual secret of it is. He does not see it all at once, often he only has a glimpse at first, but he follows the gleam. God prepares him in a thousand experiences, and if he is the right sort of a man, he learns to see truth in every realm of life, and everything that comes to him has its meaning and message. He does not devote himself to preparing sermons—that isn't his business; but he does devote himself to preparing himself to reveal and interpret God and His truth. It is his business to prepare not an object-glass to reveal mountains on the moon's surface, but an instrument through which God may make Himself known, and through which human hearts may learn the Divine nature, the spiritual life, and the Love which redeems. The fuller the life, the richer the experiences, the purer the vision, the larger the sympathies, the wider the horizon, the firmer the grasp on truth, the closer the heart to the Divine Heart, the better minister the man will be.

DIVERSIONS AND RECREATIONS.

WAS there ever a Christian, outside the monastery, who did not have to ask at sometime in his life, "What kind of diversion is consistent with my Christian profession?" Was there ever a Christian parent who did not find it hard to know just where to draw the line of promissions and prohibitions for the unformed boy or girl?

Every growing person, perhaps every person, needs some recreation, some relaxation from the strain of work, some diversion from strenuous life. It is a necessity to good, healthy, genuine living, and without it the sap of life dries up and the man becomes like a machine. Alternation is woven everywhere in the divine plan for the universe. Ebb and flow, day and night, summer and winter, joy and sorrow, toil and refreshment are involved in the structure of things.

Take away the recreation and the periods of unbending and you cut the nerve of genuine effort and shrivel the muscles of toil. But on the other hand almost every form of recreation and diversion is open to abuse, and some forms lead to positive immorality. We must have the world to live in, and we have to use it for our needs; but we find at once that it often soils where we touch it, and that too often, when we go to it for recreation, it takes advantage of us and unmakes rather than recreates us. So that it becomes a difficult problem to find proper diversion without at the same time carrying away upon us the dark touch-spots of the world. Every game can be gambled with, every harmless pastime may be pushed to a dangerous extreme, and joyous play may lead to an unsuspected sin. There is nothing on earth that is not open to excess, and the pleasure-seeker is always walking a path beset with pitfalls and intersected at every point with bye-paths, which lead gradually into real sins.

It may do some good to mark out a few forms of recreation as peculiarly bad and dangerous, and to warn all Christians away from them, and there are certain diversions and amusements which must be prohibited to the young while they are undeveloped and immature. But the only real remedy for this difficulty which we are discussing is the development of a strong spiritual life and a genuine moral character. A person will eventually sag down and drift into a low and harmful form of diversion if he has not cultivated a taste for something higher and purer. You cannot keep people out of sin in this world by preaching sensational sermons against certain forms of evil, and sometimes the very description of the evil kindles a desire to try it. The only way to keep a boy out of the lurking traps of sin is to get him in love with something holy, and get his soul set upon a high aim and a true life. He must be made to feel that there is no pleasure or recreation in anything that makes him less manly, and pure, or that interferes at all in his purpose for life. The best way to steer a young person through the dangers attending recreation is to help him see the positive side of life, and go to work to help him put on the whole armor of God, that he may withstand in the evil day. The formation of spiritual character—putting on Christ literally—is the only sure way to be ready to meet the open doors to forbidden pleasures, and this is the first business of every Christian parent and of every Christian church.

PHILADELPHIA FRIENDS AND PEACE.

It has for some years been the custom to have a public Peace meeting at Twelfth Street Meeting-house during Yearly Meeting week, and not infrequently stirring addresses have been given on these occasions. It is particularly important that a vigorous message should go out this year, and that a large and influential meeting should be held.

The times demand, on the part of the Christian Church, and especially on the part of Friends, something more than a traditional testimony in favor of Peace. We must show not only that we believe in Peace in theory, but we must also devote ourselves to the slow and laborious, and often times discouraging, work of educating and preparing the world practically for an era of Peace. Every Friend ought, too, to know what is being done in our age to forward the cause of Peace and what substitutes are being offered for war.

It is, of course, well to sign Peace memorials, and to pass earnest resolutions, but the great victory cometh not by such easy ways. We must help the warring, loveless world to see that war is an insane method of righting wrongs and that both reason and Christianity condemn the wholesale slaughter of men in order to adjust an international difference. May Friends always have a vital message for the cause of Peace.

ADDITIONS TO THE MISSIONARY FORCE.

OHIO Friends have for some time been needing a man and woman in their Nanking Mission, in China, but they have not been able to assume the added financial burden. It is beautiful to see how Divine Providence opens a way where there seems no way. About a year ago Wilbur A. Estes, then principal of Oak Grove Seminary, in Maine, and his wife, Julia B. Estes, felt called to mission work in China. They applied to the Ohio Board, but were told that there were no funds to make such an addition to the mission force possible. A little later two New England Friends became interested in the matter, and promised to be responsible for the support of these two missionaries. They went to Ohio and were accepted by the Board, and as soon as the money necessary for their outfit and passage is provided, they will sail for their field of labor. It will require from $650 to $700 to put them in the field, and this money must be supplied by gratuitous contributions. We believe that Friends will be ready to respond gladly to such a call. The liberality of the two New England Friends makes it possible to add these two efficient workers to the Nanking force, and the opportunity—or rather the special Providence must be welcomed. Contributions for this purpose may be sent to E. J. C. Lupton, Mount Pleasant, Ohio.

FINDING OUR LIFE'S DUTIES.

BY WAYLAND HOYT.

The other summer, in the Maine woods, a scientific gentleman was collecting specimens of birds. He showed me one day a cross-bill—that bird whose bill, though when hatched straight, arranges itself in such queer, criss-cross fashion, thereby enabling it to pry up the stiff scales on the pine-cone and get its gelatinous tongue at the pine nuts, on which it chiefly feeds. It was not needful for me, in order to know something about the birds called cross-bill, to see every one of all the companies of them flying through the Maine woods; it was enough if I attentively studied that single specimen, for all the other cross-bills were like that one.

I often think of the Bible as a kind of cabinet of specimens. In the Bible, I think, God has collected for us specimens of His plans and ways of working. And, finding such specimens inside the Bible, we may rightfully generalize to cases outside of it, and so may learn, well and wisely, the meaning and the mission of our lives.

The Apostle Paul tells us concerning himself—"But when it was the good pleasure of God, who separated me, even from my mother's womb, and called me through His grace, to reveal His Son in me, that I might preach Him among the Gentiles." And, in the light of this specimen and instance of specific duty for life, and of the finding and the doing of that duty, I think we may get for ourselves real hints about the important matter of discovering our own special duty for our own lives.

The finding and the accepting of one's specific duty is the sure path to a life happy and successful. When in the year 1804 Aaron Burr made a journey from Philadelphia to Pittsburg, it took him nineteen days of steady and laborious riding, but not long since I made the same journey in less than twelve hours. The reason of the difference is, that man has found an instrument—the locomotive—in strength, in accurate adjustment with, and in obedient submission to, the various laws pertaining to it, fitted for swift travel. So, let a man, as does the locomotive to the rails, submit himself to the laws of God—as implanted in his own nature, as suggested by his environment, as revealed in the external world and in the Bible—and the man will have a comparatively frictionless, achieving, triumphant life. That is true, as Goethe sings:

Rest is not quitting
The busy career;
Rest is the fitting the soul
To its sphere.

Fit the soul to its sphere, and you have the delightful play of unimpeded energy. The square pegs forced into the round holes, and the round pegs squeezed into the square holes, make the trouble.

It must be that God has a predetermined and special duty for each soul. This the apostle recognizes and affirms when he says, "But when it was the good pleasure of God who separated me from my mother's womb."

I went, on some special errand, into Baldwin's Locomotive Works, in Philadelphia. To my unaccustomed ear the noise was deafening, and the hurrying of the workmen seemed to me an inextricable confusion. But really there was a supreme orderliness. Every hammer-stroke tended toward a great and harmonizing end, and every pushing workman was at an exactly assigned task. It often looks to us, amid what Whittier calls "the maddening maze of things," as though souls were flung into being without purpose, discrimination, mission. But it is not so. Think of a bird. Our Lord assures us that we are of more value than many sparrows. But there is the embryonic bird walled in by its egg—secure from all relation with the external world. Yet the mysterious, vital processes are going on within that shell; the bioplasts are weaving here wing, there bill, there claw; and when, at last, the bird emerges there is air for wing, and seed for bill, and twig for the claw's clasping. It cannot be less true for souls, that there is, somewhere, precise adjustment for them. "Who separated me from my mother's womb," writes the apostle.

To our specific duty for life God graciously calls, even as the apostle further writes, "and called me, through His grace."

For example, God's character is a gracious call to specific duty. In the old time a young fellow in one of the schools of Philadelphia, plodding and timid, could not shine much, could not really do himself justice in the school examinations. His classmates urged him to use "ponies" and "cribs." "No," he said; "it is a pity if I do not learn quick, but it is worse if I learn to lie." The boy's noble honesty became, in his after life, the reason for the foremost rank he took. That is what I mean—we can never be called of God to the doing of anything which clashes with His character.

For example again, the relations in which God has set one are a gracious call to specific duty. Our interbraiding relations are the mothers of our duties. Think a moment. You are set in the relations of husband, or wife, or father, or mother, or brother, or sister, or friend, or neighbor, or citizen, and so on endlessly. Out of these relations spring at once duties consonant. You are at your special duty for life when you are setting swift and loving hand to the best possible performance of these duties.

For example, again: God's Providence is a gracious call to specific duty. A young man was given a foreign appointment of great trust and large salary; the quiet New England village was agog about it. How could such a thing have happened?

The young man said: "It came to me."

But a puzzled old gentleman made reply, "How? Such things do not fall from the sky. Did you not apply for it, or scheme for it in any way?"

"No; I did nothing but study."

"Had influential friends?"

"No; my friends are simple people."

"Then how did you, of all persons, get the position with such salary and opportunity?"

The young man replied, "An agent of the firm asked the principal of the scientific school where I have been studying to give him the name of the student who he considered had the best preparation for such a place. Then the agent came to me and said, 'You have the preparation for a place I am about to offer you.' I suppose I was given the place because he thought I had the preparation for it. I have been a hard student for years and have tried to prepare myself for useful work."

So, usually, God's Providence waits on preparation. In due time, somehow—often in strange ways—for one doing his best where and as he is, will come a clearly indicating Providence to one's life-work.

SKIATOOK INDIAN WORK.

BY FRED L. RYON.

Not least amongst the religious and social influences of this Indian country is the Friends' Skiatook Mission and School. The location is one of natural beauty, being situated on the side of one of those elevations so common to this region, seemingly halting between two opinions—whether to remain simply hills, or go on and develop into mountains. This assures healthfulness in the home, and gives a commanding view of the rolling prairies, which it overlooks.

The embryo of a village has recently been formed at a convenient distance from the Mission, with a post office, which has been named Hillside (a name suggested by the site), and a daily mail.

A prospective railroad in the near future is a present stimulus to the development of the community, and will undoubtedly prove a valuable aid in extending the circumference of religious and educational influence.

JOHN M. WATSON.

The buildings are comparatively new, and in good repair, also convenient and commodious, with the exception of the school room, which has been outgrown, necessitating the use of a pleasant basement room (intended for a reading apartment) for the primary school. The basement also contains a play room for boys. The first floor contains reception, sitting and dining rooms, office, three sleeping apartments and kitchen. Near the kitchen, in separate building, is the laundry. The second story contains the boys' and girls' halls. The attic is a roomy place, which may prove a convenience in an emergency. At a little distance is the school house, an L-shaped building, with modern improvements, and divided into two apartments, for the intermediate and advanced pupils.

The history of the Mission is interesting and briefly stated as follows: About the year 1884 John F. Mardock met at a meeting of Friends, in Kansas, a converted Cherokee, Dr. Lloyd, who lived at this place. In a conversation which ensued the needs of religious influence and teaching were portrayed, and made a lasting impression upon the mind of Mardock. A year or two later way opened for the accomplishment of such a project, and found the above-named missionary on the ground. Land was secured and a substantial log meeting-house quickly erected. In the fall of 1886 a school was opened in this house, with Cynthia Parrott—an educated Cherokee—as teacher. The term was of three months' duration. In 1887 a six months' term was taught by Lizzie Shields, of Kansas. The success which attended these terms demonstrated the need of larger accommodations, as also the necessity of providing for pupils attending from a distance. Accordingly, in the spring of 1888, the Associated Executive Committee on Indian Affairs decided to appropriate sufficient funds to build a convenient frame school house and a home for the missionary and his family. The present site was chosen, and a permanent location for the Mission, principally from hygienic motives. On relinquishment of former possessions, eighty acres, a goodly portion of which is fertile bottom lands, was donated to Friends, so long as used for school and church purposes. Additions have been made to the original buildings from time to time, until boarding accommodation is now afforded for thirty-five pupils and the employees, and school accommodations for about ninety students.
